VICTIMS OF THE RAILWAY.

Three Men Killed on Tracks at Varying Points.

Toronto, April 2.—The body of a young man, 26 years of age, was found dead on the C. P. R. tracks above the Don station on Saturday night. The head was crushed and the body also was badly bruised and broken. He was Wm. Harding, 213 Oak street, by trade a tanner.

W. J. McCoppen Killed.

Welland, April 2.—Last evening an eastbound M. C. R. freight struck W. J. McCoppen, proprietor of the M. C. R. Hotel here, who was walking on the track about two miles west of here, injuring him so badly that he died shortly after. He leaves a widow, one son and one daughter.

Section Foreman Killed.

Port Union, April 2.—Yesterday morning, Thomas Yates, for more than 20 years foreman of the section gang at this point, lost his life. Yates stepped from one track to another to avoid an eastbound train, which was being assisted up the grade by an auxiliary engine. Yates is thought to have stepped back on the track again, and was struck by the auxiliary engine backing down and his body terribly mangled. He was about 55 years of age and is survived by a wife and a large family of children.

Jap Famine Exaggerated.

Tokio, April 2.—A careful examination of conditions in the famine districts makes it clear that while the distress is severe there has been considerable exaggeration in some of the accounts, but there is no doubt that the death rate would have been higher had it not been for the subscriptions so promptly sent.

Grand Trunk Pacific Finances.

Montreal, April 2.—Charles M. Hays returned yesterday from London and announces that the Grand Trunk Pacific is financed as far west as the Rockies, and that their surveyors are in the passes preliminary to a definite selection and the energetic carrying on of the road to the Pacific.

Charged $2 to Cross.

Fort Frances, April 2.—Americans are enforcing the alien labor law strictly at International Falls power dam here, and Canadian workmen who attempt to cross to assist in the work on the American side, are charged $2 per trip.

Prominent Woman's Suicide.

St. John, N. B., April 2.—Mrs. Michael White, a prominent lady of this city, committed suicide Saturday night by drinking carbolic acid.

A lazy man is as useless as a dead man and takes up more room.—Hubbard.

4,000 Newcomers Saturday.

St. John, N.B., April 2.—Within 24 hours, three ocean liners have arrived at this port, bringing for the Canadian west nearly 4,000 immigrants.

A Morocco Agreement.

France and Germany Satisfied With Accord Registered.

France Will Police Four Ports, Spain Two, and France and Spain Two—Germany Carries Point of Integrity of the State—British Opinion Holds It to Be Victory For France But Impermanent.

Algeciras, April 2.—After a plenary session lasting until 6 o'clock Saturday evening, the conference on Morrocan reforms registered a complete accord and appointed a committee to embody this accord in formal protocol. The consummation of the work of the conference was announced in the following official communication:

Accord Established.

"The conference has terminated its labor, and accord is established upon all points. It has adopted a definitive text for the remaining articles concerning the state bank and customs. The final article, regulating the distribution of police at ports, was adopted from the Russian draft. By it France will police four ports, Mogador, Saffi, Magazan and Rabat, and Spain two, Tetaun and Larache, and France and Spain will together police Tangier and Casa Blanca, subject to an inspector of police. The Dutch delegate announced that his Government declined to appoint an officer.

"The conference has appointed a special committee to revise the texts of the agreement. This committee meets Monday to consider the final formalities of the protocol."

Satisfactory.

Mr. White, the American delegate, is of the opinion that the result is a satisfactory one, not only because the immediate future of Morocco is secured, but because, the manner of the settlement is satisfactory both to France and Germany, and removes the causes for friction, and restores international relations to normal. The principles for which Germany insisted, the integrity of Morocco and equal commercial and economic rights there, Mr. White thought were recognized, while the special position claimed by France also was acknowledged.

Others of the leading delegates confirm Mr. White's opinion, and emphasize the good effect the result should have on the European situation.

Depends on Sultan.

With reference to the effect of the concurrence on Morocco, the delegates were reserved in their opinion. They admit, however, that the operation of real reforms will be impossible without the good will and sanction of the Sultan and his advisers, and, for that reason, the last act of the conference will be to authorize that the reform program, as adopted, should be submitted to the Sultan by Chevalier Malmusi, the Italian Minister to Morocco, who is dean of the diplomatic corps at Tangier, with the intimation that it is the unanimous wish of the powers that it be put into operation immediately.

Victory For France.

London, April 2.—Although anticipated for a fortnight, the successful outcome of the Algeciras conference on Moroccan reforms brought great relief to England, as, during the past year, the Moroccan question was the only one causing serious misgivings for the peace of Europe.

The agreement is considered to be a victory for France, which retains the preponderance of influence in the financial affairs of the empire, and loses little of what she demanded with respect to the policing of the country, for, with a majority of the powers supporting her policy, the diplomats at Tangier are not likely to interfere much with the Franco-Spanish officers. While Great Britain opposed the conference until France had agreed to it, it is now realized that the meeting of the delegates served useful objects in cementing the Anglo-French entente, and dissipating the belief, held in many continental capitals, that Great Britain would only support her friend when it was to her own interest.

On the other hand, it assures Great Britain that she is not involved with a dangerous aggressive power. As for the future, the Foreign Office is not so optimistic, the officials looking upon the agreement as merely a temporary relief. It stops aggressive action, but does not prevent interested nations continuing to strengthen their positions until either feels strong enough to take without parley what it failed to secure through diplomacy. It is not believed that Germany will give up her effort to obtain a footing in the Mediterranean.

Headache Powder Kills.

Cobourg, April 2.—The jury empanelled to inquire into the death of J. D. Roddick, who died suddenly on March 7th, after hearing the evidence of Provincial Analyst Dr Ellis brought in the following verdict: "That J. D. Roddick came to an accidental death through taking an overdose of acetanilide in the form of a headache wafer and antikamnia tablets to relieve a headache."

A Costly German War.

Berlin, April 2.—A despatch from Southwest Africa states that Chief Morengo's men attacked a German military transport train and killed the whole escort of an officer and fourteen men. Thus far the war in Southwest Africa has cost the German nation $150,000,000 and over 2,000 lives.

Section Foreman Killed.

Port Union, April 2.—Thomas Yates of this place, for many years section foreman for the G. T. R., was struck by an eastbound light engine and instantly killed about 200 yards east of Highland Creek bridge at 7.45 yesterday morning.

Britain's Revenue.

London, April 2.—The revenue of the United Kingdom for the fiscal year ending Saturday shows $769,394,920, an increase of $3,481,010.

Fire At Fort William.

Fort William, April 2.—Fire destroyed the steamer Kaministikwit yesterday morning at a loss of $8,000

Unrequited Affection; Ends Life.

Owen Sound, April 2.—Miss Kate Boyd, a daughter of J. L. Boyd, ex-councillor of Sydenham, committed suicide Friday night by taking poison. She left a note reading, "Not to blame anyone." The cause of the rash act is said to have been unrequited affections.

Mrs. Sclater Not Guilty.

Three Rivers, April 2.—The jury Saturday night brought in a verdict of "not guilty" in favor of Mrs. Sclater on trial for being an accomplice with McGraw in the murder of her husband, Percy Howard Sclater.

Damage of $15,000 At Fearman's

Hamilton, April 2.—Fire did damage to the extent of $15,000 or $20,000 to the F. W. Fearman Co.'s pork packing establishment on Rebecca street Saturday afternoon.

Was it a B ckward Step?

The London Free Press thinks that the Ontario Alliance has in all likelihood overreached its object and put a spoke in the wheel of the movement it is seeking to advance by the resolution passed at last Wednesday's convention. Our contemporary goes on to say that the three-fifths majority clause in the new license Act would meet with hostility from the Alliance was to be expected, as the prohibition party demands that local option shall go into operation where a clear majority is in favor of it. But that party cuts itself out of a very liberal popular support when it demands that not only shall ales, wines and liquors not be sold by retail under the local option law, but that no one "shall be allowed to sell for delivery, to take orders for, or deliver liquor in any municipality where local option is in force or where no license is issued."

Local option has gained in strength that party ought know, by the votes of men who are indifferent toward "the saloon," and would not object to see it abolished, but who rely that so far as they, as private citizens are concerned, their rights as moderate users of the banned beverages, would not be interfered with.

As they go to the polls this class of persons are apt to reason the subject thus: "I have no use for the bar. I have very little use for the drink that is sold in the bar, or elsewhere. What I take I can easily order by wholesale for myself, despite any probibitory law which only refers to licensing. Therefore I can record a vote against the bar without any personal inconvenience or deprivation."

There is very little doubt that where the vote is nearly even, or non-license is carried by a small majority, the Alliance party is indebted very largely to the people who reason the matter as above, and think it is only the other fellow who is to be put under the ban. The danger to the cause the Alliance has at heart is that this whole class of voters will be alienated from them by the spirit of intolerance shown in the resolution passed by them on Wednesday. They will no longer find the indifferent voter weighing the matter with himself as if it did not concern him.

If this resolution were to be tacked on to the new license law, the alliance would find arrayed against it a large class inflamed to resentment, who hitherto have jollied along more or less happily in their company.

We observe that the Alliance party has taken courage from the attitude of an express company in the lower provinces, which refuses to carry parcels of liquor to individuals in local option communities. This action may seem to favor the movement for total extinction of the traffic "all along the line." In reality it will but "rile up" the moderate thinker and drinker to a pitch of disgust with the whole intolerant business, and make the Act more and more difficult to carry in other parts of the country. The Alliance may discover that there is a limit to the forbearance of the large intermediate class who would go far with them so long as they march at a moderate gait, but will drop them and their doctrines on finding that they want to go on the run oppressively.

Itching Piles

If you are acquainted with anyone who is troubled with this distressing ailment, you can do him no greater favor than to tell him to try Chamberlain's Salve. It gives instant relief. This salve also cures sore nipples, tetter and salt rheum. Price 25 cents. To be had at R. Templeton's drug store.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

The rooms of the Y.M.C.A. were crowded with men and boys yesterday afternoon, the occasion being Mr. R. B. Chadwick's farewell Sunday afternoon meeting. Prof. Hunt was at the piano, and an orchestra, led by Mr. Erwin Gordon, consisting of members of Holloway St., the Tabernacle and Emmanuel Church orchestras were present and accompanied the hymns, which were sung in an inspiring way. Mr. Dan A. Cameron sang a solo, and the Boys' choir of Bridge St. Church gave a number. Mr. H. O. Hunt was chairman. The feature of the meeting was Mr. Cradwick's farewell address to the boys, in which he bade them good-by and gave them much good advice. The occasion was a most enjoyable one, and will not be soon forgotten by those who were present.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Good by, March Glad we'll see no more of you for nearly a year.

* * *

The man on the next block played a great April fool joke on his wife yesterday. He got up in the morning and went to church.

* * *

The civic salary question may be definitely settled to-night. Most people think that, when it is settled, the wages of the humbler class of employees should be boosted a bit.

* * *

The question, "Where did the money go to?" is now quite applicable to York Loan affairs. It looks as though someone may change his address to Kingston before the investigation is ended.

* * *

The Peterboro Review prints the following slander on this city:

"It is a toss-up which is the more attractive place to live in—Port Hope with its highway robberies, or Belleville with its uxoricides and almost daily assaults upon women."

Everyone knows, who has read about the cases at the assizes here, that none of the serious crimes are charged against residents of this city. The Review's insinuation is as mean as it is uncalled-for.

* * *

At the annual meeting in Ottawa of the Canadian Association for the prevention of consumption, Judge Barron, of Stratford, formerly of Lindsay, expressed the belief that it should be obligatory on all municipalities in Canada to pass anti-spitting by-laws. This matter was mooted in Belleville years ago, but came, apparently, to nothing. No one, who passed down Front street yesterday afternoon, and saw young men with "sissy" hair fouling the sidewalks directly in front of ladies, could help but wish that someone in authority in Belleville had time, in the interests of health, cleanliness and decency, to see that an anti-spitting by-law was introduced and enforced here. Present conditions are vile.

* * *

It appers, says the Peterboro Review, that the city doctors are talking of forming a "blacklist" and refusing to attend those persons, who, though abundantly able to pay, yet persistently refuse to settle for a physician's services. This all looks beautiful, but do you suppose you could get the average medical practitioner, to lay aside his jealousy of the other fellow long enough to enter into any hard and fast agreement like that; and once drawn up and signed, how long would the average son of Aesculapius live up to it. Doctors do a great deal of work gratuitously, but the fact that so much more is done than need be is largely their own fault.

* * *

Bobcaygeon Indepenent; Sir Mackenzie Bowell has definitely decided to withdraw from the leadership of the Conservative party in the Senate. Sir Mackenzie is the only one of the old Conservative brigade whom the country could honestly respect. He has seen the scabby lot with whom he was surrounded when he was Premier, wiped out politically, and forgotten, and he will always stand in the history of Canada as a staunch and faithful guardian of what he believed to be the public good, one who while subject to boundless temptations, remained true to himself and the people, enriching himself only in the esteem and respect of the best of his countrymen.

* * *

Here is a story which is vouched for by reliable authority: A young man who had "been out late" the other night, having, as he thought, "the time of his life," had occasion to go into his barn before retiring. In the barn was a lone hen which commenced to cluck when it was disturbed. The owner went up to it, grasped it by the throat exclaiming "Hic! Say Corby, confound you. Hic, Say Corby!"

* * *

Attention is directed to the fact that free samples of patent medicines are distributed promiscuously around the streets of this city. Such cases call for action on the part of the authorities. It is dangerous to have medicine thrown round within reach of children.

* * *

Already several members of the clergy have expressed approval from their pulpits of the new license law for Ontario. It is a good sign, says the Brockville Times, when the clergy takes this broad and generous view of an honest attempt to regulate the liquor traffic in the best interests of the Province. Reforms come slowly, and one step at a time is very good progress. To attempt extreme and radical reforms all at once is the action of over-zealous enthusiasts and is sure to result in failure and trouble.

* * *

The coal strike is on. It looks as though many of the miners may have plenty of time for fishing this coming summer.

* * *

Mr. Joseph Phillips has been definitely refused bail, which will prevent a whole lot of York Loan sufferers from taking the first train for Toronto to go on his bonds—we don't think.

* * *

That Morocco agreement is not, in British opinion, a very gilt-edged affair. It may soon require rebinding.

MUST NOT MARRY BROTHER'S WIDOW

IT IS SAID THAT SEVERAL SUCH MARRIAGES HAVE LATELY TAKEN PLACE IN ONTARIO.

Toronto, April 2. — The Provincial Secretary's Department has recently received several letters from issuers of marriage licenses, who ask whether licenses should be issued for a man to marry his "brother's wife," for so the statute defining marriages which are prohibited on the grounds of consanguinity reads. The department's answer in every case is the same, and it is to the effect that under the statutes of Ontario a man cannot lawfully marry his brother's widow or his brother's divorced wife. Most of the enquiries ask the question apparently in behalf of parties who want to marry brothers' widows. It is said that several such marriages have lately taken place in the Province.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

BASKET BALL.

Albert College Defeated in Peterboro.

Review; At the Y. M. C. A. last night before a large crowd of enthusiastic spectators the Peterboro Arrows defeated the Albert College five from Belleville by a score of 39 points to 21. The locals led at half time by 19 to 15. The game was the fastest seen here this year, but the Arrows had the collegians beat at all stages of the contest, which was never in doubt. The struggle was a little strenuous at times. Arnold, one of the Belleville players, had an inclination for roughing it.

For the locals Cressman and Richardson were the stars, the former netting nine baskets, and the latter six. Hodgson and Dobson got one each, while for the visitors Wheeler was probably their best man, with Dyer a close second. For Belleville Wheeler got six baskets, DeMill two and Dyer one.

Mr. Jack Laing made a most satisfactory referee.

The teams lined up as follows—

	Arrows.	Albert College.
Forwards	Cressman	DeMill
	Richardson	Wheeler
Centre	Hodgson	Dyer
Guards	Dobson	Arnold
	Greene	Wilson

SPORTING NOTES.

Lovers of sport in this city are anxious to know if there is any truth in the rumor that Belleville is to be represented by good lacrosse and aseball teams this coming summer. In regard to the lacrosse proposition, it is said that there are at present many fine players in the city, who would welcome the opportunity to handle the gutted stick in good company once more. Talk it up gentlemen. Lacrosse boomed in Belleville years ago. There is no reason why it should not again.

In regard to baseball, it is a fact that the Midland Baseball League is waiting with open arms to welcome Belleville into its fold. Why not get into the game and furnish people with a little clean sport this summer. The material is here, all right enough, and good crowds have always patronized the game in this city. Push the thing alone, somebody.

TELLS BY THEIR SLEEP

"I can tell by my little ones' sleep when a cold is coming on" said a mother when speaking of the advance symptoms of colds in children. "They toss about, are restless, their breathing is heavy and there are symptoms of night sweats. The next morning I start with Scott's Emulsion. The chances are that in a day or two they are all over it. Their rest is again peaceful and the breathing normal."

Here's a suggestion for all mothers. Scott's Emulsion always has been almost magical in its action when used as the ounce of prevention. Nothing seems to overcome child weakness quite so effectively and quickly as Scott's Emulsion.

WINSTON GETS A PUBLIC SNUB.

CANCELLATION OF MESSAGE TO NATAL MAY BE A SET-BACK FOR HIM.

London, March 31. — The storm aroused by the Natal affair has in no way subsided. The newspapers this morning are full of despatches from the colonies, protesting against the action of Lord Elgin, and sympathizing with the Natal Government, and the prominent men connected with the colonies who have been interviewed; all deprecate what they term the Government's hasty and ill-advised action. Even the Government's supporters appear to find themselves hard pressed to justify Lord Elgin's action.

Winston Churchill, the Under-Secretary for the Colonies, was the man who sent the message to Natal, suspending the execution of some rebellious natives, which action led the Natal Ministry to resign on Thursday.

Yesterday, Lord Elgin informed the House of Lords that Natal had now been given liberty of action. The question arises whether Winston Churchill's action was authorized, or taken on his own responsibility, and whether he is being snubbed for his presumption. His speech on South African affairs three weeks ago caused much irritation in the African colonies, and he seems to be a thorn in the side of the colonies, generally. In this connection a letter written by Mr. J. Ramsay Macdonald, M.P., the Secretary of the Labor Representation Committee, is interesting. He says:

"I do not think I am an over-cautious man, or that my sympathies with the oppressed black and yellow men in South Africa are niggardly, but I am bound to say that unless the Cabinet muzzle Mr. Winston Churchill they will bring themselves into a disastrous conflict with the colonies. Mr. Churchill speaks like an irresponsible person, and the pride he seems to take in reminding the Transvaal people that he suspects them, and that he is to veto certain Acts they may pass, is very blundering statesmanship. These are matters for private dispatches, not for public speeches. Mr. Churchill has got into office far too soon."

Four Simple Rules

FOLLOW THEM AND HEALTH, HAPPINESS AND PROSPERITY WILL BE YOURS.

If one would be healthy, happy and prosperous, follow these four simple rules (1) Keep the bowels open every day. (2) Chew your food slowly and thoroughly. (3) Avoid indigestible foods. (4) If there are any symptoms of stomach troubles, take Mi-o-na before each meal until cured.

No matter how many years you may have suffered with stomach troubles or how worried by sleeplessness, nervousness, loss of appetite, furred tongue, specks before the eyes, headaches, indigestion or other ills that are caused by a weak stomach, you can be cured by the faithful use of Mi-o-na.

Mi-o-na is not a fanciful experiment, it is not a patent medicine, it is not a cure all. It is a scientific remedy recommended but for one trouble,—weakness of the digestive organs.

When Mi-o-na has been used for a few days, the digestive system will be so greatly improved that all the food eaten is converted into nutrition, so that nourishment and health are given to the whole system and there is a rapid increase in weight, strength and spirits.

If you cannot obtain Mi-o-na of your druggist, it will be sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of price. Write us for advice on your case from a leading stomach specialist which will be sent free. The R. T. Booth Company, Ithaca, N. Y.

Spare the Trees.

The following letter, by "The Khan," Canada's rural poet, will be appreciated by all those who love trees and who are saddened by the too frequent destruction of them by unthinking persons;

Editor Galt Reporter,—I write to ask for the sympathy and help of your subscribers in Beverly to assist the protest against a piece of vandalism which threatens my native township.

The Bunch of Early Prolifics known as the Township Council, have decreed that all the shade trees on the township road allowances must be destroyed. Since the dawn of history there was always an ass in the township council; but I never expected to live long enough to see the whole outfit that way.

The trees are a blessing. It takes God Almighty two hundred years to build a good one, but it takes a five-year-old township councillor only two minutes to destroy it.

They are badgering the Hendersons on the 5th line as a starter. They will be after you next. Don't let them cut down the shade trees in front of your property. The trees belong to you and the travelling public have a vested right in them.

Woodman, spare the tree!
Touch not a single bough!
In youth it sheltered me,
And I'll protect it now.

CURIOSITY

Leads to Investigation and Truth.

What shall we do to be saved? was the title of one of Robt. Ingersoll's lectures. People of faith and people of no faith flocked to hear it. Thousands are asking, "What shall I do to get rid of dandruff?" The answer is, "Kill the germ that causes dandruff, falling hair and finally baldness, and the only thing that will do it is Newbro's Herpicide. That is the very latest discovery of the laboratory, and it is the only preparation that claims to, or that will, kill the pestiferous dandruff germ. It also is a delightful hair-dressing, free from oil or grease or stick substances. Try it, and be convinced of its actual merit. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Literary Notes.

The place of honor in The Methodist Magazine and Review for April is given to Mr. J. W. L. Forster's illuminative article on the late Mons. Bouguereau, the famous French artist, in whose atelier Mr. Forster studied, with nine very handsome reproductions of his chefs-d'oeuvre. Quite an Easter flavor is given to this number. "The Skipper Parson" is a well illustrated account of mission work on the bays and barrens of Newfoundland, a record of fascinating interest. Mr. W. T. Stead's sketch of "The Real Czar," "Hymnology, a Path to Christian Unity," by Dr. Davidson, the "White Plague," history in cartoon, and other articles, with the conclusion of the serial story, "Summerwild," and an interesting short story of western life, make a very readable number. Toronto, William Briggs; Montreal, C. W. Coates; Halifax, S. H. Huestis. $2.00 a year; $1.00 for six months.

Modes of Divination.

If a Scottish maiden desired to summon the image of her future husband, she read the third verse, seventeenth chapter, of the book of Job after supper, washed the supper dishes and retired to bed without uttering a single word, placing underneath her pillow the Bible, with a pin thrust through the verse she had read. On Allhallow eve various modes of divination were in vogue. Pennant says that the young women determined the figure and size of their husbands by drawing cabbages blindfold, a custom which lingers still in some parts of Scotland. They also threw nuts into the fire, a practice prevailing also in England, as Gay has described:

Two hazelnuts I threw into the flame.
And to each nut I gave a sweetheart's name.
This with the loudest bounce me sore amazed
That in a flame of brightest color blazed.
As blazed the nut, so may thy passion grow.

Or they took a candle and went alone to a looking glass, eating an apple and combing their hair before it, whereupon the face of the future spouse would be seen in the glass peeping over the foolish girl's shoulder.

Language of Lawrence Jail.

Lieutenant John P. Bradstreet of the Fiftieth Massachusetts was for many years a deputy sheriff and turnkey under High Sheriff Herrick at the Lawrence house of correction. All the newcomers were by him assigned to their proper quarters.

One day upon the arrival of a new squad of inmates there was one who seemed somewhat more "tony" than the rest, and, calling the lieutenant aside, he claimed a little more consideration than the others owing to his previous standing in society.

"I never was in such a situation before," said he, "and I trust you will give me a little different quarters from those other fellows. I am highly educated and can speak seven different languages."

"Seven?" remarked the lieutenant. "That's altogether too many. We don't have but one language here and mighty little o' that."

The Ottoman Turks.

The Ottoman Turks lived originally in central Asia, where they were members of a race related to the Mongols, a branch of the Ural-Altai family. Under their first sultan, Othman, who ruled from 1288 to 1326, they founded a realm in Asia Minor, but soon extended it into Europe, entering Armenia. With the capture of Constantinople in 1453 they succeeded to the Byzantine empire, and their rule at its zenith during the sixteenth century extended over the greater part of southeastern Europe and much of western Asia and northern Africa, but they lost Hungary, Roumania, Servia, Greece and practically Bulgaria and Egypt, etc. The Ottoman Turks are Sunnite Mohammedans and regard the sultan, who is the supreme head of the church and recognized as such by all Mohammedans, as representative of former caliphs.

Entertaining Lions.

Concerning lions, we all like to entertain them. Most of them like to be entertained. Birds of a feather may flock together, but lions rarely enjoy the company of their kind (two of a kind never can agree). The solitary thrush sings alone. A lion is like that sort of bird. I have seen more than one dinner party spoiled by the multiplicity of lions at the table. The lion likes to have the floor to himself. He is always in better humor when there is no other to dispute it with him. When you have the luck to snare a lion remember that he is a kingly creature and select your guests with a view to his comfort and pleasure. It is better to invite lambs to meet a lion than to ask another lion. Every circle has its lambs.

CINDERELLA.

Her Story Is Very Ancient and Is in Sacred Hindoo Books.

The story of Cinderella is substantially the same as that told of Rhodopis and Psammitichus by Elian, who lived in Rome in the third century of the Christian era. The story as told by Elian is that while Rhodopis was bathing an eagle carried away one of her sandals and dropped it near the feet of Psammitichus, King of Egypt, who, like Cinderella's prince, was struck by its diminutive size, caused the maiden to be sought for and married her when found. Make the sandal a glass slipper and add the ugly sisters for the sake of contrast, and the stories are much the same. The glass slipper, by the way, is an acknowledged fiction, being in reality a mistranslation of "pantoufle en vair" (a fur slipper), and not "en verre."

This at all events is what is claimed by Perrault in his "Contes de Fees." Both these stories have doubtless a common origin, but it is necessary to go farther back in the history of literature to find it—to a people who lived in a period compared with which that of even Elian is quite modern. It is in the Vedas, the four sacred books of the Hindoos, that the origin is to be found.

After what has already been said it will not be surprising to learn that Cinderella is a dawn maiden, her sisters being the powers of darkness, who compel her to wait upon them, keeping her hidden from sight. The dawn maiden breaks from her bonds and captivates the sun, remaining with him for a time. But she cannot linger with him in the heavens. She can remain only until a certain hour. Once she lingers too long and, hurrying back, leaves on the path she has taken a token of her visit in the form of a fleecy cloud, which had borne her aloft when she left the regions of darkness. The sun, determined to find her, sends out his emissaries (the rays of light), but does not find her until she appears before him as the evening twilight. In the Vedas the prince is called Mitra, which is one of the names given to the sun.—London Globe.

A Yankee Stretcher.

The late General Wilman W. Blackmar once told how he had overheard an English corporal drilling his squad in this fashion, according to the Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Now, then, No. 7," the corporal said, "we'll make another start—that is, if you've quite finished feelin' if your back hair happens to be on straight this mornin'. It's you I'm talkin' to—third man from the left on front rank. I haven't the pleasure of knowin' your name, but I expect to be writin' it down for an hour's extra work pretty soon. Now, then, look out to your front. Squad, 'tchun! Left dress! Turn your eyes to the left— without squintin' like Chinese rummies, if you can. Stand up in the ranks, too, like soldiers, not like a measly row of lopsided, spindle shanked, cockney shop boys! Stick your chests out and put your stummicks somewhere out of sight altogether. There's 'arf of you with figers like bags of potatoes. Strike me crimson if I ever saw such a mob! Hi, you in the centre—the ginger headed man. I mean—don't grin like that. This ain't no perishin' beauty competition, not by no manner of means."

Badly Mixed.

The following extracts from speeches made by vestrymen are given in a local English paper:

Mr. H. D.—If I paid a man to do a job and he did not do it, I would not pay him.

Mr. O'C.—Is Mr. St. C. in order in introducing fresh matter that has already been decided?

Mr. D.—I move that we have a survey on this day (Thursday) fortnight, on a Saturday.

Mr. P.—I am proud of my ancestors, and I hope to be proud of my posterity.

Mr. B.—If this proposal is carried the parish will stink in the eyes of the ratepayers.

The Lake Dried Up.

Lake Chrissie is a small body of water in the eastern Transvaal, in connection with which there is an interesting legend. The Boers held the belief that not until the lake in question became dry would they lose their independence. For the first time within human memory the lake, one of the very few fresh water lakes in South Africa, was perfectly dry during the latter stages of the war. After the declaration of peace the lake resumed its normal appearance, though the water was shallower than before. Twice since then—in 1904 and 1905—the bed of the lake has been quite dry.

His Noble Title.

Lord Leighton when asked by what title he would be called to the upper House at once replied, "I am a workingman and cannot afford to change my name, which is my trade-mark." There result many minor social confusions when the alteration in status is accompanied by an alteration of the patronymic. When, for instance, Sir James McGarel-Hogg, raised to the peerage under the title of Lord Magheramorne, first dined out with his new dignity the footman, unable to master the sound, but refusing to be beaten, announced, "The late Sir James McGarel-Hogg."

A Real One.

Redd—I hear she is going to marry a bookmaker at the track.

Greene—Well, she always did love outdoor sports.

AS GUESTS AND HOSTS.

Comparison of English and French in Many Recent Events—King Edward's Popularity.

King Edward's recent appearance in Paris was the occasion of a remarkable outburst of enthusiasm. His successful efforts to draw more closely together the people of Britain and France, and his personal popularity, won many years ago as Prince of Wales, were both acclaimed by the cheers of the Parisians. Moreover, his visit seemed a contradiction of the persistent rumors of ill-health, and was another reason for a warm welcome. For the entente cordiale His Majesty may claim greater credit than any other individual; but if he showed the way toward a valuable international friendship, his subjects have displayed commensurate tact and heartiness in following where he led.

Of the visit of the French naval officers and men to England we have heard much, but of the even more important exchange of courtesies by the London and Paris councilmen not a great deal has been said. When the London County Council asked the eighty members of the Paris Municipal Council to come and be entertained in London, it was the first invitation of the kind since the gorgeous guilds of the middle ages paid ceremonious visits to each other. How lavish, even princely, was the hospitality of the London aldermen the French visitors in their own papers have told us, some of them with charming humor. The London councillors might fairly be called merchant princes or captains of industry. Nearly every one of them is a citizen "of substance and renown," living in a great town mansion, possessing also a country residence, with all the luxury and paraphernalia of great wealth. Their private homes were thrown open to the Paris councillors, who had modestly expected to be entertained at some respectable hotel. Thinking of Englishmen as cold, proud, exclusive people, one can imagine the delight and astonishment of the Frenchmen at being thus suddenly welcomed into the very family circle of their hosts. It is on this compliment that the French councilmen chiefly dilate.

Then came the return visit, which has just been carried through so successfully. But before the English councilmen arrived there were many anxious hours for their hosts. The Paris councilmen are not merchant princes. Among eighty are only two who live on the interest of their money. Many of the others are well-to-do, but none of them is a nabob. Most of them live in flats. They early decided that it would be impossible to entertain the Englishmen in their own homes. But if they had to lodge their guests at hotels, they were resolved that the occasion should nevertheless be a memorable one, even for the luxurious Londoners. So they chartered all that was best in the best hotel in Paris.

Two details of one of the banquets are worth giving. It was the great banquet of 500 covers, in which some 200 foremost Parisians of every rank of life were asked to meet the 137 men from London. Usually these giant banquets are jobbed out to banquet caterers. In the present case each dish served to each guest was worthy, by its minute preparation, to have come from one of ten of the most fashionable Paris restaurants. And for good reason. No great banquet of the world certainly had ever so many famous chefs presiding over its preparation. These municipal councillors had but to say the word to mobilize them and have their enthusiastic combination in the common cause of the credit of Paris!

Furthermore, the banquet was served in the famous Hall of Fetes, magnificent in architecture, sculpture, fresco painting, carpets and wall hangings. Ten minutes after the banquet was terminated a promenade concert was in full blast in that self-same Hall of Fetes. The county councillors were almost frightened—until admiration conquered the less worthy emotion. It was like a transformation scene in a fairy pantomine. Presto! Countless lackeys, silent, deft and rapid, appeared from nowhere and vanished into thin air again; and when they had disappeared the banquet table, with its massive services and decorations, had disappeared also! The whole transformation took six minutes, but the trick had been rehearsed some twenty times to get it perfect.

But, after all, it was not banqueting, but business, that drew the London aldermen to Paris, and many were the novel municipal sights they saw and studied. One of them—free breakfasts for school children in the primary classes—has since then been transplanted to England; but among the others which remain essentially Parisian are the Gobelin tapestry works, the municipal wood pavement factory, the Government Sevres porcelain factory, the municipal flower gardens, "the sewers that have railway trains and canal-boats running in them," the municipal slaughter-houses, and the "home assistance" of the poor, a half-way measure between almshouse charity and old-age pensions. The Parisians have not municipal gas yet, but they are likely to make the experiment in the near future. On this point the Londoners could give them advice, and on the regulation of traffic in the streets, which is a science imperfectly known outside of London.

The value of the exchange of visits so far as better municipal government is concerned can be readily understood. This is immediate and practical; but even more important and on a grander scale is the growing idea of social and intellectual, if not commercial, reciprocity between the two peoples. It is understood that these visits are to become the rule rather than the exception in time to come. If London and Paris are not ashamed to learn of each other, it may be that Toronto could be improved by the adoption of the same principle.

An Unfortunate Inspiration.

A church at Yeovil, Somerset, England, was suddenly filled in the midst of a sermon with a hideous discord from the organ. The preacher improved the opportunity for an energetic attack upon the character of Satan, who had come to distract their attention. The door of the organ chamber then opened and disclosed—the vicar, who had entered to cut off the water pressure and touched the wrong valve.

The People of Great Britain.

Ethnologically Great Britain is a mixture of many races, resulting from a succession of invasions. When the Romans invaded Britain the inhabitants were Celtic, mixed with an earlier Euskarian non-Aryan element. They continued to be mainly so until the fifth and sixth centuries, when the level parts of the country were overrun by German tribes. Then followed invasions by the Danes and other Scandinavian tribes and lastly the Norman conquest. The inhabitants of England and the lowlands of Scotland, therefore, sprang from an amalgamation of the original Celtic with German and Scandinavian blood. Wales and the highlands of Scotland are still inhabited by descendants of the ancient Celtic tribes. The people of Ireland also are of Celtic origin, although there is an admixture of many other races.

It is claimed the carrot forms blood and beautifies the skin.

OPPORTUNITY.

(Walter Malone.)

They do me wrong who say I come no more
When once I knock and fail to find you in,
For every day I stand outside the door
And bid you wake and rise to fight and win.

Wait not for precious chances passed away,
Weep not for golden ages on the wane!
Each night I burn the records of the day;
At sunrise every soul is born again.

Laugh like a boy at splendors that have sped,
To vanished joys be blind and deaf and dumb;
My judgments seal the dead past with its dead,
But never bind a moment yet to come.

Though deep in mire, wring not your hands and weep;
I lend my arm to all who say "I can!"
No shameless outcast ever sank so deep
But yet might rise and be again a man!

Dost thou behold thy lost youth all aghast?
Dost thou reel from righteous retribution's blow?
Then turn from blotted archives of the past
And find the future's pages white as snow.

A Brooklyn man pummeled another man who had walked out with the first man's girl. The girl had the two of them taken to court. The Judge heard the case and asked her which man she would choose. She chose the one who had been pummeled. Some fellows have more than their share of bad luck.

While playing in the grounds of a Dutch Church at Kroonstad, South Africa, two Boer children made an interesting discovery. With small spades they were digging a hole, and just below the surface several gold coins were unearthed. They continued to dig gradually adding to their precious store. The youngsters soon had a pile of English gold sovereigns. The sexton then joined the search, and it was not long before treasure to the value of nearly $5,000 in gold and silver coins was brought to light. During the war the church was used as a hospital and for housing refugees, and it is surmised that the treasure must have been buried by some one who is now dead.

Willis L. Moore, chief of the United States Weather Bureau at Washington, announces that in a short time the bureau will be in a position to forecast the weather for a month ahead. People frequently cast reflections upon the reliability of "Old Probs," but if they were to keep track of the forecasts they would find an astonishingly large number of them absolutely correct, and all of them partially correct. If the same efficiency can be shown in monthly forecasts the information so supplied will be of immense value in a great many ways. And if the men who figure out what the weather is to be like, can determine it exactly a month ahead, why should there not come a time when farmers will be advised as to what to grow in particular districts, according to the amount of rainfall to be expected. Then, if nature has a big drought arranged, we would be forewarned and, consequently, forearmed. The idea may appear preposterous, but a lot of things which we accept as a matter of course would fifty years ago or even less, have been scouted as beyond belief.

LADY WILSON'S CASE.

Serious Charges Made Against Trust Corporation Are Denied.

Toronto, April 2.—The proceedings in which Lady Wilson, widow of the late Sir Adam Wilson, is taking action against the Toronto General Corporation for alleged fraud, mismanagement, etc., were resumed Saturday morning before Judge Winchester. Walter Barwick, K.C., appeared for the company and Mr. Hodgins, K.C., for Lady Wilson.

Dr. Hoskin, J. W. Langmuir and Secretary Reid made statements to the judge denying the allegations.

Amongst other allegations is that the trustees had used the moneys of the estate and loaned them and had received interest to a much larger amount than they had credited the estate. Lady Wilson asks that the order of the Surrogate Court of Jan. 5, 1905, be set aside and the accounts of the estate may be reopened, and that the accounts on the file of this court may be further investigated.

The Prince at Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C., April 2.—H. R. H. Prince Arthur of Connaught was greeted at Vancouver with loyal acclaims and King's weather. The ceremonies were more or less informal, though a civic address was presented and the "Duke of Connaught's Own" was inspected at the drill hall on Saturday. The party left on their private train early Sunday morning for the east.

Shoots Himself.

North Bay, April 2.—Lord Trevillian, formerly locomotive engineer on the G. T. R., running out of Allandale, who was discharged from the road a short while ago for some offence, shot himself in his room at Donovan's boarding house here Saturday afternoon.

A LONE WOMAN VOTED.

And Tells Her Experience In An English Election.

Woman suffrage has not arrived yet in England. But the woman voter has.

Her name is Miss Alwyn Bussey, and she is of German descent, her father being a naturalized Englishman. She is a teacher of singing, and she voted at the polls at East Marylebone. Her experiences are related in lively terms in The London Evening News as follows:

"How did it happen. It is har say. For eight years I have live to in my house (The Studio, here House, 66 Wells street), a Walbeck a man came to me and s one day a vote.' My name was "You have Was it for me to q on the register. thorities? But th arrel with the aumentary electio is the first Parlia-

"The other I have voted in. sent a ca day Lord Robert Cecil and he vasser. I opened the door, Buss said in a loud voice, 'Is Mr. dead?'

"I answered, 'No, Mr. Bussey is not dead. There is no Mr. Bussey. I am not married. I am Alwyn Bussey, if that is any information for you; so there.' And with that I shut the door and left the man standing speechless.

"Then Mr. Langdon sent a canvasser, but he was a clever man. He said, 'Alwyn Bussey, I presume?' I said, 'Yes.' He smiled and added, 'Well, you have got a vote, and we will send a carriage for you.' So I arranged to vote. On the day the carriage drew up at the door, and it was great fun. I was driven to the Little Titchfield polling station. There was a policeman at the door, and when he saw me he waved his hand as I have seen them do when they stop the traffic.

"I said, 'What is the matter, my good man?' He answered, haughtily, 'Women cannot vote, madam; don't you know that yet?' I asked, 'That is all you know, I a going to vote.'

"The presiding officer declined to issue a polling paper, but I stood my ground. I said, 'My name is on the register, and I am going to vote.' He seemed impressed, but said, 'Wait a little,' and then there was such a consultation!

"Then a young man came up to me with a red face and said, 'You can vote,' and issued me a polling ticket, and I voted. But before that he tried to temporize. He said, 'Can't you come this afternoon?' and I, of course, replied, 'No. I have come to vote, and I will vote now,' and I did.

"How did my name come on the register? It is difficult to say. No doubt they took me for a man—in any case, it is a mistake. But, then, isn't it funny?"

A Moving Welsh Mountain.

The moving Welsh mountain is advancing slowly but surely on the villages of Troedyrhwfwch and Sebastopol, in the Rhymney Valley.

The garden of the village inn at Troedyrhwfwch has been swept away, but curiously enough, the inn, which lies between the garden and the mountain, is intact. The reason for this is that it was practically built some time ago on a solid foundation of rock.

Close to the inn is a belt of woodland in which all the trees are drooping.

Every house in Sebastopol bears traces of damage. Most of the doors have been wrenched out of shape, and the keystones over them and the windows have been forced out of position.

Many theories are put forward to account for the slide. The two most popular are mining operations and quicksand. Prof. Galloway, the mining expert, favors the former theory.

The inspector of mines said at a recent inquest at Tredegar that falls caused more deaths in the pits of that neighborhood than in any other part of the country, and that the number had increased alarmingly during the last two years.

The railway officials are watching carefully for developments which may affect the line in the valley. One of them said recently: "This has been going on for forty years, and may continue for another forty."

Real Old Oak.

A wonderful relic of the past has been brought to light at Yaxley, Peterborough, in the discovery of what is most probably a hidden forest. At a depth of seven feet have been found a number of oak trees, which have lain buried, it is estimated, for something like two thousand years. One huge tree was 60 feet long and 2 feet in diameter

Most of the trees are almost perfect in condition and are being sold to manufacturers of antique furniture, and an American millionaire has made purchases for panelling his mansion with the old oak. Altogether about eighty trees have been raised, and hundreds more are left in the ground untouched, at a depth of five or six feet. In nearly all the cases the roots are found attached.

The trees are found in clusters of three or four, pointing in different directions, and in some instances they lay across each other. The wood is extremely hard and can only be worked by machinery. Some of the trees are being cut up for use in Mr. Astor's mysterious mansion which is being built for him.

Indian Tinsel Maker.

Here is an artist's pretty description of a tinselmaker in Delhi, India: "The silken thread from a ball under the worker's feet as he squats on the ground runs over the hook and is attached to the spindle. One rapid sweep of the latter along the worker's thigh sets it going, and both the slender, supple hands are free, one for the reel of tinsel which in a flash shoots upward to arm's length, coiled like a snake about the spinning thread; the sunlight and the gold tinsel together flash up the yellow silken thread, seeming to set it on fire."

His Excuse.

A milkman in a country town was brought before the local court to answer a charge of adulteration of milk. "You are charged," said the judge, "with a most serious offense, of selling adulterated milk. Have you anything to say in answer to the charge?"

"Well, your honor," replied the milkman, "the night before it was raining very hard, and the only cause I can give is the cow must have got wet through.

BRITISH LABOR PARTY

DIVIDED INTO FOUR SECTIONS IN THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

Most Important Is the Labor Representation Committee Section, Which Numbers 29 Members—Form an Exclusive Party In the House and Will Decide Upon Its Own Policy — A Trades Union Program.

The Labor party in the new British Parliament is divided into four sections: (1) The Labor representation committee members, who meet at the House of Commons; (2) the miners' members; (3) the Liberal-Labor members; and (4) a section which must be classed as Labor Independents, says The London Express.

By far the most important of these four is the Labor representation committee section, which will be known officially as the "Labor party." It numbers 29 members, which is practically a majority of the whole Labor party. Out of 59 candidates the following have been returned: Messrs. J. Keir Hardie, W. Crooks, D. J. Shackleton, and A. Henderson (members of the last Parliament), G. N. Barnes, C. W. Bowerman, R. Clynes, C. Duncan, A. H. Gill, T. Glover, J. Hodge, W. Hudson, J. Jenkins, F. W. Jowett, G. D. Kelly, J. R. MacDonald, J. T. Macpherson, J. O'Grady, J. Parker, T. F. Richards, G. H. Roberts, J. Seddon, P. Snowden, T. Summerbell, W. Thorne, S. Walsh, G. J. Wardle, A. Wilkie and W. T. Wilson.

These members are pledged by the constitution of the Labor representation committee to form an exclusive party in the House; it will now elect its own chairman and whips, and decide its own policy. Probably it may on occasions open its doors to those members whose policy most nearly coincides with its own, and thus strengthen its action by increasing the unity in the party. What its exact program will be is still doubtful; the meetings shortly to be held will decide that. But those members who are trade unionists and whose candidature has been endorsed by the Parliamentary committee of the trades union congress, have certainly a well-defined basis to work upon.

Trade-Union Program.

To a great extent this trade union program will form the policy of the party, as it includes all the vital measures for which Labor has been clamoring, though probably some extensions of it will have to be made to meet the needs of the strong Socialist element and the leaders of the group.

To the trade unionist section of the Labor representation committee the trades disputes bill and the workmen's compensation act amendment are all in all, and mean much more than the questions which are made the chief planks in other party programs.

No doubt the coming conference will see an amalgamation of programs; the Labor representation committee, the Independent Labor party, and trade union congress declarations will all be thrown into the melting pot, and thenceforth will come something which will suit all parties.

Both the Labor representation committee and trade union congress are in agreement—as naturally befits a child and its parent — and the list of measures as given by the Parliamentary committee of the latter include the two mentioned above, amendments to the truck act, the factory acts, unemployed act, educaton act, abolition of Chinese labor, extension of the housing of the working classes act, adult suffrage, an eight-hour working day, and reform of some municipal laws.

Miners and Members.

Such is the policy of the largest section. The miners are in a different category; for, while they are strongly trade unionist, there are among them many who could safely sit on the Liberal benches and not lose political caste. Inasmuch as they have at the trade union congress supported many of the resolutions brought forward, it is pretty evident that their unionism will come first and their Liberalism last.

The miners' members are Messrs. W. Abraham, T. Burt, C. Fenwick, F. Hall, J. Johnson, T. Richards, J. Wilson, W. Brace, E. Edwards, J. Haslam, W. Johnson, J. Williams and J. Wadsworth, thirteen in all, forming a very strong representation of one particular industry.

In the manifesto issued by the executive committee before the election the votes of electors were asked for in order that the Eight Hours Bill and an amended mines bill might be carried through the House, so that this portion of the Labor party must have support for their particular measures before they can work harmoniously with the newly-christened Labor party.

There is little doubt but that things will be arranged smoothly; indeed, the federation has announced that their candidates were in full "accord with the aspirations and needs of the laboring classes generally," and would "cooperate heartily with other Labor representatives."

The Lib.-Labs.

Thirdly, then, the Liberal-Labor members, such as Messrs. Broadhurst, W. Cremer, A. Richardson, H. Vivian, who at some time or other have been very actively engaged in trade union work, or now represent the work of Labor in association, such as co-operation, as does Mr. Vivian.

Outside this circle is still another which circumscribes men who are of Liberal tendencies who have no trade-union backing, except at the polls, but whose sympathies lie with Labor and its proposals. In this division fall Messrs. Percy Alden, F. Maddison, G. Nicholls, J. Rowlands, and W. P. Byles. These may be called the "free lances" of the Labor party, bound by no allegiance to group or federation, ready to support or abstain as their conscience dictates. And in the same category must be included the Right Hon. John Burns.

Lastly are four Labor Independents; Messrs. R. Bell (re-elected), W. C. Steadman, J. Ward, and J. H. Wilson. These have not chosen to sign the constitution of the Labor representative committee, and are thus nominally outside its pale. But they agree with the policy promulgated by the trades union, and the first three being strong members of the congress itself, their claims for recognition cannot be ignored.

Yet they cannot stand aside, and it is more than likely some compromise will be made, and though they will not subscribe to the hard and fast rules of the chief group, yet the benefit of their wisdom will not be lost when the counsels of the Labor representative committee are begun.

Thus, briefly, the position of the Labor parties in Parliament may be summarized. It is a new and untried body—only fifteen Labor members were in the last Parliament—and the eyes of all political England will be upon it.

FROM NEWSBOY TO M.P.

W. C. Steadman Tells of His Early Struggle With Poverty.

W. C. Steadman, Labor M. P. for Central Finsbury, relates the story of his life in a special article in the current number of Pearson's Weekly.

"At the age of eight I got my first job as an errand boy," he says. "Nothing in life since has given me such pleasure as I felt when I took home my first week's earnings to my mother.

"I remember I was such a thin, miserable-looking child that when I applied for the job they at first scoffed at the idea of my being strong enough to run errands, and all through my boyhood I suffered from ill-health.

"Between eight and 15 I did all manner of odd jobs. I sold newspapers in the streets, had a spell in the oil and color trade, and at the age of fifteen I was a barman in a public house. I do not think this last experience did me any harm. On the contrary, it widened my mental horizon and gave me an interest in the social and political matters which I heard the customers discuss.

"My barman job, however, did not last very long, for my mother, at God knows what cost to herself, had me apprenticed to a large builder—a wonderful piece of self-sacrifice, for it meant that my earnings ceased.

"Barge building changed me from a weak, puny lad into a strong man, and now I do not think I can tell you anything else about my boyhood.

"The general election of 1868, when I was 17 years old, first gave me an interest in politics. I heard the late W. Newton, the founder of what is now the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, speak at a meeting at Tower Hamlets, for which he was the Radical candidate, and thenceforward I threw myself heart and soul into his cause, and worked for the principles he advocated.

"The editor asks me to say to what I ascribe such success as I have made in life. Well, I do not find it a very easy question to answer; but I will try.

"In the first place, I can honestly say that I have got on entirely by my own exertions. I have always helped myself, and owe nothing to the favor or influence of others. Then, of course, I have worked hard. All the time I was an apprentice I attended night schools, and did everything I could to improve my general knowledge."

Algernon Charles Swinburne.

Algernon Charles Swinburne, the poet, was born in London on April 5, 1837, being the eldest child of Admiral Charles H. Swinburne, and a grandson of the third Earl of Ashburnham. His family has belonged for generations to Northumberland. His early years were spent partly at Capheaton in that county and partly at Bonchurch in the Isle of Wight. The poet was educated at Eton and Balliol College, whither he went in January, 1856, but he left the university without taking a degree. His stay at Oxford was, however, made memorable from the fact that he there became acquainted with Dante Gabriel Rossetti, William Morris, and Edward Burne-Jones, men who were destined to leave so emphatic a mark upon the art and literature of their generation. As one of the wonderful circle that formed around the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood the poet lived in London, and even shared for awhile with the Rossetti brothers a house in Cheyne-walk, Chelsea. Later he had chambers in Great James street and Guilford street, Bloomsbury, but a quarter of a century ago, with his friend Mr. Theodore Watts (now Watts-Dunton), he removed to The Pines, on the edge of Wimbledon common, and there the poet's slight figure has long been familiar to those who dwell in the neighborhood, while zealous admirers of his poetry — healthy hero-worshippers—have wandered about the common near the house in the hope of getting a glimpse of the writer who by general consent is the chief living representative of English poetry.

Our Yankee Cousin Abroad.

Grace George, recently returned from England, tells of a great blow to her patriotic pride. She was invited to a dinner by Lady ——, at a magnificent mansion in Kensington, and was treated after dinner to some rare singing by a celebrated vocalist. On the veranda afterwards the hostess brought two young debutantes up to the well-known actress and introduced them.

"I'm sure you will like each other, for they are Americans, too, Miss George," said the titled lady, as if that settled the question of the mutual esteem of the actress and the debutantes.

Miss George, wishing to be cordial, greeted them pleasantly and remarked, with the intention that the hostess, as well as the girls, should hear her:

"Did you not enjoy the beautiful singing in the dining hall? And the acoustics were perfect, were they not?"

"Yes," said one of the fellow Americans, with enthusiasm, "those acoustics were the best I ever ate."

Not To Be Scared.

In an old-fashioned churchyard in Scotland a pile of skulls and bones had been turned up in the process of gravedigging.

The plowmen in a bothy near by offered the "loon" five shillings to go at night and remove one. The lad agreed and started in the dark.

An ambush had been laid to frighten him. As he lifted one skull a hollow voice called:

"That's mine!"

"A' richt," said the lad, laying the ghastly thing down, to lift another. Again came from the darkness a voice:

"That's mine!"

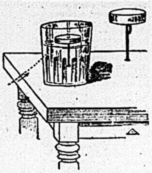
"Gae-awa', ye haverin idiot! Ye canna hae two skulls."—Pearson's Weekly.

THE PHANTOM PIN.

A Toy That Teaches a Lesson in Light Reflection.

It is possible at times to get more than mere amusement out of toys. There are some toys that will instruct as well as amuse, and, while the phantom pin may not be in the strict sense of the word a toy, it will amuse and instruct you at the same time, for it will serve the purpose of giving you a little lesson in the properties of the reflection of light. This is the way the phantom pin is managed:

Take a cork and cut it into the form of a disk of about the thickness of an inch. In its center stick the point of a pin. This done, take a glass about three-quarters full of water and place the cork upon the surface of the liquid with the pin below.



THE WAY TO ARRANGE THE PIN.

Now if you will look at the cork from above you will not see the pin, but if you will alter your position and diminish the sense of the visual ray by placing the eye on a parallel with the table on which the glass rests you will perceive a pin above the cork.

WIT SHARPENERS.

A Game In Which the Players Must Think Quickly.

A delightful home game for children is as follows:

"I see something in this room that begins with R," says the one to the right of mamma.

Now, this person may have ring, rug, or rocker in his mind. Immediately the guessing will begin, "Rug," "rose," "rocker," and so on. The one guessing correctly will have his turn. If he select a compound word, as watch-chain, he would give the initial letter of each word, "I see something in this room that begins with w-c."

When tired of this they can change it somewhat by saying:

"Now, let's furnish a house." "I donate a carpet," says "It." The one on his left instantly takes it up, using the last letter of carpet as his initial.

He will perhaps say, "And I will furnish a table," while the next will use the last, "e," of table as the beginning letter of his furnishing, as "easel."

If one cannot think of anything before "It" counts ten he must go foot or pay a forfeit.

When tired of the house the window will furnish entertainment of the same sort. "I see rain," cries one. "Nest," says the next. "Thrush," "bill," "lattice" and "evergreen" will follow in quick succession.

This game is capable of an almost limitless number of variations. The children can plant trees or a vegetable garden. They can have the maple, elm, mulberry, yew. They may safely place in the ground potato, okra, aloe, egg plant and tomato, or they may deal in flowers in the same manner.

A Curved Ball.

Many boys do not understand why a ball may be made to curve in its flight. Here is the explanation: When a ball is thrown it is retarded in its forward motion by the resistance of the air, which exerts a pressure not only on the face of the ball, but a resisting force on its sides by friction. If the ball be simply thrown forward the friction of the air will be equal on each side of it, but if one side be made to move faster than the other—that is, if the ball be made to rotate on its own axis so as to increase the lateral friction—the natural result is a curve in the direction of the side on which its motion has been retarded. That is the philosophy of a "curved ball."

Why a Dog Trots Sidewise.

It is said that a dog trots sidewise so that his hind feet will not strike his fore feet. That seems to be a reasonable explanation, for if he be harnessed to a small wagon, between shafts, so that he cannot turn his body to one side, his feet will often come into collision. When he trots sidewise, however, one hind foot goes between the fore feet and the other outside.

A Messenger.

Little Jack by the seaside stands,
  Watching the setting sun.
He runs to the beach at eventide,
  For his day of play is done.

His father has gone to the China seas
  For a cruise of a year and more,
  On the edge of Long Island shore.

He kisses his hand as the sun sinks down
  And murmurs a message low,
"When you shine on father tomorrow
    morn,
  Just tell him Jack says 'Hello.'"

"Supper is ready!" the black nurse calls.
  Jack answers: "I can't come, Dinah.
The sun has a message to give to dad.
  I'll wait till he gets to China."

WHAT SISTERS MAY DO.

Ways In Which They May Be of Help to Their Brothers.

A sister can help to cure a brother of a boy's natural awkwardness and blundering by saying all the pleasant things she can of him in his hearing.

She can do more for him by encouragement than by rebuke. Boys flourish best in a kindly atmosphere.

She can take an interest in his fads and amusements and listen to him whenever he has anything to tell. In this was she becomes his most valuable confidant and comrade.

She can make her brother's friends her friends by being ready to entertain them when they call. She should not be continually finding flaws in them or holding them up to ridicule.

She can teach them to be manly by occasionally claiming his protection, and he will be quick to respond to such a call.

She should say nothing to her brother's disparagement before strangers. Harsh treatment will only result in hard heartedness.

Brothers stand in need of as much sympathetic affection as girls, and sisters should see that they get it.

In this way sisters can teach their brothers to be as fond of home as they are, and a fondness for home will keep any boy from straying from that path which leads to a noble manhood.—Exchange.

KITCHEN APRONS.

They Should Be Made Pretty as Well as Serviceable.

When making kitchen aprons be sure to bring the gathers well round to the back, so that the back or sides of the dress will be protected. Have the belt long enough to tie, for if it is short the needed pin is generally missing, and a button soon comes off in the laundry. Make aprons long as well as wide, and the advice to add a ruffle to the lower edge is good, for a ruffle will catch most of the dirt and save the dress beneath.

It is a good idea to ornament some of the work aprons a little, for somehow when one has a starched gingham apron with a little cross stitch vine worked across it she is twice as careful of it as when an old faded print apron is worn. So many of the soft, fine wide cottons are now made that the stock of aprons need never be low. Make them at home, for the flimsy cloth and coarse machine stitching of the ready made aprons are no credit to the wearer. One cannot wear the handsome white aprons such as cooking teachers wear while there are pots and kettles to wash, but more of the daintiness of the lecture room could with profit be adopted in most kitchens.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Prune juice on dry cereals makes a nice change from cream.

Cold baked potatoes sliced thin, then put in a baking dish with salt, pepper, butter and milk, make a better scallop than raw potatoes.

Heavy streaks through a cake will undoubtedly appear if the butter and sugar are not thoroughly beaten or if the butter is not properly rubbed into the flour.

Do not dress salads with sugar and vinegar or salt and vinegar. The latter is an admirable combination for scouring brass, but it is not good for one's stomach. Use a mixture of oil and vinegar, lightly seasoned.

Cauliflower should be placed head down in cold salted water for ten or fifteen minutes before cooking to draw out insects. In boiling slightly salted water should be used, and the head should be placed downward in the kettle.

The Sunbonnet Boss.

Mrs. W. E. Morgan of Missouri is boss of one of the richest zinc mines in that state. To her employees she is known as the "Sunbonnet Boss," and they are said to like her and work well under her directions. Garbed in rubber skirt, coat, hat and boots, she goes down into a mine when necessary, and she is on the ground to superintend operations. It is said to be due to her business foresight that the mine is being worked anyway, for the property had been condemned as worthless and was lying fallow, a combination of dump pile and water, when Mrs. Morgan saw its possibilities. She organized a company, purchased the engine, pump and other necessary machinery, employed the men, drained the mine and sunk the shaft deeper, and now is rewarded by a rich yield of zinc ore.

Sewing on Buttons.

When replacing the lost buttons of garments it is very important that the new buttons should be of the same size as the old ones. Careless menders pay no attention to this trifling detail, and the consequence is that buttons that are too small will not remain fastened, and those which are too large tear the buttonholes. A button box for storing reserve buttons should find a place in every mending basket. In this receptacle should be put all buttons which have been ripped off old garments as well as any complete set of buttons there may be. Housekeepers who pick up and put away in its allotted place every button which falls into their hands may save themselves many purchases.

The Waxed Floor.

Here is an excellent method of removing grease spots from a waxed floor: Pour spirits of turpentine on the spot and give it time to soak into the wood. Then cover with powdered talc and press with a warm but not very hot iron. The talc will absorb the grease. Brush off and polish the place anew with wax.

SPARE YOURSELF.

Study the Ways of Saving Your Nervous Strength.

"Real out and out lazy women are pretty hard to find nowadays," mused an old physician the other day. "The maxim, 'It is better to wear out than to rust out,' has been taken to heart with such a will that most women are literally in danger of wearing themselves out before their time. Especially in great, rushing cities women who go in for church work or club life or bridge soon find themselves swept away in a current that is too strong for them.

"Women get in such a whirl with it all they simply can't stop to rest and recuperate. Most of them live on their nerves till their nerves refuse point blank to be lived on a minute longer.

"Some women seem to break up all of a sudden. Others linger on in semi-invalidism, nervous bankrupts, who live a hand to mouth existence, unable to undertake any task or undergo any test in the least out of the ordinary without suffering a nervous collapse. One of woman's temperamental faults is her tendency to use up her vitality as fast as she gets it or faster.

"To all women who are wasting themselves in social pleasures or the niceties of housekeeping I would give this bit of advice: Spare yourselves. Study how to save your nervous strength. Resolve not to fritter yourself on trifles. Let the things that are not vital go. Don't be led away by ambition into wearing yourself out keeping the house clean or performing what other people may consider to be your duty in church or club.

"If you women would only learn how to spare yourselves by using all the labor saving devices, all the short cuts, you would not know yourselves in a year, you'd look so young and feel so free."—New York Tribune.

BLENDING OF COLORS.

An Art That Should Be Mastered by All Women.

Japanese art is in such high favor that when a Japanese woman talks on color combinations in dress all American women pause to listen. Such a woman called the color taste of this country "a little barbarian yet."

As proof she cited the taste of an elderly woman who wore a mauve gown at a party. Every one who saw her noted her sickly yellow complexion, accentuated, as the oriental woman said, by the color of the gown. If a ruching of gray tulle had been put round the neck the yellow would have disappeared from the complexion, and the effect would have been good. This woman's daughter, a pronounced brunette, wore a yellow gown, and her face looked almost purple. If a little band of black and gold had been used about the neck the face would have assumed its natural pink.

There is certainly an art in the selection of the proper blending of colors, and many American women do not seem to have mastered it. There are others, elderly women, some of them, who maintain the appearance of freshness and youth by the judicious use of ruchings in the necks of their gowns and are never seen with a black waist without a light colored band coming next to the neck.

FOR MOTHER'S HAPPINESS.

Seek her comfort and pleasure in all things before your own.

Frequently make her simple gifts, and be sure they are appropriate and tasteful.

Do not forget that though she may be old and wrinkled she still loves pretty things.

Remember that she is still a girl at heart so far as delicate little attentions are concerned.

Give her your full confidence and never do anything of which you think she will disapprove.

Make her a partaker, so far as the disparity of age will permit, in all your pleasure and recreations.

Lift the many burdens from the shoulders that have grown stooped in waiting upon and working for you.

Bear patiently with all her peculiarities and infirmities, which, after all, may be the result of a life of care and toil.

Woman's Responsibility.

Many women have real business sagacity and ability, and some of them are realizing that the financial administration of a household affords scope for their special gift and that wise spending is as large a factor in prosperity as effective earning. When women are trained to a knowledge of values and business principles and then have the responsibility for household finances placed upon them they not only come face to face with problems of great importance and interest, but often solve them with entirely satisfactory results. The number is increasing of those households where the wives and mothers have definite pecuniary responsibilities and do not have to resort to subterfuge or dishonest practices to secure the money necessary to meet legitimate personal, household and family expenses.

Massaging the Face.

The skin should be perfectly clean before the massaging of the face is begun. Use the complexion brush, with warm water and pure soap. When rubbing in a cream always have the motions upward and outward. Send the flattened palms from chin up to the ears. Move the finger tips about in little circles, pressing inward gently and being careful not to push the flesh up into tiny lines. Do this always at night, and every morning bathe the face with cold water, drying with gentle pats with an old soft towel.

THE HAIR AND THE WAVE.

Denial That the Marcel Method Imperils Feminine Locks.

"The Marcel wave ruin the hair? Nonsense," was the vehement declaration of a hairdresser. "I know that idea is in the air, and it exasperates me to hear women utter it, for it is not true. It is now seven years since the Marcel wave was first introduced in this country, and I have had at least a score of women customers who have had their hair waved regularly every week all that time, and often twice during the week, if they were going out to a dinner or reception. I wish you might see their heads. Their hair is in superb condition, without a sign of brittleness or that lifeless look that comes from overheating with tongs. And why? Well, one reason is that some lotion is always used on the hair before the iron is applied, which prevents scorching, besides acting as a food for the scalp as well. What does injure the hair is ruffling it up beneath to make a pompadour. A rat is equally bad, as it heats the scalp. To overcome a natural deficiency of hair there is nothing more hygienic than a ventilated pompadour, an accessory which cannot be detected."

When making the Marcel wave, first brush the hair thoroughly, then put the curling iron through the hair at the bottom of the head and curl it upward for a few seconds; then turn it downward without taking the iron out. This makes the Marcel wave, which should encircle the head perfectly and be about two inches apart. With a little practice one could make the Marcel wave.

WAIST HANGERS.

How They May Be Covered With Ribbon and Sacheted.

There is no longer any possible excause of wrinkled clothes, crushed collars or sleeves which have lost their freshness. Nowadays there are all sorts of convenient hangers for coats, waist and skirts—cheap ones, too, not costing more than 10 cents, and the best part of it is that very many of them fold up so that they can be tucked away in a dress suit case and do not take up any room to speak of. As soon as the destination is reached the waist, which may have suffered a bit on its travels, can be taken out, given a vigorous little shake and hung up on the waist hanger. By using these hangers clothes will keep their good looks much longer than if they were hung on a hook or folded away in a bureau drawer.

DECORATED WAIST HANGER.

The dainty woman makes these wire waist hangers into pretty novelties by first padding and then covering them with ribbon, put on either shirred or plain. The hook is wound with ribbon and trimmed with a bow, and from the shoulder portions little clusters of ribbon sachet bags dangle. Sachet is also used in the wadding so that the bodice, which is supported by the hanger, gets just the right degree of perfume. In covering a waist hanger for a friend it is always well to know the color of her room, so that it may harmonize, and also to be sure of her favorite sachet.—Woman's Home Companion.

Care of Street Suits.

There is nothing which tends to lengthen the life of a good street suit so definitely as taking it off as soon as you come in, brushing it and putting it away on its hanger. Lounging, as you're bound to do in a measure in your home, plays havoc with tailored clothes.

It's rather a temptation to sink into an easy chair when you come in, just tired enough to enjoy the prospect of idling for a little while, but those very times take the life out of the cloth that tailors well and probably lays fine little creases which result in incorrigible mussing, says the Philadelphia North American. It's rather a temptation, too, to hang it up and delay the brushing and putting it away properly to a later time, when you're more rested, but it pays to do it at the time, for dust should be got rid of before it has time to settle into the cloth and give it that dingy look which mars so many otherwise good looking suits, and careful hanging prevents the forming of bad lines.

Bear With Others.

Patience and gentleness are necessary qualities in every girl's life. Patience aids in extinguishing envy, overcoming anger and crushing pride. How much good may be done and joy brought by a gentle word or look! Truly, "a soft answer turneth away wrath." Girls are not called upon to do great things except in rare instances, but the everyday trials of life afford ample scope for practicing that virtue of mankind which has become proverbial, says the Pittsburg Press. The best exercises of patience and self denial, and the better because not chosen by ourselves, are those in which we have to bear with the failings of those about us, to endure neglect when we feel we deserved attention and ingratitude when we expected thanks, to bear with disappointment in our expectations, with intrusion or disturbance; in short, with whatever opposes our will or contradicts our humor.

SELF-CONTROL'S VALUE

WHY THIS VIRTUE IS SO IMPORTANT FOR A SUCCESSFUL LIFE.

RULER OF HIS OWN SPIRIT

Man Who Can Capture the Citadel of His Own Heart and Hold His Will and Life In Subjection to the Higher Law Hath Done a Noble Work In Himself—A Vivid Comparison.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 1.—In this sermon the preacher deals with one of the familiar evils of our social and business life, the curse of ungovernable temper, and shows how the misdirected energy of those who are victims of the habit may be transformed into a blessing. The text is Proverbs xvi, 32, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

Popular enthusiasm is most easily kindled when the admiring multitudes are allowed to bend the knee before a human idol clothed in a soldier's uniform. The most inspiring call for the common people is the bugle blast sounding the cavalryman's charge. 'Tis true, the most beautiful monument of Edinburgh is the one erected to Sir Walter Scott, the writer, and in London it is the one erected to Prince Albert, Queen Victoria's consort, and in some respects the most conspicuous monument in Brooklyn is that erected to the memory of Henry Ward Beecher, the preacher. But where there is one monument erected in prominent cities to the memory of a statesman, a scientist, a poet or an artist there are five, ten, twenty monuments erected to the memory of military heroes. It is right to honor the heroic deeds of these chieftains, but the heroes of peace should be honored also.

King Solomon recognizes this fact in the words of my text. He is not depreciating such triumphs as that of Cyrus, who 500 years later laid siege to the City of Babylon and captured it by turning the Euphrates river from its course and by marching under the city gates by night, when the King and all his courtiers were bemuddled at a drunken carnival. He is not sneering at military genius such as was displayed by Titus, who captured Jerusalem in 70 A. D., but he is exalting the noble work of a man of God who can capture the citadel of his own heart and hold his will and life in subjection to a higher law. So to-day I want to show you why self control is so important for a successful life and why "he that is slow to anger is better than the mighty and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

The ungovernable temper is to be dreaded and feared. For the time being it undermines a man's thinking and reasoning powers. It may even become suicidal. It puts a man in the unenviable position of fighting against and destroying himself. As a snake when teazed by an enemy it cannot reach will in its frenzy bury its poisonous fangs in its own body, so the slave of ungoverned temper becomes the victim of his own rage and chagrin.

The brain in its action is very similar to the organs of the body. All its different parts are interdependent, as the heart, the brain, the kidneys, the lungs and the stomach act and react upon each other. When the heart stops its regular steady pumping, then every other organ languishes on account of this weakness. Then the water of the blood exudes through the tissues, and dropsy sets in. When the lungs refuse to do their work, then the digestive apparatus is affected. Stomach trouble can cause nervous prostration. Once get the nerves out of tune and you may have nervous dyspepsia. The organs of the body are like the understones of a great arching bridge. Take away any of the substones and the whole arch tumbles into a ruin. Such is the interdependence of the different parts of the brain. Let the will power once lose its grip and the reasoning faculty, or the seat of judgment, is gone. Then a man in his actions and words becomes like a runaway horse taking the bit in his teeth. He is just as apt to smash up against a stone fence or to leap a precipice or to dash before the onrushing locomotive as he is to keep the straight road of safety.

At such times a man will do something on the spur of the moment which he is apt to regret all the days of his life. He is like a drunkard drawing a knife in a saloon brawl. He is like a general intrenched in some impregnable Gibraltar who deliberately opens the gates and makes a foolish sortie. He is like an army which goes off and leaves its fortress unguarded to be pounced upon by a waiting foe.

Now, life under the very best of conditions is such an awful and a close struggle that you and I cannot afford to make any mistake on account of an unconquerable temper. When we are in conflict with a skilled foe we cannot afford to let our contempt get the better of us, as did Goliath when he went forth to attack David. If you do, just as sure as you live you will place yourself at the mercy of your antagonist. When you are preparing for life's work because something goes wrong or an injustice has been done you have no right to lose your temper. Every time a man lets his anger get the better of him he does not injure his enemies nearly as much as he damages himself. If you would be great in your influence over others, you must be great in your power over yourself. This means that, no matter how great the provocation, you must learn to suffer injustice in silence. You must learn to bare your back for a castigation if you deserve it and grimly hold your tongue even when the lash is fetching the heart's blood.

The ungovernable temper is to be dreaded and feared for a second reason. No sooner does a man lose his temper than he drives from his side those who would naturally come forward as his defenders. He spikes the guns of those who would be his protectors. All through the world there is a desire to see fair play. If when going down the street you see a big boy whipping a small boy you naturally take the small boy's part. And so in this great wide world if the masses of people see that you are being abused they will take your side if you yourself are willing and ready to suffer in silence.

The ungovernable temper is to be feared and dreaded for still another reason—the bitter tongue never made an enemy less bitter; the angry retort never blunted an enemy's sword or threw him off his guard or made him less energetic for your destruction. We have read about a great ambassador who was a man of such violent temper that even the grand vizier of the Turkish Sultan would tremble before him. He would rush into the Turkish official's presence when anything went wrong, crying, "It must be done. I tell you; it must be done, or else our warships will soon be bombarding your capital!" But that is not the way you and I are going to make our enemies bow before us. We will not subdue them by torrents of invective, but only by kind words. "It is the angry tongue that breaketh the bone," says the Bible? Oh, no! "By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone." Ah, my friends, you want to overcome your enemies, do you? Then do it not with a sledge hammer, but with the power of kindness. When a person hates you or ill treats you, then systematically go forth to win him over by love and forgiveness.

I was never more impressed with what love and kindness can do than when studying the life of Lincoln. His gentleness did more to save the country and give us a reunited north and south than all the bullets ever fired or all the swords ever drawn. His policy of conquering by gentleness was beautifully illustrated by an incident told in reference to Gen. Rosecrans. Missouri was at that time under his command. Guerrilla bands, for which the Confederacy was in nowise responsible, had captured three northern soldiers, one a major, the other two privates, and shot them down in cold blood. Gen. Rosecrans, to retaliate, ordered that three Confederates, one a major and two privates, should be shot. One of those so sentenced to die was Major Lyons. No sooner did Lincoln hear of it than he sent a telegram ordering a reprieve until he could look into the matter and pass upon the action of the court-martial. When Gen. Rosecrans received the telegraphic orders he was furious. He declared that if the officials at Washington did not leave him alone he would resign. This pardoning policy of the President was absolutely ruining the army.

What did Lincoln do? Did he discharge Rosecrans? No. After he had looked into the matter he sent a letter to the commander which went thus:

Dear Gen. Rosecrans—I have personally examined all the papers in the Lyons case, and I cannot see that it is a matter of executive interference, so I will turn it over to you, with the full confidence that you will do what is just and right, only begging you, my dear general, to do nothing in reprisal for the past, only what is necessary to insure security for the future, and reminding you that we are not fighting against a foreign foe, but our brothers, and that our aim is not to break their spirits, but only to bring them back to their old allegiance. Conquer by kindness—let that be our policy. Very truly yours, ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Do you wonder when Gen. Rosecrans received that letter he refrained from executing Major Lyons? Do you wonder that Lincoln's policy of love was the chief means of uniting the north and the south? Do you not also realize that if you try the power of love and kindness you can change many of your enemies into friends? "Conquer by kindness" was the policy of the great President. "Conquer by kindness" is the teaching of my text. Are you and I ready to choke back that sharp word we are so willing to hurl at our enemies in an angry fit of temper?

But I not only state that an ungovernable temper makes your enemies more hateful and bitter than ever before, but that an ugly temper reacts and strikes hardest against those whom you ought to love best on earth, your own friends and dear ones. And of all contemptible and despicable actions I think one of the most despicable is for men and women to go off in a rage or fit of sulks merely because something goes wrong in the house and thereby to make wives or husbands and children live in a perfect pandemonium of fear. And when I speak thus I am not talking about a curse which is to me merely theoretical. In every church I have served as pastor there has been to my personal knowledge at least three or four families living such a life as I have described on account of the ungovernable temper of one of its members.

The other day I had this evil brought to my attention in a very forcible way. The telephone bell rang, and a gentleman said: "I am a stranger to you. I am in great trouble. Can I come and see you at once?" "Yes," I said; "jump on the car and come up." No sooner did he enter my parlor than his eyes filled with tears, and his lips trembled as he said, "Mr. Talmage, my wife and my two daughters have left me, and I want you to help me to get them to come back." "Do you drink?" I asked. "No, I never drink." "Are you a gambler?" "No," he answered. "Are you untrue to your marriage vows?" "No," he again answered. "What is the matter?" "Well, I will tell you." Then he told me a long story. He was a very nervous man and therefore very quick-tempered. There had been a family quarrel, and the mother had taken the two girls and left the house. "And, oh," he said, "I do love them so much and I am so sorry. What am I to do? Will you help me?"

"No," I said, "I will not. I admire your wife for taking the stand she has done. As far as I can make out, you have again and again threatened her life." He said, "Yes, I have." You have been going off in your ugly fits of jealous rage for at least eighteen years. If anything goes wrong in your house, you work yourself up into a perfect pandemonium of fury. You are an unworthy husband, and there is no excuse for your actions. The wonder to me is that your wife has lived as long with you. You go to a boarding-house and get a room and live there alone long enough to prove that you are sincere in your repentance. Give part of your weekly wages, and I will see that she gets it, and that money will help her support her daughters while you are away. Then, when your repentance is an evident fact, she, I know, will go back and live with you, for she is a good woman." "Yes," he answered, "she is a good woman."

I do not know the history of all your homes, but I do know this: Some are homes in which it is absolutely impossible for peace and love to dwell. Why? Because in some of those homes there is a father or a mother or a sister or a brother who has never learned to control the temper. No sooner does anything go wrong in those homes than bitter words come to the lips and sharp sayings sting and lacerate, until life itself becomes a miserable burden to every one around them. God forgive you, my brother, my sister, if you have been one of those who, on account of a vile temper, become a curse to all about them.

What are the causes of an ungovernable temper? There are two, and both are directly or indirectly for the most part attributable to the parents of the man or woman having the vile temper. Father and mother sometimes are too lenient with their children when they raise them. They do not make their children obey. They do not teach them that "yes" means "yes" and "no" means "no." When their children begin to cry or to pout or to sulk for something the indulgent mothers and fathers say, "Oh, well, go ahead and do it, if that will stop your crying." The result is that many children never learn to subject their wills to a higher will. Allowed to indulge in fits of temper as babies, they are learning how to sulk as men. As spoiled children they kick and scream because they cannot have what they want, and as adults they will lash themselves into fury when they do not have what they want in the home or in the store. Solomon was right when he said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he shall not depart from it." A large percentage of ungovernable tempers can be charged directly or indirectly against wrong parental training. Teach your children to obey. Teach them to recognize other people's rights, as other people must respect their rights.

The next great cause of the ungovernable temper is the custom of teasing, which is to be seen everywhere around us and especially in the home. We find boys teasing boys, girls teasing girls, men and women teasing men and women, men and women teasing children and even fathers and mothers delighting in tantalizing their own babies. We find that people are often more pleased at hearing other people cry and stamp their feet in rage and in seeing their eyes flash and their fists clinched than in seeing them smile and be happy. Beware, O man, how you make the angry passions of some one else leap and blaze! Remember that you cannot be true to your loved ones if you suffer their baser passions to assume the sway.

In closing, I would again read to you my text, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city." You see, it is written in the present tense. It means for you to learn to govern your temper now. Perhaps by laxity of past training you have been guilty of this sinful habit. Will you not now begin systematically to curb your evil temper as a general lays out a campaign to capture a city? You say you are not able to do it in your own strength. That is true, but by the help of Jesus Christ you can conquer. And let me encourage you by reminding you that this temper is a proof of stored up energy, which, if by the help of God you can bring under control, will fit you for useful service in his cause. Are you not ready to say, Oh, master, take my temper and rule it henceforth by thine own loving power?

Symmetry of the Horse.

An experiment station says that the closer a draft horse is to the ground the better both for service and endurance. This is generally true probably, but it is possible for a horse to be too close to the ground, comments National Stockman. Very few of them are and many are too far from it. The question of breeding draft horses with short legs is not the one the breeder needs to consider. His ideal should be a symmetrical horse, and if he keeps this in mind the horse will have height enough and not too much. A symmetrical horse is a well balanced horse, doing his work with greater ease than one too far from or too close to the ground. The best specimens of draft horses to-day are about right in this particular and with either shorter or longer legs would be less useful than they are.

Mark Twain's Indecision.

Mark Twain in his earlier days did not enjoy the prosperity which came later in his career. In a conversation with William Dean Howells on one occasion, the subject of literary vicissitudes was broached by the humorist.

"My difficulties taught me some thrift," he observed. "But I never knew whether it was wiser to spend my last nickel for a cigar to smoke, or for an apple to devour."

"I am astounded," observed Mr. Howells, "that a person of so little decision should meet with so much worldly success."

Mark Twain nodded very gravely.

"Indecision about spending money," he said, "is worthy of cultivation. When I couldn't decide what to buy with my last nickel, I kept it, and so became rich."

His Head Saved.

In the House of Commons no incident is greeted with more hearty laughter than that of a member who, after an eloquent oration, plumps down on his silk hat on the bench behind him. A young member who had just made his maiden speech sat upon his new silk hat. There were roars of laughter. An Irish member immediately arose and gravely said: "Mr. Speaker, permit me to congratulate the honorable gentleman upon the happy circumstance that when he sat on his hat his head was not in it!" This remark upset the dignity of the House, and the Speaker called "Order, Order," amid roars of laughter.

Too Late.

Some drinkers say they know when they
Have had enough. How sad it
Should happen so they never know
Till after they have had it!

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. ELLEN FOOTE.

President of the Hat Trimmers' Union of Danbury.

Mrs. Ellen Foote, president of the Hat Trimmers' union of Danbury, Conn., is the moving spirit of that powerful organization, and it is largely through her common sense methods and management that the union has won the name of being one of the most intelligently conducted trade organizations in the country. Through its efforts it has maintained a wage for women which is regarded by other manufacturing populations as little short of miraculous, and it has insured a sanitary and hygienic condition of factory and shop which is a model of its kind.

It is a fact that in all the twenty-one years of its existence this wonderful woman's organization has been directly under the leadership of its original organizer and initial president, Mrs. Foote. Not only does it presuppose an extraordinary amount of diplomacy and executive ability on the part of the presiding officer, but it speaks volumes for the solidarity, physical, mental and moral, of the Danbury working woman.

MRS. ELLEN FOOTE.

Mrs. Foote's is an interesting personality, interesting not only because of the miraculous record she has established for the woman trades unionist, but quite as much for the fact that she is eminently typical, socially and otherwise, of a large percentage of the membership of the union. A distinguished, fine looking woman, now passed far into middle life, Mrs. Foote is the most enthusiastic of all trades union women in Danbury, despite the fact that she is, and has been since a very young woman, the wife of one of Danbury's leading citizens.

Mrs. Foote has the love and esteem of all the workers of her city, and she has also the undivided respect of the employers, among whom she is known as "Queen Ellen."—New York Herald.

Colors and the Complexion.

The tint of the orange is becoming to the brunette with a fair complexion.

For the blond the delicate yellow of ripe corn is beautifying.

Bright green is becoming to the pale, but clear, skin, but not to a high or muddied complexion.

Violet is allowable only for faces quite free from yellow tints.

Blue is remarkably becoming to fair skins, but only the darkest shades are favorable to brunettes.

Creamy white is almost universally becoming, and the introduction of cream lace makes an otherwise impossible color wearable.

Black is flattering to a blond, but if she be not fair enough to look well in black an admixture of her own special color is permissible.

Usually the soft toned grays look well with yellow or brown hair.

Browns are becoming to the clear skin crowned with golden or brown hair.

Red is becoming to either blond or brunette, so that the skin be fair enough or dark enough and provided it is just the right shade of the hue.

Fomentations.

When a fomentation is prescribed by a physician or when it shall seem to be the proper thing in the emergency of extreme internal pains a flannel cloth may be folded, wrung out of hot water and applied directly to the skin. Nevertheless it is better after wringing out the flannel as dry as desired to fold it in a dry flannel cloth of one or two thicknesses before applying it to the patient. A little time is required for the heat of the fomentation to penetrate the dry flannel, and thus the skin is allowed an opportunity to acquire tolerance of the heat, and a greater degree of temperature can be borne than if the moist cloth is brought directly in contact with the surface. The outer fold of dry flannel will also serve to keep the cloth warm by preventing evaporation. A fomentation is sometimes needed when no hot water is at hand. Soak the flannel in cold water, wring as dry as desired, fold in a newspaper and lay upon the stove or wrap it about the stovepipe. In a few minutes it will be as warm as the patient can bear.

The Art of Entertaining.

The secret of being a good hostess is in hiding the fact that you are making an effort to please. The houses to which you like best to go are those where you feel at liberty to look over books and portfolios, where the piano stands open and there are easy chairs without elaborate cushions. In preparing for an evening party, if you expect to have games which involve real play, put away delicate bric-a-brac so that no guest shall have the misfortune to spoil his evening and yours by an accident. Scatter picture books and single views at the sides of the room for the benefit of those unfortunates, the wallflowers. There should always be a corner set apart for those who do not dance, and this should be large enough for a table at which a game may be played comfortably. Look after the shy girls and boys. That is one of the chief duties of the hostess. It is better to try to bring them into the general sport than to devote yourself to their amusement.

An Injured Tongue.

Nothing is more alarming than a severe injury to the tongue. It sometimes happens that in falling a little child will bite its tongue completely through, so that the teeth meet and the mouth is filled with blood. Such an accident is not so serious as it appears. The mouth heals quickly, the saliva forming a natural remedy better than any which man has invented or discovered. But to assist nature and stop the flow of blood is certainly important. The simplest way to do this is by sprinkling finely sifted flour into the cut. A child can be coaxed to submit to this treatment if the flour be mixed with powdered sugar.

Nerves.

Along the nerve lines here are some little nerve facts. When you feel fidgety don't try to talk. When you feel overwrought keep still. When you are blue don't make it worse by using up your nerve force. Keep still. Try to listen. Remember that the popular woman in any society, in the home or abroad, is the woman who says little, but who listens much. It is so the world over. The leader is not the one who bosses, but the one who listens to the others and says only a little.

Dangerous Toys.

Mothers should carefully examine the toys presented to their little ones. A friend gave my six-months-old baby a little toy dog made of black woolly goods. He was very fond of the plaything, but imagine my horror when one day as he sat playing with it I saw him pull out a long black headed pin. Upon examination I found that the eyes and collar button, which I supposed were beads, were nothing more than black pins with long, ugly points.—Good Housekeeping.

Making Hair Look Thicker.

A simple way of making the hair look thicker and heavier is as follows: After the shampoo, and when the hair is perfectly dry, plait it into two or three braids. Have one strand small and the other two large; braid loosely; hold the little strand tight and push the other two up toward the head. This will cause it to form large, natural waves. Don't wear a rat. They are unclean, keep the scalp too warm and often cause the hair to molt luxuriantly.

In the Kitchen.

Have as few articles about the sink as possible. The sink brush, pan scraper, dish mop and soap shaker may be hung above it, and you will also find it convenient to have the potato masher and a large spoon at hand. The latter, however, must be hung high, out of reach of all splash. If possible keep the salt box to the right of the range and as near to it as the construction of the kitchen will permit.

Potatoes Chambery.

Potatoes chambery are a novelty. Slice and crisp them precisely as for Saratoga potatoes. That is, slice them as thin as possible and drop them into ice water, afterward drying the slices between folds of a towel. Arrange the slices in a well buttered biscuit tin with salt, pepper and bits of butter between the layers. Bake until well browned.

Boiled Puddings.

When making any sort of boiled pudding tie over the basin grease proof paper, such as the grocer wraps the butter in. Boil in the usual manner, but take care that the water does not come up to the top of the basin. This plan saves trouble, for each pudding has a fresh paper and the washing of pudding cloths is done away with.

Marriageable Girls.

It is very difficult to say what laws regulate proposals—why some girls attract attention only, while others attract "attentions." There are pretty and popular women to whom nobody proposes; there are plainer ones with whom every second man finds himself contemplating marriage.—Lady's Realm.

Moist Hands.

Moist hands are ruinous to light colored gloves. A good remedy for the trouble is to bathe them frequently with a mixture composed of two ounces of cologne and one-quarter ounce of tincture of belladonna. After this is rubbed well into the hands they may be sprinkled with talcum powder.

A too hot oven may be quickly cooled by placing in it a basin of cold water. The steam from the water will not injure anything that may be cooking except puff pastry.

A small hole in china can be perfectly mended with plaster of paris. Mix very thin with water and drop into the hole. Let it harden before using.

If a gloss is desired on linen add a teaspoonful of salt to the starch when making.

To pour drops from a bottle moisten the edge.

Resting a Model.

Many artists have the reputation of being inexorable in their demands upon the model's strength. A characteristic example appears in an anecdote of the late Adolphe Menzel, the German painter, who at one time was engaged on a work of mural decoration and kept a man posed in an exceedingly fatiguing position on a scaffold for two hours. The great painter worked away, heedless of his model's discomfort. Finally the victim called down, "Herr Professor, how about the recess?"

"Certainly, my dear sir. Come down right away, and you shall have your recess."

As the model was descending from the scaffolding his limbs assumed a position which was one for which the artist had long been looking.

"Stop!" Menzel thundered. "Hold! Ah, fine! Keep that while I make a little sketch of it!"

The artist drew vigorously for half an hour, at the end of which he called out imperatively: "There, that will do for now. Get up on the scaffold again. We have had our recess."

The Town's Crooked Dividing Line.

"There is a reason for most everything," said a Cumberland county man when he was asked how in the world they came to have such a crooked line between two towns in his county. "There's a reason for this crooked line. You see, some of our towns established in pioneer times, when land was abundant and people were few, had a big territory, which was afterward sliced off to make new towns. It was so in the case you mention, and when the cut off was made people along the line of division were of different minds as to which town they wanted to be in. So the legislature drew a straight line between the two parts and then provided that persons dwelling on lands adjoining either side of this line might be in one town or the other, as they should decide within ninety days after passing the act. Some went one way and some the other, and the line was all skewed up to accommodate them."

Boarding Houses, Take Note.

In view of the part that electricity plays in our modern life it is amusing to recall that when Benjamin Franklin evolved the lightning conductor he was called to account by certain individuals for sacrilege in "attempting to divert the Almighty's lightning."

Restaurant proprietors and boarding house keepers have apparently overlooked a valuable hint which Dr. Franklin afforded them, as follows: He took an ancient rooster and killed it by a powerful shock from one of his Leyden jars. When subsequently the bird was served at his table "its flesh was found to be as tender as that of a young partridge," or so he declares. This is one of the discoveries which should make the name of Franklin forever honored.

The Sultan's Kiosks.

In every city of the Ottoman empire there is a kiosk set apart for the sultan, who never even sees it. These palatial abodes are built of rare marbles and finished in fine woods, enameled in silver and gold, with mirrors and lusters from Vienna, mosaics from Florence and Rome, and are nominally guarded by major domos, who live there in royal ease and luxury unparalleled. Hundreds of millions of francs are thus squandered, while not a sou is spent in making roads, fertilizing valleys or constructing ports.

Golden Nose.

Tycho Brahe, the famous Danish mathematician, was known as the "Wizard of the Golden Nose." While at the university he lost his nose in a duel and replaced it with a nasal organ of gold, held in place by cement and a pair of spectacles. This addition to his countenance gave him a very peculiar appearance and caused him to be much feared by the common people, who attributed to him many supernatural powers, largely on account of his remarkable nose.

Tasmanian Girls.

For many years Tasmania has been known as the "Circassia of the colonies," a tribute to the exceptional loveliness of its young women. There have been Tasmanian peeresses, but the pretty Tasmanian girls are mostly in demand as barmaids for Sydney and Melbourne. Some years ago it was elicited in evidence at an official inquiry in Melbourne that Tasmanian barmaids command double the ordinary wages for this kind of work.

Two Goat Islands.

Here is an extraordinary coincidence: The island lying between the American fall and the Canadian fall at Niagara is called Goat Island. What is now called Livingstone island at the Victoria falls in Africa is called Kempongo by the natives, and this signifies "goat island."

Contradicted.

"It's impossible to have too much of a good thing," said the thoughtful thinker.

"Oh, I don't know," rejoined the contrary person. "Matrimony is a good thing, but what the law does to a bigamist is plenty."

This Life.

Says Charles Baudelaire: "This life is a hospital where every patient is possessed with a desire to change his bed. This one would prefer to suffer by the stove, and the other thinks he would recover by the window."

The Indian and the Railroad.

Gail Hamilton said if there never were to be any railroads it would have been an impertinence in Columbus to have discovered America. The Indian's knowledge of the location and direction of the rivers and lakes and of the positions of the portages and his readiness under the right sort of persuasion to put this knowledge at the service of explorers, missionaries and settlers "stood off" this stigma from Columbus before the railways came. Indians guided Captain John Smith, Champlain and La Salle through the wilderness. Indian trails blazed pathways for the pioneers through forests and over mountains. Sometimes these trails were utilized by the railway builders. At the Louisiana Purchase exposition at St. Louis and at the Lewis and Clark fair at Portland were monuments to the heroic Shoshone girl, Sacajawea, who piloted Lewis and Clark across the Rocky mountains and through the wilderness on each side of that range in their exploration of the Pacific.—C. M. Harvey in Atlantic.

Cheapest Place to Live.

"The cheapest place in the world is Antioch," said a globe trotter. "I once passed a winter there, and all it cost me, though I leased a fine house and kept three servants, was $4 a week. Antioch is in Asia, on the Mediterranean. The climate is all right for winter—as good a winter climate as Monte Carlo, Palm Beach or Los Angeles. For my house I paid $5 a month rent. My servants I paid 50 cents a week. Mutton cost 3 cents a pound. Eggs were 2 cents a dozen. Chickens were 5 cents apiece. Fish cost a fifth of a cent a pound. The finest of fresh fruits and vegetables—fresh fruits and vegetables in February—were so cheap that they were not sold in quantity. You got all you wanted for so much a week. All I wanted for my household cost me a quarter weekly. An American resident of Antioch told me that he and his family lived comfortably on $175 a year."

The Danes and Britain.

John Ackworth, an English dialect novelist who made a special study of the dialects of Lancashire, Yorkshire, the east coasts and also of the Danes, shows that the Danes by their early landings and sojournings in England have influenced the language of the east coasts of Britain to an extraordinary degree and that the Danes and the British, in spite of apparent differences, are one practically in speech and language as well as in the relationship of blood. "So strong is the English of the east coasts of England impregnated with Danish," John Ackworth once said, "that I am sure that if a fisherman from the east coasts of England were to be wrecked on the shores of Denmark and he would only speak in his true native dialect that fisherman would be able to make himself understood."

The Christian Era.

The Christian era was suggested or devised by Dionysius Exiguus, a Roman monk, who, in 527, began its use and proposed that all public and private documents should be dated "in the year of our Lord." It did not come into general use in France until the eighth century nor in England until July, 816; in Spain it was not adopted until the eleventh century; in Portugal it was made legal in 1415; in the empire of the east is was established by royal edict in 1453, a few weeks before the fall of Constantinople.

Where Circulation Is Feeblest.

Those who lead a sedentary life find the circulation feeblest about the nose, lips and temples, and those parts of the face should be energetically kneaded several times a day. When the pores become distended the fine, invisible dust in the air enters and clogs and blackens them. Mere ordinary face washing, even when warm water and soap are used, is not sufficient to remove the dirt in the pores, but the vigorous acid of the lemon will cleanse and carry off all such unsightly blemishes.

Care of the Feet.

The feet should be bathed at night, and this treatment is an excellent sleep producer. The water should be salted. The feet should be scrubbed all over with a nailbrush, which will often prevent the formation of corns, while hard spots on the soles may be reduced with a piece of fine emery paper or fine file before the feet are placed in water.

Not Evenly Matched.

"Have you anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon you?" asked the judge.

"Nothing, your honor, except that I hope you will make allowances for the fact that the lawyer who convicted me had a louder voice than the one who defended me."

Flowers.

The instinctive and universal taste of mankind selects flowers for the expression of its finest sympathies, their beauty and their fleetingness serving to make them the most fitting symbols of those delicate sentiments for which language itself seems almost too gross a medium.—Hillard.

A Study In Anatomy.

"Mamma, what part of the body is the trombone?"

"No part of the body, my dear."

"Yes, it is, because it says in the paper here that last night while returning from the symphony concert Professor Gridel fell and broke his trombone."

They say that money does not bring happiness. This is an experiment, however, which every one wishes to try for himself.

Lindsay Lady Shocked

Watchman-Warder: Lindsay is not noted for evil deeds and scenes of horror are the exception here, so that what follows will be easily credited: A certain young lady was watching from an office window the other day, and saw a man minus one leg carried from a stable and placed in a cab. Pretty soon a man followed with a boot in which was the missing leg, and threw it into the cab also. The young lady, believing that foul play was being done, was horrified and fainted dead away. The gentleman of the office hurried to her assistance, and when she was brought to consciousness she told her story. Upon investigation it was discovered that Bob Douglass had broken his wooden leg and was being taken home.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Bridge Street.

"Needless Fears" was the subject discussed last evening by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson. His text was from Genesis, 32nd chapter and 11th verse;

"Deliver me, I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau, for I fear him, lest he will come and smite me and the mother with the children."

During the service Mr. S. R. Burrows sang "The Pilot Song."

Christ Church.

At the evening service, the Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, took as his subject "Confirmation." The text was from 2nd Timothy, 1st chapter and 6th verse;

"Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God, which is in thee, by the putting on of my hands."

St. Michael's.

Large congregations attended services in St. Michael's Church yesterday. Rev. Father Traynor gave a very eloquent sermon at high mass and Rev. Father Twomey gave a sermon at vespers. During the offertory Miss Katie Bawden sang "Light in Darkness," in fine style.

Holloway Street.

The pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, occupied the pulpit at both services yesterday. In the morning his discourse was in reference to the healing of the Centurion's servants, and the text was from St. Matthew, 8th chapter, 5th, 6th and 7th verses. In the evening the service was of especial interest. A number were publicly received as members of the church and the rite of baptism was administered to four girls. The pastor gave a brief address, exhorting those who had made a profession of faith to remain true to the church. The sacrament was administered at the close of the service.

At the Sunday school the Superintendent, Mr. Magrath, was welcomed back, and a collection was taken up for the Jap. Famine Fund.

John Street.

Good congregations were present at both services, which were conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's text was from the 22nd Psalm, 4th verse, and St. Luke, 19th chapter, 41st verse. During the service an anthem entitled, "Sun of My Soul," was rendered, the solo being taken by Miss Gowsell.

St. Andrew's.

At the evening service the pastor's text was from St. John, 1st chapter and 14th verse;

"And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth."

Tabernacle.

The pastor, Rev. Geo. Brown, officiated at both services. In the evening his subject was "Fellowship with God." The text was from St. John, 1st chapter and 3rd verse;

"That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you that ye also may have fellowship with us, and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with His Son, Jesus Christ."

THE JAP. FAMINE.

SOME REASONS WHY AID IS NEEDED IN THE MIKADO'S EMPIRE.

The main and heart-reaching facts of the situation in Japan are these:

Total population suffering	2,820,217
Population starving	958,75
Average rice crop in the three stricken Provinces, bushels	15,239,000
1905 rice crop, bushels	3,410,000

THIS CASE MAY END FATALLY.

YOUNG MAN'S SERIOUS ILLNESS, WHICH BECAME ACUTE AFTER TAKING FREE SAMPLES.

It seems, according to information received from Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer, that, on Friday last, he was called to attend a peculiar case. The particulars are these; Last week free samples of a certain patent medicine were distributed about the streets of this city. A about the streets of this city. A young man named Herbert Greatrix, who lived with his parents on the Cannifton road, his father being a G.T.R. engineer, got hold of one of the samples. It is stated that the young man, who is about 23 years of age, had always been fond of sampling medicines. He thought he would take a dose of the medicine in question, which he did on Wednesday evening. On Thursday morning he was seized with a violent diarrhoea, which suddenly stopped. Then the young man was taken with cramps and vomiting. On Friday the Doctor was called in, as the young fellow appeared to grow steadily worse. On Saturday he was taken to the hospital and yesterday an operation was performed, when it was found that he was suffering with a rupture of the bowels. Last night the Doctor told The Intelligencer that, in his opinion, nothing but a miracle would save the young man's life.

Later developments show, The Intelligencer is informed by a medical man, that young Mr. Greatrix must have been suffering from some form of disease before he took the medicine, which, our medical informant says, brought on what is known as "septic peritonitis." At present the young man has about one chance in 50 of recovery. In justice to the medicine taken, however, it seems only fair to state that it is not believed to be responsible for the serious condition of Mr. Greatrix, though it undoubtedly made the trouble acute.

THOS. KEOGH DEAD.

FORMER BELLEVILLIAN PASSED AWAY AT HIS HOME IN OGDEN, UTAH.

Many of our citizens will remember meeting Mr. Thos. Keogh, a former resident of this city, lately a resident of Ogden, Utah, who, with his brother, was here at the time of the Old Boys' Reunion last summer. A letter received in this city this morning states that Mr. Thomas Keogh is dead. The Keogh boys left here first about 40 years or so ago, and became very successful as cattle men in the western States. The late Mr. Keogh was a Roman Catholic and of Irish descent. He was, in early days, a particular friend of Mr. James Cummins, of this city. Many who met him last summer will regret the demise of "Tom" Keogh, and will be glad to think that the hearty, bluff old fellow was privileged to visit his boyhood's home once more before he died.

A DOG CASE.

Robert Bennett, who resides on Grier street, was charged with having in his possession a dog which Mrs. J. Craddock claims belongs to her. The parties in question have had trouble before on account of this canine. After some evidence had been taken the case was adjourned for a week in order to ascertain from a party living outside of the city who is the rightful owner of the dog.

COAL STRIKE ON.

SUSPENSION OF MINING IS COMPLETE IN ANTHRACITE COAL FIELDS.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Philadelphia, April 2.—Reports received to-day from the anthracite coal fields state that the suspension of mining is complete.

There were a few on the streets in several of the mining towns early in the morning to see if there had been any deserters from the Miners' Union, but none reported for work.

No disturbances were reported from any section of the mining region, and the day had all the appearances of a holiday.

Assizes Reopened

AT 1.30 THIS AFTERNOON — CASE OF SIMMONDS VS. CHOWN NOW BEING PROCEEDED WITH.

The High Court of Justice, presided over by Chief Justice Falconbridge, resumed at 1.30 this afternoon.

His Lordship announced that it would be necessary to get through the business of the Court as expeditiously as possible, as he only had this week to remain here.

SIMMONDS VS. CHOWN.

The case of Simmonds vs. Chown was continued.

Mr. Frank Wilson who was in the witness-box when the court adjourned on Saturday, was recalled. His evidence was principally in reference to the working of the press which injured the plaintiff. He testified that the plunger of the press would not come down if it was not tripped, unless the press was out of gear; then it might come down. Simmonds, witness said, appeared to be a careful operator at the machine. The press was not one that was run continuously; sometimes it would remain idle for a week. The machine had been thoroughly overhauled and re-adjusted since the accident occurred. An unskilled workman would not be able to detect a slight defect of the press. Immediately after the accident the press had to be somewhat readjusted before it was started up again. In order to take the pattern out it was necessary to put a portion of the hand beneath the plunger. The machine was a little hard to "trip."

MR. DAVID VANDERVOORT.

Mr. David Vandervoort testified that he was an engineer of 15 years experience. Worked for the Chown Company some months, being there part of the time when Mr. Simmonds worked there. He knew the draw press, and worked upon it. It was not in good working order, tripping very hard. Witness did not consider the machine safe to work at. He called Mr. Young's attention to it. The press "repeated" itself more than once, which was dangerous, and liable to catch a person's fingers. He used a wire once to take out the moulds, and the machine tripped itself and caught the wire, cutting it in two. Whilst he was operating the machine it once refused to trip. One day Mr. Young was at the machine on three different occasions, endeavoring to get it to work properly. Witness quit working the machine, as he considered it was not safe to do so. Mr. Ramsay worked upon the machine before he (witness) worked it, and he quit working it. Witness considered Mr. Simmonds a careful man.

The cross-examination of this witness was commenced at 2.45.

APRIL FOOL JOKE.

CITIZENS OF ST. JOHN, N. B., WERE VICTIMIZED BY PRACTICAL JOKER.

St. John, N.B., April 1.—The city is laughing to-night over one of the greatest first of April hoaxes ever perpetrated here, the perpetrators and victims of which include some of the most prominent people in St. John.

On Friday last neatly engraved cards were received by many leading citizens, inviting them to attend the launching of a new water boat, built by James Knox, the well-known ship chandler. The ceremony was scheduled to take place shortly after noon to-day, and this was explained by the statement that the highest tides of the month occurred that day. The announcement caused great indignation in the Lord's Day Alliance. Angry letters of protest were received by Mr. Knox, and in Saturday's Globe Canon Richardson, rector of Trinity Church, published a long letter of dignified reproof of such open desecration of the Sabbath. From more than one city pulpit this morning this criticism was indignantly augmented.

All this advertised the launching, and before noon to-day several hundreds assembled at the place announced and waited patiently until the realization of the joke struck them.

Since then everybody but the clergymen who were fooled have been laughing.

"VIRGINIUS."

"Virginius" has always been a favorite play with the public since the days when Forrest in the zenith of his glory first gave us "The Roman Father," then came that grand actor, John McCullough, whose memory is one of the cherished halos around the portals of the National Theatre, and then came "the noblest of them all," Louis James. What a mighty trinity of Roman delineators! Fifty years ago Forrest was the greatest "Virginius," twenty-five years ago John McCullough was the peer of all, and now, the broad and finely proportioned shoulders of Louis James carries their mantle with dignity and distinction. A Step in Advance.

(Toronto Telegram, Ind.)

The Hanna bill is not the proposal of a Government headed by a sincere and convinced prohibitionist.

A Government, headed by a sincere and convinced prohibitionist, would have had its temperance legislation shaped by Hon. Frank Latchford, Hon. A. G. McKay, Hon. Richard Harcourt, and introduced by Hon. G. P. Graham.

A Harcourt-McKay-Latchford license bill would have offered less to the undoubted temperance reform sentiment of Ontario than is offered by Hon. W. J. Hanna.

The Hanna Bill appears to be better legislation; it looks like a longer step in advance than would have been offered or taken by a faint-hearted prohibitionist like Hon. G. W. Ross, at the head of a Government dominated by the bigoted anti-prohibitionists, who always acted as a brake upon the alleged temperance enthusiasm of their honored leader

TO BLOW UP PARLIAMENT.

Plot Discovered at St. Petersburg to Destroy People's Assembly—Democrats Gain In Elections.

London, April 2.—The correspondent at St. Petersburg of The Observer says that a plot has been discovered to blow up the National Parliament with bombs.

Democrats Gain Ground.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—The elections are proceeding slowly. The constitutional Democrats are constantly gaining ground, especially in the second degree city elections. Friday they captured 46 out of 72 delegates. In the landowners assembly they are also forging to the front. During the last three days the delegates elected by the land owners provincial conventions included 23 Constitutional Democrats, 23 other Progressives, three Octobrists, 11 Conservatives and 15 Reactionists. Yaroslov, one of the cities which elects a member of the lower House directly, is the first to complete its elections to the Municipal convention with 75 Constitutional Democrats out of 82 delegates.

The Results So Far.

As near as can be judged, the first degree electors in the seven provinces where elections have been completed show forty-four per cent. members of the party of the Left, that is, Constitutional Democrats, Social Democrats and other Progressives, 29 per cent. of members of the centre, consisting of Octobrists, and the trade and industry party 13 per cent. of the right, made up of the law and order party and autocrats, and 14 per cent. unclassified.

A comparison of the classes of races of the second degree electors with the first degree electors chosen by them as delegates to the provincial congress shows a significant diminution of the peasant element in the process of the passing to the final stage.

To-day the City of St. Petersburg will choose electors to the Municipal Congress, which in turn will elect six members to the National Parliament. Business will be suspended.

All Candidates Arrested.

Odessa, April 2.—On the eve of the preliminary elections among the workmen of 66 factories all the candidates were arrested because they displayed too liberal tendencies.

Tartars and Armenians Cause Intervention of Troops.

Elizabethpol, Caucasus, April 2.—A renewal of the Tartar-Armenian war, accompanied by revolutionary activity, has compelled the intervention of the troops.

The local authorities have seized a number of machine guns and over 500 rifles.

84 Mutineers Acquitted.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—The naval court-martial Saturday acquitted 84 of the 207 men who mutinied at Kronstadt in November, 1905. Nine of the remainder were sentenced to penal servitude. The others were deprived of civil rights and sentenced to terms of imprisonment varying from one to four years, or to enrolment in disciplinary battalions.

Women Ill-Treated.

St. Petersburg, April 2.—M. Bolkovadze, a prominent Georgian writer, has made an appeal to Russian women in behalf of women of his own race, who, he says, are being ruthlessly violated by the brutal soldiery engaged in the pacification of the ancient Kingdom of Georgia. The troops, he says, do not even respect age, eight-year-old girls and old women being forced to minister to their lust.

McINTOSH BROS.

ANGLO-SAXON AMITY

Earl Grey Says In It Lies the Hope of the World.

Guest of New York Pilgrims, Our Governor-General Speaks of Good Feeling Existing Between the Two Nations—Part He Is Personally Playing to Bring It About Set Forth by Ex-Ambassador Choate.

New York, April 2.—There was a distinguished gathering at the dinner in honor of His Excellency Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, by the Pilgrims of the United States, at the Waldorf-Astoria Saturday night. There were about 400 seated at the tables. The boxes were filled with women spectators. Among them were Countess Grey and her party.

Those at the guests' table were: Morris K. Jesup, Earl Grey, Governor Higgins, Archbishop Farley, Horace Porter, Elihu Root, Joseph H. Choate, Hon. Sir F. W. Borden, Count Gleichen, Robt. Bacon, Robert Shaw Oliver, Col. Hanbury Williams, Major-Gen. Grant, Lieutenant-Governor Bruce, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, ex-Mayor Low, Sir Caspar Purden Clarke, Samuel Clemens, Rear Admiral Coghlan, J. G. Carlisle, George C. Holt, Major-Gen. James F. Wade, Rev. H. M. McCracken, Controller Metz, Police Commissioner Bingham, Capt. F. E. C. Ryan, T. F. Darrell, St. George's Society Provost Charles C. Harrison, Postmaster Willcox, Rev. J. Silverman, Dr. John H. Finley and Robert Fraser Munro, St. Andrew's Society.

Earl Grey arrived, in company with his host, Joseph H. Choate. Mr. Choate presided. An invocation was delivered by Archbishop Farley. To add to the international aspect of the dinner, stands of small British flags were entwined on each of the tables.

The toast, "The President and the King," was drunk standing, while the orchestra played "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "God Save the King."

Then came a toast to "The Right Honorable Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada," to which the earl responded.

Incident of the War.

In introducing Earl Grey, Mr. Choate said:

"It was a remote ancestor of his—his great-grandfather, Major-General Charles Grey, who became the first earl—that I wish to speak of, because his experience in America furnishes us with an incident which ought to give satisfaction to all American people. Sir Charles was in possession of Franklin's home in Philadelphia, at one time during the revolutionary war. In the confusion of their departure, a fine portrait of Franklin disappeared. Franklin himself was in Paris, forming that conquering alliance with France. I suppose the British regarded the picture as a suitable capture, since they could not get him. How the picture got to England nobody can tell, but it came into the first Lord Grey's possession, and has hung for 130 years in the Grey ancestral hall as a precious heirloom. And now Lord Grey, in full recognition of the desire for harmony and friendship, has decided to restore to the United States as a free-will offering this portrait, and a month ago he wrote to President Roosevelt, making the formal presentation. It is hoped that the portrait will reach Philadelphia in time for the celebration there next month."

Earl Grey's Speech.

Earl Grey said in part:

"I am aware that this magnificent banquet is the eloquent expression of your desire to emphasize and if possible promote the good relations already existing between the United Kingdom, the self-governing nations of the British Empire and the United States. That same desire also possesses and completely fills my heart."

After paying a graceful tribute to American ambassadors he had known in England, and expressing an appreciation of America and its people, Earl Grey continued:

"Mr. Choate has referred in a manner that I much appreciate, to my restoration to you of the picture which for 130 years has been the most honored and most interesting possession in my English home. Why do I restore the picture? Because I love the American people, because my sense of equity tells me that there are higher laws than the law of possession, and because I believe that neither England nor America can fulfill their high mission to themselves or to the world, unless we approach the consideration of every problem affecting our relation to each other, not from the narrow selfish and provincial standpoint of what America and England can each of them do for themselves alone, but from the higher standpoint of what we all can do for England, America and the world.

Canada's Development.

"Mr. Choate chaffed us the other day at Ottawa with that kindly humor in which he so pre-eminently excels, for the modesty which has caused every Canadian from the Prime Minister to the youngest enfranchised citizen of the Dominion, to believe that if the 19th century belonged to the United States, the 20th century belongs to Canada. Yes, gentlemen, this is the stimulating faith of the people whom I represent. Any idea of the possible annexation of Canada by the United States is scouted by us as an impossibility as great as you would regard the annexion of the United States by Canada."

The earl then spoke of the part Canada played in the upbuilding of the United States, saying there are 2,827,000 persons of Canadian birth or descent in the United States, and that French-Canadians were the founders of Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburg, New Orleans, Detroit, St. Paul and Milwaukee.

Hope of the World.

Continuing, he said: "To those of us who believe that in the coming solidarity and unification of the Anglo-Saxon race lie the future peace and hope of the world, the signs of the times are most encouraging.

"The forces of the world are slowly but steadily drifting in this direction. Let it be our privilege in our generation to do nothing to prevent the flow of these currents, which, if uninterrupted, will one day course together in the mingled waters of one mighty and irresistible river.

"The peoples of the United Kingdom, of the self-governing nations of the British Empire and of the United States are joint trustees for the protection and expansion of that Anglo-Saxon civilization which carries in its development the hope of future peace and the realization of the highest ideals attainable on earth. Every year our joint responsibility to mankind and to future ages for the way in which we now administer our sacred trust grows in fulness and importance.

Desire Accord.

"There are several questions outstanding between the Dominion of Canada and the United States which have been left open too long, and which call for settlement. Both Governments desire to take advantage of the opportunity which the present feeling of amity between the two countries affords, and I am persuaded that the hearts of the two peoples on both sides of the frontier will be glad when their respective Governments have given effect to their desires.

"It is the proud mission of the Anglo-Saxon race to maintain in advance the cause of civilization throughout the world, England thankfully recognizes your desire to co-operate with her in this beneficial work, and the knowledge that the Stars and Stripes and the flag of England stand in the gateways of the world, as on these walls, their varying colors draped together fold within fold, as the joint emblems of freedom, righteousness and duty may make us all proud, first, that we have a big duty to perform to the world, and, secondly, that so long as we are true to each other and to ourselves we shall have the strength as well as the will to accomplish the noble purpose of our joint and splendid destiny."

NO BAIL FOR PHILLIPS.

Counsel Prepared to Offer Any Amount, But Magistrate Declined to Grant Bail Under Any Circumstances.

Toronto, April 2.—Joseph Phillips, president of the defunct York County Loan, spent Sunday "over the Don" in accordance with the decree of Magistrate Denison, given at Saturday's sitting of the Police Court.

J. E. Jones, counsel for Phillips, was prepared to offer any amount for his freedom, but the magistrate refused to accept bail under any circumstances.

Phillips appeared in the dock with the other prisoners.

A doctor's certificate produced, stating that Miss Lillian Hudson was ill and unable to attend the session of the court, was declared unsatisfactory by Crown Attorney Curry.

"Perhaps there will be a more satisfactory one on hand before Monday," suggested Magistrate Denison.

The Crown Attorney's attention was confined to an endeavor to find out about the secret deposits in banks or in safe deposit vaults belonging to Joseph Phillips. Miss Georgina Hudson, however, declared that she knew nothing about them, and was of the opinion that her sister, who occupied a joint position with her, knew nothing. The investigation will continue along this line daily, according to Mr. Curry, until he comes across satisfactory evidence.

Ohio Inheritance Tax Killed.

London, April 2.—Ten fires daily was approximately last year's average in London, according to the annual report of the fire brigade, issued Saturday.

Costliest Building in the Country.

Which is the costliest building in America? Would you answer offhand the New York state capitol at Albany? Hardly. Your thoughts would turn more likely to the national capitol at Washington or to the Congressional library. But the New York state capitol cost more than the national capitol and the library of congress together. The Empire State capitol cost $24,000,000, while the one at Washington, two acres larger, cost only $12,000,000 and the Congressional library only $7,000,000. Our Empire State capitol cost as much as the nation paid for all Florida and the Philippines combined. —Gilson Willets in Leslie's Weekly.

The Art of Forgetting.

I have heard men and women say, "I could be happy now if I could only forget the past." Be kind to yourself and "forget it." Do not try to do so in a labored, strenuous way, but gently suggest to yourself a dozen times a day if necessary that you are happy in the "eternal now" and not burdened down with disagreeable thoughts of the past. In learning the "art of forgetting" you will form the wholesome habit of remembering things worth knowing and thereby bring harmony, peace and contentment into your life.—M. J. Lorimer in Suggestion.

Followed Instructions.

A lady going from home for the day locked everything up carefully and for the grocer's benefit left a card on the back door.

"All out. Don't leave anything," it read.

On her return she found her house ransacked and all her choicest possessions gone. To the card on the door was added, "Thanks. We haven't left much."

Had to Creep.

"Why do you say 'A blush crept over the face of the fair plaintiff?'" asks the editor.

"Because," explains the society editor, "there was so much powder on her face the blush had to creep or else it would raise too much dust!"

COAL MINERS STRIKE

400,000 Men Refuse to Work in the American Pits.

America's Coal Production Has Practically Ceased — Mitchell Predicts That There Will Be a Stampede of Operators to Sign the 1903 Wage Scale—Some Have Already Done So, and Whose Mines Are Now Working.

Indianapolis, April 2.—With the dawn this morning America witnessed the beginning of the greatest industrial strike in its history. Official orders already have been issued, which in effect will close the coal mines of the country.

Of the 600,000 men employed in and around the coal mines in the United States approximately 400,000 will refuse to enter the shafts. About one-half of the remaining number will report for duty, only to perform such labor as will prevent a destruction of property. The actual production of coal practically will be stopped.

Minimized as the effects of the suspension have been by the decision of the United Mine Workers of America to work for any mine owner who is willing to pay the scale of wages in force in 1903, still the struggle is stupendous in its proportions.

The duration of the suspension in its entirety is problematical. Even more so is the effect it may have on the industrial prosperity of the country. It is certain that there is no immediate danger of a shortage of coal. That is improbable within sixty days.

Hard Coal Talk Tuesday.

Tuesday morning a meeting will be held in New York between the committee of anthracite operators headed by George F. Baer and a committee of miners headed by John Mitchell. It is impossible to predict what the result of that conference may be and on it depends the question of whether the suspension of mining in the anthracite fields will be temporary or whether the struggle shall be to a finish.

While present indications point to a protracted strike in the anthracite fields, it is believed that the suspension will be of short duration in the bituminous states. When the miners decided to permit work where the advanced scale was offered it virtually put Western Pennsylvania out of the strike column. The suspension there perhaps will not last three days, and will not take the form of a strike.

Operators to Stampede.

In private conversations, President Mitchell is reported as predicting a stampede of operators to sign the scale.

To Resume Tuesday.

Pittsburg, April 2.—The mines will be closed Monday, but all the works of the Pittsburg Coal Co. will resume operations on Tuesday. It is believed that a majority of the independent operators will eventually sign the 1903 scale.

Agree on Scale.

Louisville, Ky., April 2.—Coal miners and operators of Western Kentucky Saturday agreed on a wage scale, and there will be no strike in district No. 23. The agreement is for the 1903 scale, and the contract is to continue until March 31, 1908.

Will Pay Scale.

Altoona, Pa., April 2.—The Berwind-White Coal Mining Co., at Windber, has posted notices that it would pay the 1903 rate of wages.

5,000 Go Back.

Nelsonville, Ohio, April 2.—Eight thousand miners in the Hocking Valley suspended work Friday night, but about 5,000 resume work, as the operators can sign the 1903 scale.

Encouraging Signs.

Pittsburg, April 2.—Despatches from the soft coal fields last night indicate almost a general announcement from the operators of Western Pennsylvania to pay the miners the advance of 5.55 per ton called for in the restoration of the scale of 1903.

[illegible]KERS FIGHT CAVALRY.

Disturbances In French Coal Fields Again Become Serious.

Paris, April 2.—The miners strike throughout the coal region in the north has again assumed serious proportions. Many riotous scenes were enacted Saturday when the cavalry repeatedly charged with strikers, injuring many of them. The troops also suffered severely. A large reinforcement has been distributed at the centre of disturbances.

The strikers are estimated at 39,000 and divided into bands of 500 to 2,000 are parading the region and threatening workmen who refuse to join them. Many of the bands carry red flags.

They have sought several times to drive the cavalry into the barbed wire entanglements.

SOLDIERS RELIVED.

Winnipeg's Stormy Riot Seems Ended For the Time Being.

Winnipeg, April 2.—The city yesterday assumed its normal condition after the stormy scenes of three days. The soldiers were relieved from service Saturday night.

The company have announced that it will decide at a meeting this morning as to whether it is willing to accept the men's demands, now that they have agreed not to ask for recognition of the union.

Ralph Connor and Principal Patrick presented the men's latest proposition to the company Saturday evening, holding a session until nearly midnight.

If the company refuse either to accede to the men or to arbitrate, scenes even more violent than those of last week will be enacted if an attempt is made to run cars, as the feeling of citizens is with the men.

Louis Christianson, the Chicago professional strike-breaker, imported by the company to direct the campaign against the strike, was arrested late Saturday night for assaulting Magnus Smith, champion chess player of Canada.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES

Those Coming May Admit Arch. Campbell to the Cabinet.

Hon. Wm. Paterson Slated For Senate Leadership—Probable Early Retirement of Sir Richard Cartwright and Hon. R. W. Scott—A Quiet Day in the House — Telephone Committee Discontinued For Good.

Ottawa, April 3.—Cabinet changes are talked about, especially in Ontario. The one first to come off, so the report goes, is the retirement of Sir Richard Cartwright and Hon. R. W. Scott from the Government, and at least one of them from the Senate, and the promotion of Hon. Wm. Paterson to the Senate as a Government leader there. This would let Arch. Campbell of Centre York into the Cabinet as the new Minister from Ontario.

Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill respecting the better observance of the Lord's Day comes up for a second reading to-day.

The House was only in session for two hours yesterday, and the proceedings were quite devoid of interest. Alexander C. Ross-[illegible]w member for (North Cape B[illegible] Victoria) was introduced [illegible]ifrid Laurier and Alex. John[illegible]th Cape Breton).

'P[illegible]nquiry Ended.

Mr. Emm[illegible]on, Minister of Railways and Canals, in answer to a question by Mr. Baker (Hamilton), admitted that he was a stockholder and formerly an officer of the New Brunswick Petroleum Co. Matthew Lodge of Moncton is secretary of the company.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated in reply to Mr. MacDonnell (South Toronto) that the telephone committee of last session would not be continued nor will a new committee be appointed.

In reply to several questions the announcement was made by the Minister of Customs that no official notice had as yet been received as to the changes in the German tariff effective March 1.

$100,000 For Winnipeg Press.

Hon. Mr. Oliver, Minister of the Interior, gave some figures as to the amounts paid by his department during the past five years to The Winnipeg Free Press and Der Nordwester Publishing companies. They aggregate about $100,000.

The act to incorporate the Woman's Art Association of Canada was read a second time yesterday.

The G. T. P. Contracts.

The tenders and awards re the building of the two sections of the Grand Trunk Pacific were reported by the National Transcontinental Commission to the Minister of Railways, and will be announced, it is said, to-day.

Railways Lose Tax Cases.

Washington, April 3.—The Supreme Court of the United States decided the Michigan railroad tax cases, involving the taxes of all the railroads in that state for several years past, against the railroads.

Hard Coal Miners Out.

Both Sides Are, However, Hopeful of Conference.

Conciliatory Spirit In Evidence—Soft Coal Operators are Readily Signing 1903 Scale—100,000 Soft Coal Miners Have Already Been Granted Their Scale, and President Mitchell Says 80 Per Cent. Will Get It.

New York, April 3.—The eve of the second meeting of the committees representing the anthracite mine workers and their employers finds the situation, so far as the hard coal fields are concerned, unchanged from that disclosed in the communications that have passed between the contending forces, which have been made public.

Both sides are hopeful, however, and there is a feeling among those vitally interested in the struggle that some way out of the present difficulty will be found. This feeling is based on the fact that each side has only played its first card, and that the real negotiations have not yet begun.

Only One Colliery Working Full.

Rumors that thousands of men would not obey the suspension order have proved groundless. The district leaders report that the only colliery working full handed is the People's Coal Companies Oxford operation, in the northern field, which is run almost exclusively by non-union men.

President Mitchell, who arrived yesterday, said that more than 100,000 soft coal miners have already been granted the 1903 scale, and predicted that by the end of the week fully 80 per cent. of the bituminous workers will have been given the advance. He thought that within 45 days every soft coal mine, where the men are organized, will be working on a union basis.

Not For Long.

Indianapolis, April 3.—Information received so far at the national headquarters of the United Mine Workers of America last night indicate that the strike of soft coal miners will not be extensive for any length of time, many operators already having expressed a willingness to grant the miners' demands.

ALL QUIET AT WINNIPEG.

Firms Charged With Threatening Volunteers On Strike Duty.

Winnipeg, Man., April 3.—The feature of yesterday's strike situation was a charge brought by officers of the 90th Regiment against J. H. Ashdown Hardware Co., Hudson Bay Co. and Stovel Printing Co. with having threatened men in their employ and members of regiment who were on strike duty with expulsion from service if they should fail to report for work on Saturday morning.

A car was burned in St. Boniface yesterday afternoon at 5.30. The city council decided at a stormy session late last night to go to the company in a body to-day and ask for arbitration.

Street cars were running without disturbance until 6 p.m. yesterday, when the service was discontinued and a settlement has not been reached.

FALLS 70 FEET DOWN SHAFT.

Upsetting of Bucket In Mine Results in One Fatality.

Madoc, April 2.—Peter Jarvis of Kellar's Bridge was killed yesterday afternoon in the American Madoc Mining Co.'s Mundic mine, near Bannockburn.

Five men were being brought up the shaft in the bucket. When near the top the cable caught on something tipping the bucket over sideways. Jarvis and Jack Pressick of Cordova fell out. The latter fell about 35 feet, lighting on a piece of timber unhurt. Jarvis fell seventy feet to the bottom of the shaft. He lived about ten minutes.

The other three occupants caught hold of the cable till the bucket righted itself again.

Jarvis was foreman of the min. He leaves a wife and one child.

Killed By Explosion.

Kenora, April 3.—As a result of the premature explosion of shot at Stewart's Camp at Riddell, east of Hawk Lake, Peter Magnusson was injured so badly that he died shortly afterwards, and A. Johnson is not expected to survive.

Boy Has Arm Shot Off.

Listowel, April 3.—Last night about 10 o'clock, while some boys about 15 years of age, were out shooting muskrats along the river, Ross Grant, son of J. R. Grant, assignee, had his left arm shot off below the elbow by the accidental discharge of a gun carried by one of his companions.

Scalded by Lard.

Jordan, April 3.—On Saturday afternoon, while playing around a stove, the three-year-old son of Frank Nunnamaker upset a pail of boiling lard upon itself, scalding the child from head to foot.

Gas Explosion In Galt.

Galt, April 3.—A gas explosion which might have resulted seriously to John Scott, plumber, and which caused him painful injuries, occurred in W. A. Hunter's bakery. Scott was endeavoring to turn up the gas, by which the huge ovens are heated, when the explosion occurred. The whole end of the building, which is of brick, was driven several feet from the roof. Scott was burned about the face, hands and arms and lost most of his hair.

Blown From Fast Train.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 3.—While a westbound Lake Shore freight train was speeding along near Amherst, Ohio, early yesterday, a crown sheet of the locomotive exploded and blew the firemen and head brakeman out of the cab. They were badly scalded and otherwise injured, and the fireman will probably die.

Burglar Fired at Curious Boys.

Kingston, April 3.—Three boys were passing McGowan's cigar factory, on Rideau street, about midnight, when they saw a short set man prowling about. They proceeded to investigate, and the man told them to make tracts, and fired his revolver three times. The lads fled. The factory was burglarized. Some 450 cigars were taken, as well as the bookkeeper's revolver.

Not Guilty.

Philadelphia, April 3.—Walter Wood and Stuart Wood, members of the firm of R. D. Wood & Co., iron manufacturers of this city, were found not guilty in the United States court here yesterday of accepting a rebate on a shipment to Winnipeg. The amount of the alleged rebate was $1,230.59.

Sugar Duties Stay.

London, April 3.—In the House of Lords yesterday Lord Denman (Liberal), replying for the Government, said the Ministers would not agree to a reduction in the excise duty on sugar in case a beet sugar industry is not started in Great Britain.

Threaten General Strike.

Warsaw, Russian Poland, April 3.—The revolutionists here have announced their intention to declare a general strike to prevent the Government from contracting a new loan.

The Postmaster-General.

Some idea of how the new Postmaster-General, Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, is performing his duties may be gathered from the facts brought out one evening recently, when the new Postmaster-General was under fire during a night sitting of the Commons. Col. Sam Hughes directly charged him with suppressing important facts in his possession regarding the removal of the postmaster at Cannington. Indeed, cases arise like this almost daily. This removal was made on the ground that the postmaster was engaging in the grocery business and Mr. Fowler and others have not been slow to point out that Hon. Aylesworth, while a minister of the crown, is actively engaged in the private practice of his profession. Mr. Hughes flatly denied that the postmaster was engaged in business and insisted that full documentary proof of that fact had been for several days in the possession of the Postmaster-General. He made some cutting references to the latter's connection with the Gamey case amid cheers from the Opposition. Mr. Aylesworth treats proper questions from the Conservative side with an indifference amounting to disrespect and seems to imagine that he can treat the Conservatives in the same cavalier fashion as the Ross Administration did. Mr. Clements brought up the Cannington case and compared it with the situation and conduct of the postmaster at Leamington. This officer received $1,200 as against $900 received by the postmaster at Cannington and enjoys besides a multiplicity of local offices that require considerable time and bring in considerable money. He is police magistrate, collector of water rates, secretary and treasurer of the school board, etc. As to many enquiries the honorable gentleman was compelled to admit that he had never heard of the post offices. He had read about Thessalon in the papers, but was unable to furnish any information about the investigation. With such facts as the above before them the public can judge for themselves why graft is rampant at Ottawa, and why the national expenditure has risen by millions.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The rate of taxation this year, it will be seen by reference to the Council proceedings, is likely to be the same as last year, namely, 25 1-2 mills.

• • •

The action of Ald. Panter and Cooper, in protesting against the appropriation proposed to be meted out to them, is certainly commendable. Not that we wish to pose as advocates of extravagance, but if those gentlemen think they cannot properly perform the duties expected of them with the amount named by Ald. Marsh, then this is the time for them to complain and let the facts be known. The Fire Committee is one which in the interests of public safety, must not be stinted, and as for Public Works, Ald. Panter has a record as Chairman of that committee which leads one to believe that he knows what he is talking about. Let us not, whatever we do be penny wise and pound foolish

• • •

The Salary Committee has labored, and some civic servants are probably of the opinion that little more than a mouse was brought forth.

• • •

True to his word, Ald. Panter gave notice of a motion to repeal the Dog by-law. Whatever is passed in its place, it is to be hoped it may be carried out; then there might be no need for extreme measures, which punish the innocent for the guilty.

This long session of the Assize Court is liable to leave the County rather short of change when the bills are paid.

• • •

And that reminds us that Chief Justice Falconbridge delivered himself of a few remarks to a jury last week which might well be taken to heart by many people. It seemed unfortunate for many lawyers' clients and the country, His Lordship said, that practically trivial cases should be allowed to take up the time of such an expensive tribunal as the High Court of Justice, when there were much less expensive courts which could decide them.

• • •

So far as "cross roads slander cases" (as His Lordship called them), were concerned, he believed it would be cheaper for the province to set aside a fund out of which to pay damages to the plaintiffs in such cases, rather than allow them to go to trial at the High Court, with all its heavy attendant expenses. The county would, in all probability, save by such a plan in the long run. Very few people, who give the subject a moment's thought, but will admit that there is more truth than poetry in the Chief Justice's remarks.

It was stated by the Crown Attorney in Toronto that Mr. Joseph Phillips, of York Loan notoriety, is worth at least $150,000. This alone, if true, may cause many hasty people to have a peculiar opinion of Mr. Phillips, who does not seem to have been such an unselfish friend of the widow and the orphan as some of his glib-tongued agents made credulous people believe.

• • •

There is evidently some manoeuvring to secure to the favorite ones the contracts for the construction of a large portion of the G. T. Pacific Railway. UNEQUALLED SERVICE.

In all the world over, among all the railways of all nations, there is one line whose service stands pre-eminent—The Lake Shore Railway. Luxurious comfort, speed, safety, punctuality, personal attention and service, have here reached their highest development. Lake Shore trains run on time and when connections are to be made the schedule is so arranged that long waits and delays are avoided. In a word, here is a railway whose service in every respect leaves nothing to be desired. Travellers of experience know this to be so and all are careful to see that their tickets read "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway." You can obtain full information by addressing J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N. Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, O., or W. J. Lynch, Passenger Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

Simmonds vs. Chown

CASE WAS GIVEN TO THE JURY AT TWO O'CLOCK THIS AFTERNOON.

Cross-examined yesterday afternoon, Mr. David Vandervoort said that Mr. Young would fix the press whenever he was requested to do so. The workmen were forewarned when they went to operate the various presses in the factory. Did not think that the cutting of a wire would affect the die. Witness would not place his whole hand under the well to take out the model, as there was danger of getting the band or fingers caught.

MR. THOMAS RAMSAY.

Mr. Thos. Ramsay swore that he was at one time in the employ of the Chown Co., and worked at the draw press nearly all the time he was there. Mr. Young was foreman at the time. The press was shaky when he worked it, not being in the best of condition. There was trouble at times with the trip. He would sometimes have to trip the machine twice in order to make it move once. This occurred quite a few times. The machine had to be fixed a great many times whilst he was working it. Simmonds was working for the company when witness was. The machine broke twice whilst witness was operating it and the breaks were repaired. Heard Mr. Young say once the machine was pretty well played out.

Cross-examined—Found Mr. Young a good foreman, and always willing to do what he could for the men. The instructions were to keep the foot off the trip when not working the press. Would not think it proper to place the hand under the machine when taking out a model.

WILLIAM HULLEY.

Wm. Hulley testified that he was at one time an employee of the Chown Company, and was working there when Mr. Simmonds was injured. About two weeks after the accident witness worked the machine; had also worked a similar machine at Kemp's establishment at Toronto. The machine which caused the accident was, to his mind, not an altogether safe machine.

WM. H. EARLE.

Wm. H. Earle swore he was a millwright residing in Belleville. He examined the machine at the Chown establishment on the 23rd of March. He noticed the coil spring attached to the dog, and it would have the effect of allowing the dog to release itself, which would have the tendency to allow the dog to move sidewise.

Cross-examined — Never worked a press and never repaired one. It appeared to work well on the day he saw it.

This concluded the case for the plaintiff.

A NONSUIT REFUSED.

Mr. O'Flynn contended that a case had not been made out and asked for a non-suit. In the case of Holden vs. G.T.R. the plaintiff sued for damages for injuries, and it was shown that he had broken the rule, thus causing an accident to the plaintiff. In this case he argued that Simmonds had broken the rule.

His Lordship thought the case should go to the jury.

LESTER YOUNG.

Mr. Lester Young was the first witness for the defence. He said he was foreman of the press room of the Chown establishment. Had been for eight years in the employ of the firm. He had run and adjusted the draw press in question. Simmonds had worked the draw press some six months. Witness had instructed plaintiff as to the working of the press, and impressed upon him the necessity of taking his foot off the trip. Witness told plaintiff not to place his hand so far under the plunger as he did and he made no reply. When the plaintiff complained to the witness that the trip was working hard, he (witness) found that it worked a little hard. The first intimation he had of the accident was when the power was shut off, and he was told that Simmonds had lost his fingers. After the accident the press appeared to work all right. No change of any consequence had been made to the press since the accident, not even to the tripping apparatus. If the trip worked hard witness did not think it was a bad fault. The plunger, in his mind, would not come down unless it was tripped. The plaintiff was not following instructions at the time of the accident.

Cross-examined—If plaintiff had followed instructions he could not have been injured. Other workmen had been caught in this machine. Witness did not believe the witnesses who swore that the machine had to be attended to two or three times in an afternoon. Three men had been caught in this machine and it was the fault of the operators. Witness was of the opinion that Simmonds was a reckless workman. Did not know of any workman using a wire to take out the moulds. The usual way was to take the moulds out with the thumb and finger.

Re-examined—Frank Dowzer, had his finger caught in this machine, but he was fooling at the time. Harry Bawden, jr., had his finger caught on account of a rag being on his finger.

W. C. SPRINGER.

Mr. W. C. Springer testified that he saw the press which caused the accident, after it occurred. Witness had had considerable experience in presses similar to the one in question. The tripping apparatus of this machine he found in first-class order. He thought the machine was safe at half-clutch. Sideways was not a proper position for a person to be in when working such a machine; he should be squarely in front of the machine.

Cross-examined—If the machine was working properly there would be no danger if a person placed his hand under the plunger to take out a mould. If a machine did repeat itself it should be immediately attended to. He had no idea what would make the machine repeat itself, unless there was pressure upon the treadle or the clutch was broken.

H. GREENLEAF.

Mr. H. Greenleaf, sworn, said he was a machinist and had had considerable experience. He had seen the press in question and examined it, especially the tripping parts, which were in good repair and worked all right. The dog touched the clutch all right and operated the machine.

Cross-examined—Saw the machine a few days ago. Did not know what condition the machine was in at the time of the accident. If the machine did repeat it would be evidence that the dog and clutch were not working properly together.

GEO. McCARTHY.

Mr. Geo. McCarthy said that a mechanic named Kennedy had made some repairs to the machine in question. Kennedy was an employee of the witness'. Witness conducted the Walker foundry.

Cross-examined—The frame work of the machine was broken. Could not tell what condition the machine was in when the accident occurred.

Court adjourned until 9.30 Tuesday morning.

Court opened at 9.30 this morning.

WM. IRVINE.

Wm. Irvine was the first witness and testified that he was an employee of the Chown Company, as engineer. Knew Mr. Simmonds and remembered the day he was injured. Witness and the plaintiff set the press. Heard Mr. Young give Simmonds instructions as to taking out the moulds, namely, by the thumb and first finger. On Monday, the day of the accident, witness had to tighten the brake twice, as it appeared to trip a little hard. He thought the machine was all right, and thought that no accident would have occurred if care had been exercised.

MR. W. W. CHOWN.

Mr. W. W. Chown testified that the first intimation he had of the accident was when Simmonds ran out of the gangway from the factory. He evidently went to a doctor. Witness, shortly after the accident occurred, saw the press at work and it appeared to work all right. He was not aware that the machine was working wrong.

This concluded the evidence.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn then addressed the jury on behalf of his client, alleging that the plaintiff in the case was injured through carelessness on his own part, and through no fault of the defendant.

Mr. Porter, for the plaintiff, declared that the plaintiff had used all necessary precaution and that the machine he was operating was defective at the time of the accident. He appealed to the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff and assess substantial damages for the loss of his client's fingers.

His Lordship's charge to the jury was brief, being chiefly on points of law bearing on the case.

The case was given to the jury about 2 o'clock this afternoon. Shortly after 3 they came out and asked that certain evidence be read over to them.

A verdict had not been reached when we went to press.

When the State Fixed Hotel Prices.

Before, during and for a time after the Revolutionary war the courts of the commonwealth used to fix the prices of tavern board and liquor, so when the sojourning stranger from afar struck Richmond he could pretty nearly know what "horse feed and breakfast" cost. There was also an assize of bread as well as of drink. The price of bread was regulated by the price of wheat. A fourpenny white loaf, a twopenny white loaf, a fourpenny brick loaf and a fourpenny brown loaf had each to weigh so much, according as they had other ingredients mixed with flour. In those days a "Boston biscuit" costing 1 cent had to weigh six ounces and two drams and so on. The connection between a loaf of bread and sixty pounds of wheat at so much per bushel has grown beyond the grasp of the modern mind. However, in the old time in Virginia the custom of regulating the price, or, rather, the weight, of a loaf of bread by the price of the wheat of which it was made was universal. So far as liquor was concerned, the courts used to fix not only the price of a single drink, a quart or a gallon of the stuff, but also "a gorum of punch."

Mrs. Dougherty, who resides on the corner of Wharf and Church streets, through her solicitor, Mr. W. Carnew, applied for an indictment against the city before the present Assize, asking that the city be compelled to abate a nuisance, at present existing, by reason of refuse from the gas works.

Mr. Mikel on behalf of the corporation, asked a stay of proceedings on the ground that the corporation could not properly prepare their defence in so short a time. The city, he said, agrees and undertakes to abate the nuisance by all possible means.

The court decided that the complainant should accept the city's undertaking, and if it is not carried out prepare charges for the June session of the County Court.

JUSTIFIES A MURDER.

BELIEVES THAT ACT WAS NOT IMPROPER.

Montreal, April 2.—In his evidence given at the trial of Bernard Reauconet for the murder of Johnny Rainville, Rev. Father Hudon, parish priest of St. Prospere, was asked to give his opinion of the man who had been killed.

"Johnny Rainville," he replied, "had the reputation of being an infamous corruptionist, a blasphemer and a drunkard."

"Reverend sir," asked the lawyer, "according to religion, Reauconet was justified in killing Rainville?"

"Under the circumstances and in Reauconet's state of mind at the time I consider that he was justified in doing what he did."

An Exciting Adventure With a Maori Chieftain.

Mr. Becke, the author of "Notes From My South Sea Log," tells of his tutor, who seemed to him the most heroic man in the world because he had been through the first Maori war and because of an adventure which there befell him, and which is given as follows:

Poor Guy—such was the tutor's name—was a lieutenant, and he and two companies were captured by the Maoris. They were taken inside the stockade, and the chief, taking up one of the captured seamen's cutlasses, felt its edge and then fixed his keen eyes on the young officer's face.

"I shall not harm these two men of yours," he said slowly. "They shall go safely back to your lines if"— He paused, and a grim smile distorted his tattooed face.

"If what?" asked Guy calmly.

"If you will stretch out your right hand so that I may cut it off at the wrist swiftly, no further harm shall come to you, and you, too, shall go free."

"Will you keep your word?"

"Aye. I, Te Atua Wera, am no liar."

Guy nodded, quietly took off his coat and held out his left hand.

"Strike," he said.

The chief again smiled. "Thou art as cunning as thou art brave. I said the right hand."

Guy let fall his left and extended his right arm. Te Atua Wera stepped back a pace, raised the cutlass—and struck the point of it into the ground. Then he bent forward and gravely rubbed noses with Guy.

"Go," he said, "but come back no more." So Guy and the two sailors were allowed to return to Despard's lines unharmed.

SHORT LIVED DOCTORS.

Diseases, Which Are Most Deadly to the Medical Profession.

The diseases which claim the most victims among physicians relatively to all males are gout and diabetes, and there is a high relative mortality from diseases of the nervous system, circulatory system and kidneys, says the Scientific American.

From the nature of his habits the physician is not subject to accidents, and, though he is brought into contact with infection to a greater extent than other men, his preventive means are successful and his mortality from infection is very low. Freedom from prolonged muscular strains and high blood tension apparently saves him from arteriosclerosis, but suicide claims many and so do the drug habits acquired by the nervously exhausted. It has been said that three-fourths of French morphine users are physicians.

The cause of the physician's early death is evidently the excessive nervous expenditure, insufficient rest and defective nutrition, inseparable from his calling, with its broken and restricted sleep, irregular hours of work, rest and meals and worry when lives depend upon his judgment and the lack of a day of complete relaxation in each week. The physician who sees his patients every day in the week, month after month, and cannot learn to forget them when he goes home merely burns the candle at both ends. He violates the law observed by every animal, that there shall be short periods of moderate exertion interrupted by longer periods of rest when repairs are made. It is not too much work as a rule, but scattered work, which prevents rest.

Long Speeches.

Much merriment has been caused by the discovery that in the Egyptian "Book of the Dead" an ancient declared he had "not inflicted long lectures" on his hearers, but this is curiously matched by a plea for his soul uttered by Hugh Grove (Loyalist) at his execution May 16, 1665 (Vol. 3, Thurloe's Collections): "Good people, I was never guilty of much rhetorick, nor ever loved long speeches in my life, therfore you cannot expect either of them at my death. All I desire is your hearty prayers for my soul," etc.

In view of the Egyptian discovery this seems a very close second for England.—London Notes and Queries.

Our First Coins.

The first coins really deserving the name of United States coinage were struck off as "pattern pieces" by Benjamin Dudley at the instigation of Robert Morris and were laid before congress in 1783 as specimens of what the coinage should be. They were a "mark" and a "quint" and thus described: The "mark"—obverse; an eye, the center of a glory, 13 points cross equidistant a circle of as many stars. The "quint" is similar in design, the value on reverse being noted.

Cure For Hypochondria.

LONDON'S OLD CABMEN.

Drivers of Fifty Years—Weather-Worn Veterans Try to Get on the Pension Lists—Their Stories.

A procession of prehistoric four-wheelers drawn by centenarian horses, might excusably have been mistaken for Methuselah, drew up at a house in Euston road, London, the other day.

The vehicles were simply packed to suffocation by men quite as ancient as the drivers. They were so old that on alighting they did not hear shouted warning about the steps, because they were deaf, and they stumbled badly because they were half blind.

Also because some of them were crippled with rheumatism they could hardly crawl up the path to the front door. But they assisted each other with much kindness.

Now that sad little spectacle was not, as might be supposed, a "grandfathers' show." It was, as a matter of fact, a gathering of old cabmen at the Dr. Forbes Winslow's Hospital, where they hoped that the doctor's scrutiny of their infirmities might result in their getting a small pension from the Cabmen's Benevolent Association.

When all the men were assembled upstairs the tale of their ages was 2,070 years, the oldest of them being a veteran of eighty. And this sprightly youth, who was one of the youngest-looking, had been driving his cab up to a few years ago.

Dr. Forbes Winslow sat in a back room and called for the men one by one. And they came in, halting and peering at the doctor with their bleared old eyes, and craning their necks that their deaf ears might catch the verdict.

Most of them were so deaf that the doctor could comment freely before them. "It's the weather," he said, "that does it. Some of these men have been out in every kind of weather, day after day, for forty and fifty years.

"The rain gets into their ears, and makes them deaf. They get cold after until it settles down into chronic bronchitis, and they become hopelessly rheumatic. These cases are all alike. People who hail a cab and drive where they want to do not realize the sufferings of the men who drive them."

Deafness, failing eyesight, failing heart, rheumatism; and memories, too, were bad. Several of them, asked what the present year was, had to scratch their white heads before they could remember. One old man, who had been driving a cab for fifty years, said, "My mind is that bad, sir, that sometimes I has to pull up, and, begging the fares' pardon, ask them where they told me to drive to."

After their examination, Dr. Forbes Winslow asked most of them how trade was, and all agreed it was not what it was when they began, forty or fifty years ago. And the police? Their weather-beaten, frost-bitten, purple old faces broke into a thousand wrinkles. Ah! they kept clear of them—if they could.

But they did not all smile at this question. "Old Jenkins," for instance, who is 73, said that the police took his horses. His horses were very old, and the police said they must be destroyed. "But I loved those horses," said the old man, "and I could not ill-treat a horse, sir, I could not." And the poor old fellow, after a gallant struggle, broke down and cried.

This brave old chap was going back to his work, for he was still driving. Though 73, he preferred to stand down and give some less hearty old fellow a chance for a pension.

Perhaps the most interesting of them all was Harris, who had driven his cab for fifty-eight years. He drove it until eight weeks ago. He remembered many changes—remembered the time when omnibuses and tramcars did not exist, and the vehicle he himself drove was entered from the back.

He recalled, too, that he once found £29 in gold in a cab, and returned the same to a gentleman in Park street, who had said that anything he could do for him in the future he would do. Unfortunately, he had forgotten the gentleman's name.

The Late Gen. Gatacre.

The death was recently announced of Major-Gen. Sir William Forbes Gatacre, aged 63 years. Gen. Gatacre served with distinction in the Soudan, but his persistent ill-fortune in the Boer War dimmed his reputation as a soldier.

Major-Gen. Sir William Forbes Gatacre, K. C. B., D. S. O., retired in 1904. He was born Dec. 3, 1843, at Gatacre, Shropshire; married in 1905 Beatrix Wickens, third daughter of Baron Davey. He entered the 70th Foot in 1862; passed the Staff College, 1874; participated in the Hazara expedition as deputy-adjutant and quartermaster-general, 1888; was in command of the Mandalay Brigade, 1889-1890; Burma, Tonhon expedition, 1889; and in 1895, in the Chitral expedition, conducted the action at Mamugai and the passage of Janbatai and Lowari passes, and was mention in dispatches; commanded the British troops in Soudan during the first advance on Atbara, 1898, commanded the British division in Soudan during the advance on Khartoum and Omdurman, and was again mentioned in dispatches, receiving the thanks of both Houses of Parliament; created K. C. B., 1899; received thanks of the Government of India and of the Government of Bombay as president of the Plague Committee, 1897; commanded 3rd division, South African Field Force, 1899-1900.

Force of Habit.

A courtly old gentleman of the old school, Mr. De Vere Howard, recently found himself an honored guest in the gorgeous Grosvenor Square residence of the Snookses.

His host took him over the mansion, and took care that he should not miss any of the magnificence.

"We've even got a musical arrangement in the bathroom," he remarked casually, "so that you can take your bath to the accompaniment of sweet music. Good idea, isn't it?"

The old gentleman said it was, and announced his intention of trying it next morning. When he came down to breakfast they asked him if he liked it.

He sniffed in aristocratic disgust.

"It is an abomination, like all modern inventions," he said. "Bah! If you'll believe me, sir, that confounded musical box struck up 'God Save the King,' and kept playing it, and I had to take my bath standing up, sir. I expect I shall catch my death of cold. Ugh!"

PASTIME WITH GOOD COMPANY.

Pastime with good company
I love and shall until I die.
Grudge who will, but none deny;
So God be pleased this life will I
For my pastance, hunt, sing and dance.
My heart is set.
All goodly sport to my comfort
Who shall, who shall me let?

Youth will have needs dalliance;
Of good or ill some pastance.
Company methinketh best
All thoughts and fancies to digest,
For idleness is chief mistress
Of vices all.
Then who can say but pass the day
Is best of all?

Company with honesty
Is virtue, and vice to flee.
Company is good or ill,
But ev'ry man hath his good will.
The best I sue, the worst eschew,
My mind shall be.
Virtue to use, vice to refuse;
I shall use me.

—Old English Song.

PUPIL TEACHER'S RING.

Were It in School Room and Ordered to Take It Off.

The London Daily Mail asks an interesting question: Is the wearing of an engagement ring a sufficiently grave offence to warrant the dismissal of a pupil teacher? The local Education Committee of Rotherham, near Sheffield, appears to think so.

Miss Mabel Turner, an attractive girl of eighteen, has for some time past been receiving instruction at the local Pupil Teachers' Centre. With the consent of her parents, she became engaged on Jan. 18 and attended class wearing her engagement ring. The next day she was called up by the headmistress, Miss Hodge, and ordered to take off the ring.

"I naturally protested," said Miss Turner. "As she insisted, I consulted my parents, who upheld me. On Jan. 24 I was sent for by Mr. Howarth, the principal of the teaching centre, and told that as I had disobeyed the orders of the headmistress I must remain at home until the matter was settled.

"The next step was to summon my father and myself to a committee meeting, where he was not allowed to speak in my defence. I was then told by the chairman of the committee that I must apologise." Her parents refused to allow her to apologize.

Although the local officials decline to give their view until the matter has been considered by the central education authority, the principal of the centre said that, as a considerable sum of money is spent in training young teachers, pupils "should not be allowed to flaunt engagement rings when nominally studying for a scholastic career."

In London schools the marriage of a pupil teacher terminates her agreement. But while an engagement is discountenanced on the ground of the youth of the pupil teachers and the fact that it is likely to cause them to abandon their profession after having received a special training at the public expense, a teacher would not be dismissed or suspended for that reason alone. Several London pupil teachers are at this moment wearing engagement rings.

BACK TO OLD LIFE.

Australian Natives Never Retain Habits of the Whites.

In Western New South Wales and Western Queensland, Australia, black aboriginal stockmen are common. Many of the landholders have interested themselves in the training of the young aborigines, teaching many of them to read and write, and bringing them up side by side with the white children. The result has not been very encouraging. Says a writer: "I have known several instances where aboriginal babies of both sexes were taken completely away from their people and brought up in a white family. They were taught various accomplishments, and spoke English just as well as the white youngsters. But invariably, on the first opportunity, they relapsed into barbarism, and soon the only trace of their upbringing that remained to them was their faultless English. One native girl whom I knew was kept in a refined white home until she was 18; then, getting word of a native camp a few miles away, she stole off to it, and when found she was sitting in a 'mia-mia' (native hut), with her clothes all discarded and a possum rug wrapped round her.

"Undoubtedly the best black stockman that I ever knew fell away in the same fashion. He had been brought up from a baby in a white family, and was noted for his scrupulous cleanliness and dandyish care for his clothes. On horseback he could hold his own easily with the best men on the station.

"I left the station just then, and, returning three years later, I pulled up at an old 'mia-mia' to question the occupants about the route. Beginning in the usual pigeon English, I am amazed when the half naked, dirty and unkempt native who was sitting in the ashes replied in first-class English. As his voice seemed familiar I looked at him more closely. 'Why, surely you're not Harry from Yaloo?' 'The same man, boss,' he coolly replied. 'Soon after you left I married a girl of my own color and took to the old life.' And he kept to it."

Old Curiosity Shop.

Many of the Curiosity shops planted in the back streets of most country towns in England are kept up by large London firms, who, from a prolonged study of human nature, have discovered that people who are shy of buying old furniture or old silver in Bond street or Piccadilly are ready and eager purchasers of precisely the same objects at a rather higher price when they come upon them in the back streets of a country town.

Moans as Medicine.

The Lancet, the leading medical paper of London, has been discussing "The Language of Moans." Says that publication: "There is no doubt that there are considerable mental comfort and relief obtained from a series of long drawn sighs during a period of sorrowful depression or from noisy ejaculations of the nature of groans and moans made by a sufferer from such a painful disorder as acute dyspepsia or violent toothache."

Pirates Loot on Canadian Soil.

Millions of treasure, captured by a cut-throat crew of a vessel, the Jolly Roger, cached on an island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the place of concealment kept a secret for 75 years, and now in the possession of a Boston woman, are flitting before the eyes of half a dozen Bostonians, and there is a possibility that they will finance an expedition to go and get the treasure. There are said to be more than $3,000,000 of it, and all that is lacking is somebody with money to guarantee the expedition.

A woman who signs herself Sadie E. Mason now holds the secret. She has advertised for backers. Miss Mason says she can convince the right persons of the truth of her assertions that there are millions in silver, gold and jewels waiting only to be taken away, and her main concern seems to be to prevent the Canadian Government from getting part of the wealth.

"I am not ready to give all the details of the story," said Miss Mason, "but I am absolutely sure that the wealth is to be had for the journey, and I am trying to get means to finance the trip now. I don't care to say just where the wealth is hidden. I am afraid that if the exact location were made public the Canadian Government would learn of it."

WHEN MA MADE SUNDAY PIE.

I mind me of those Saturdays
When life was young and fair,
And tears and troubles vanished
Like bubbles blown in air;
I mind me of the little things
That made the days dance by
On wings of butterflies and bees,
When ma made Sunday pie.

No school, no books, no switches,
No basket, bag, and slate;
No hurrying through my breakfast
For I fear I would be late;
But snoozing in my attic
Till Sol was two hours high,
Then creeping down the kitchen stairs
Where ma made Sunday pie.

My! I can smell those apples
A-stewing in the pot,
A-blubbering and steaming,
So sirupy and hot,
With cinnamon and sugar,
And butter piled up high;
All on the clean pine rolling-board,
Where ma made Sunday pie.

I see the dough so flaky—
A toss, a roll, a pat—
A-flopping it up this way,
Then flopping it down that—
Then slap! into the pie-tin
It fits just like a die—
And prinked around the edges—yum!
That luscious Sunday pie.

Oh dear! to be a youngster,
And free again once more—
A-rolling on my stomach
On that clean kitchen floor—
Life's all a bunch of bothers,
And Fame rides on a sigh,
And Glory is not "in it" with My mother's Sunday pie.

HE CAN'T SIGN CHEQUES

Crown Attorney Curry Intervened and Phillips Gets Setback.

President of Defunct York Loan Co. Driven in Prison Van to the Police Court—Crown Attorney Continues His Efforts to Locate Real Owner of Certain Stock—A Highly Paid Lady Officer.

Toronto, April 2.—Joseph Phillips suffered at least two mortifications yesterday. In the first place, he was driven after breakfast in the police van from the jail to the court, as the carriage he had engaged was late, owing to a misunderstanding on the part of the driver. Then when, just before the adjournment until to-morrow at noonday, he was preparing to sign a cheque to hand to his lawyer, J. E. Jones, Crown Attorney Curry intervened.

"I will not give my permission to his signing any cheques the way things are now," he said.

An air of mystery at the morning session was imparted by evidence concerning one "Joan McCann," whose name appears as a large holder of Toronto Life stock, and who is alleged to be in New York at the present time. But the books do not tend to point that the company received from her the face value of the stock.

Miss Georgiana Hudson said that Joan, who had some years ago been a clerk in the York County, but for a very short time, was of medium height, pretty stout and about 36 years of age. It appeared the widow, Joan McCann, also a nurse, had traveled quite a bit. Miss Hudson had no power of attorney for her.

"Did you ever sign as a witness to a signature you didn't see signed."

"Yes."

"What? Without seeing it signed?"

"Yes, if I knew it was her own signature."

Who Owns the Stock?

"This stock here was transferred to Miss Daw. How was that? Did she get it?" went on Mr. Curry.

"No, but I thought I had got her to buy it. I paid for it with my own money. It was then transferred to me."

"Where did you get the money."

"I've always had money."

"Yes, but pardon me, you are dealing here in large transactions, and I doubt if they were all genuine. Why were 25 shares of stock also transfered to Miss Daw?"

"I thought she would like 25 shares."

"Did you see her sign this in the book on Oct. 13?"

"Yes."

"Whose name does the stock stand in now?"

"Miss Daw's."

"And she hasn't paid a dollar for it," said Mr. Curry.

The witness replied that something had been paid.

Miss Daw had held 75 shares in the Toronto Life in her own name. The names of the large number of shareholders read out showed that in most cases they were either agents or employes of the York Loan, nearly all their stock having been transferred to Miss McCann, a Mrs. Suton, Miss Daw and the witness and several others.

"Whoever actually owns this stock—and I have my own idea as to who is the real owner and who are the dummies—who possess business that has a cash value of over $150,000," said Crown Attorney Curry.

What Mr. Burt Knows.

Regarding the piano money, which, she said, was deposited in the Bank of Montreal, Miss L. Hudson, who bore traces of illness, declared that Mr. Burt knew what the cheques Phillips signed were for.

"Mr. Burt," said the crown attorney, "does not know anything about them. The $3,000 cheque was certified on July 1, 1905. What was that for?"

"$2,200 went for Toronto Life stock, and some for my salary. I was getting $10 a week from January, 1903."

Miss Hudson remarked that she had not received any money in respect to her services for the Liszt Piano Co. for 80 weeks, but she was receiving $25 a week salary from the York County Loan.

"Did you know that the cheque for $2,500 was used for the purchase of a house for Mr. Phillips?"

"No; I made out cheques. I don't ask questions." Witness added that she had worked also for The National Monthly at $5 a week, but not after they took over the Liszt Piano business. The books of the Piano company had been copied from slips.

Miss Lilian Hudson was unaware as to where The National Monthy got its money. She confessed equal ignorance concerning a cheque for $10,000 from The National Monthly to the York County Loan.

Endorsed But Never Received Money.

"Why, you have endorsed it on the back," said Crown Attorney Curry, showing her the cheque.

"Well, I may have done that, but I never received the money."

"Where did it go?" asked the court.

"About this time," said the Crown Attorney, "Phillips drew out a similar sum from the York County Loan. That National Monthly cheque I think went to purchase £2,000 worth of Canadian Northern bonds guaranteed by the Manitoba Government."

"But where are they?"

"I am not in a position to say at present, but I think I can prove that later," said Mr. Curry.

Forged Father's Name.

St. Catharines, April 3.—William Smithers of Thorold was yesterday morning arrested at Beamsville charged with having forged the name of his father, who lives at Stamford, to a note which was purchased by Albert Shrimpton at Niagara Falls. Smithers fled to Beamsville, where he was found at the home of James Stanley, a colored man. He made an attempt to escape through a dense bush, but failed.

Farmer Suicides.

Stratford, April 3.—James Dunseith, lot 4, concession 13, Downie, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head with a gun. He was an elderly man, in the best of health, and no cause can be given for his rash act. He was found lying dead on the floor at his home.

Ashamed of her Skin

Now proud of the complexion "Fruit-a-tives" gave her.

Bad complexions are all too common among women. The skin becomes sallow—pimples and blotches break out. Then women try lotions and creams and "beautifiers" which really injure the Skin. They never think of constipation and bad digestion — sick kidneys or torpid liver—as the CAUSE.

"I was a martyr to that distressing complaint—chronic constipation—and had a dreadful complexion, sallow in the extreme and black under the eyes. Last May, I was advised to try "Fruit-a-tives." Before I had finished the first box, the constipation was relieved. My complexion began to clear up again, all the sallowness disappeared, and the black circles under my eyes went away. Since then, I have continued to improve and now my complexion is as clear as when I was a young girl. To all persons suffering from constipation and indigestion, and particularly those with bad complexions, I would strongly advise them to try "Fruit-a-tives"?

FLORENCE JAMISON, Masson, P.Q.

Fruit-a-tives

or Fruit Liver Tablets

strike right at the root of the trouble. The skin helps to dispose of the waste of the body. When the bowels don't move regularly — when the kidneys are clogged—the blood carries the poisons, which the bowels and kidneys won't pass off, to the skin. The pores of the skin become clogged with this poison and the complexion becomes grey or sallow or irritated and inflamed—and pimples and blotches are the natural result of the poisoned blood.

"Fruit-a-tives" correct faulty digestion and make the bowels move regularly. They act directly on the kidneys—and open the millions of tiny pores of the skin by stimulating and strengthening the glands. This insures all the waste of the system being removed as nature intended. It insures pure, rich blood—and who ever heard of a bad complexion where the blood was rich and pure?

"Fruit-a-tives" cost 50c. a box—and are worth $50. to any woman who values her complexion. If your druggist has none, we will send them on receipt of price—50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

MISS CLARA DRISCOLL.

She Is the Honorary Custodian of the Historic Alamo.

It is not often that the author of a musical comedy deserves to be known as a philanthropist, but Miss Clara Driscoll, who wrote the book of "Mexicana," is the exception to this rule.

Miss Driscoll is the daughter of a wealthy Texas family, and her state has showered upon her numerous honors in recognition of her generosity in purchasing the historic Alamo, so gallantly defended by Texans in their war of independence. That her action is appreciated by her state is shown by the fact that the legislature of Texas made Miss Driscoll honorary custodian of the Alamo.

Miss Driscoll was residing in Texas several years ago when it was suggested that the Alamo be sold to a commercial concern, which wished to use it as a museum. The authoress of "Mexicana" made sincere efforts to prevent this vandalism, but, unable to do so, purchased the building outright from her private funds for $75,000 and gave it to the state of Texas.

MISS CLARA DRISCOLL.

Subsequently the state returned to her $65,000 of this sum, and its action in making her custodian of the building is only a fitting appreciation of her patriotism. Miss Driscoll's residence is at San Antonio, Tex., and she owns an enormous cattle ranch at Corpus Christi.

Damp Salt.

One of the petty annoyances of the table is damp salt, and housekeepers who are solicitous and particular about everything else seem to be singularly obtuse in this matter. Aside from the dampness of the salt, little attention is paid to the quality. It seems to be taken for granted that salt is salt, without any degrees of excellence. Nothing should be used but prepared table salt, which can always be got, and little trouble is now experienced in getting salt so prepared that it will shake out freely.

In any case, the difficulty can always be overcome by heating the saltcellars before each meal, or by mixing cornstarch with the salt in the proportion of one part of cornstarch to ten of salt. This proportion should be carefully preserved, as too much cornstarch detracts from the seasoning properties of the salt.

The heating of the salt vessels is the preferred method. The same observations to some extent apply to pepper. Keep the boxes dry by heating before use.

Linoleum.

A household economics authority says: "In caring for linoleum do not use soapsuds as for scrubbing a floor. It stands to reason that soap is going to injure the varnish and the finish. On a farm where there is plenty of milk a cloth wrung out of skim milk is the best means of taking up the dust and brightening the linoleum. Where milk is scarce or needed for food use lukewarm water to which has been added half a cupful of kerosene oil or some good furniture polish. Wring the cloth rather dry from this and go over the linoleum after sweeping, and it will be quite new and bright and the finish uninjured. Most housewives scrub oilcloth and linoleum as though it were a bare floor. It is dusty rather than dirty, since everything remains on the top, and for this reason a clean cloth slightly damp is all that is necessary."

A Foot Test.

A test for the perfect foot is made as follows: Dip your feet in water or flour, then walk quickly and naturally across a bare floor. Now turn and examine the tracks made. If they show the outer rim of the foot straight, but the inner line breaking, leaving a strong heel mark and a strong impression of the ball of the foot with a break in the line on the inner side where the hollow of the foot escapes the floor, your foot is a strong, well arched one, and you should use your best endeavors to keep it so by wearing good and well made shoe leather. If, on the other hand, the inner border shows a continuous line, as does the outer, all is not well, and measures should be taken to alleviate that which is wrong, either in the shoe leather worn or in the habit of walking.

Creamed Chicken Salad.

For salads there is a very nice one called creamed chicken salad. As its name implies, it is merely chicken very finely chopped, mixed with white sauce and then set with gelatin—a tablespoonful of the latter to a pint of chicken. This may be put into small molds and served on individual plates with a spoonful of mayonnaise by each mold. A leaf of lettuce underneath adds to the appearance of the dish. Another simple salad suitable for winter is made by pressing cream cheese or ordinary cottage cheese mixed with cream into a small mold and turning out on lettuce or merely on a platter without lettuce. Then a spoonful of bar-le-duc or rich gooseberry jam is put into a depression made in its top, and French dressing is passed with crackers.—Harper's Bazar.

School and Children Under Six.

That home is the best school for children under six is the conclusion arrived at by an English committee of trained educators that has been investigating the results of schooling on babies of this tender age. The committee reports unanimously against sending these tots to school. They find that not only do many derive no intellectual benefit from it, but, on the other hand, they seem to fall into a state of apathy with regard to books and their powers of observation. More play, more sleep, more story telling, more free conversation—these are recommended by the English report as a substitute for schooling until the child is six.

Dress Economy.

I never realized how well a woman can dress with a small income till I made the acquaintance of one with a streak of practical economy in her makeup. Being a careful person, she wears her clothing slowly, but each season, with the aid of a seamstress and a first class fashion magazine, she makes slight changes in all her clothing, only enough to give them up to date touches. Whatever new garments she needs are purchased with an eye to future usefulness as well as present fashions. And she is always beautifully attired. I happen to know that she spends very little money.—Woman Correspondent in Minneapolis Tribune.

Hanging Sash Curtains.

Have you learned the trick of using quarter inch iron wire instead of brass rods for the hanging of sash curtains? For the shams, the mantel and closet curtains, all the little extra "shirrs" put up in house decoration, it answers just as well and is about one-fifth the price. It is necessary to have a little bottle of gold paint and to "wash" it, both for the sake of the looks and to keep it from rusting. You can have it cut in lengths wanted at any hardware store and will be surprised at the purchasing power of the small sum of 10 cents when invested in it.

To Reduce the Waist Line.

Here are three exercises said to be excellent for reducing the waist line: The first is a bending one. Seat yourself and bend forward until you touch your toes. Repeat seventy-five times. This is the rowing exercise. For the second exercise remain seated, throw up your hands and bend backward. Repeat fifty times. For the third exercise remain seated and bend from side to side. Saw this side and that until your hips feel limber. This is a great waist reduction exercise.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Hot Water Bags.

Before a hot water bag is put away it ought to be slightly inflated, says a careful housekeeper. Otherwise the sides may adhere to each other and in pulling them apart the bag will almost certainly be ruined. In case the precaution has been neglected and the parts have adhered some hot water with a few drops of ammonia should be put into the bag and, after a few minutes, a thin, dull edged piece of wood may be inserted carefully between the two pieces of rubber.

French Apron.

A French apron is long and narrow, giving the wearer a graceful look not given by the wide, voluminous apron that is gathered around the waist. It is cut with a shallow point at the bottom and gored up so that it is extremely narrow at the top. This is cut out in slightly pointed shape before sewing it on the belt. The bib is straight across the top and has ribbon bretelles fastened with rosettes at the corners.

Tangled Hair.

Hair that is badly tangled may be combed free without breaking or tearing it by first anointing with a liberal supply of olive oil. Comb slowly from the ends up to the scalp. Continue this treatment once a day for three days, and it will do dry, harsh hair a world of good.

Table Decoration.

If there are no flowers for the table, break off a few of the finer sprays of the Boston fern, arrange loosely in a low glass bowl with water, and the delicate green sprays will last for a week and make a dainty centerpiece.

"Besides labeling my medicine bottles conspicuously," says one woman, "I stick a large headed pin in the corks of all bottles containing poison. Thus they can at no time be mistaken."

Limes, as well as lemons, with their dash of strong citric acid, are scurvy specifics and may safely be taken by those with faulty complexions.

A handful of bran thrown in the water in which your hands are washed will do much toward whitening and softening them.

A Daring Distribution

The undersigned Druggist at the earnest solicitation of the Ferrol Co., Limited, of Toronto, has made a thorough and searching investigation into the merits of FERROL, and of the methods of that Company, and he finds that: Every cure claimed by the Company is absolutely genuine; that FERROL is manufactured from the best quality of Munn's Celebrated Cod Liver Oil (the whole of the oil) and is richer in oil than any other emulsion, and while it contains just the right quantity of the best form of Iron and Phosphorous, it is so scientifically prepared, that not one in a thousand finds any trouble in taking it; that the medicine has accomplished the most amazing results in its own city; that its sales in the Home City have been phenomenal; that it is endorsed by all druggists without hesitation or qualification; that it is, in short, all the Company claims for FERROL, and more.

The more I investigated the more enthusiastic I became. It is no longer a question of my willingness to handle the preparation—FERROL—but how can I bring it to the immediate suffering of this city?

It is a heavy responsibility, but I have faith in the honesty and fairness of the Ferrol Company, Limited, of Toronto, and the unequalled merits of their preparation, FERROL.

(Signed) D. M. WATERS.

I find also that the druggists in other cities have taken upon themselves the solemn responsibility of standing behind this medicine; and that these druggists have made in each city a daring and remarkable distribution of full-sized bottles.

Impressed by the action of my fellow-druggists, and convinced that they would not have given this remedy such unqualified approval without positive knowledge of its merits, I have decided to follow their example and distribute free of charge

500 Large Bottles of FERROL Free to the Sick

Friday, April 6, From the Drug Store of D. M. Waters.

Maintaining a first-class Drug Store, the above named Druggist occupies a commanding position in the retail drug trade of this city, and almost every remedy that is offered to the public seeks an outlet through his store. But with an eye single to the interests of his many patrons he is careful to handle the most reliable preparations. Consequently when a medicine is recommended and endorsed by this Druggist, that medicine must have merit.

The above Druggist, after a rigid investigation, described elsewhere in this announcement, has decided to make, upon his own responsibility, the most remarkable distribution of medicine ever attempted in this city. Convinced by personal experience of the extraordinary merits of he has purchased from the Ferrol Co., Limited, of Toronto, Five Hundred large sized bottles of this remedy, for free distribution, and he hereby invites every person suffering from any form of blood trouble; any person who is run down, discouraged and in need of a powerful tonic; any person suffering from Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Croup and all Bronchial or Lung Trouble, Chronic Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Insomnia, Loss of Weight and all wasting diseases; any person who has sought relief in any other remedy or Cod Liver Oil preparation, and failed to find it, cut out the certificate printed herewith, fill out the blank lines, present it at the store on the dates given, and get a bottle of this wonderful preparation, FERROL, Free.

It was necessary for me to purchase a large quantity in order to have the privilege of making this free distribution, and the responsibility assumed by me in this matter, I am positive will be appreciated by the public, and the immense sales that are sure to follow will more than compensate me for the expenditure involved.

There is absolutely no sentiment in this endorsement of FERROL. It is merely a business recognition of a preparation that possesses positive merit, and a keen desire on the part of a progressive concern to always supply the best goods at the lowest possible price.

THIS CERTIFICATE,

Properly filled out and signed, entitles the holder to one large sized bottle of FERROL (Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus), if presented Friday, April 6, at the drug store of D. M. Waters, from 9 a.m. until samples are exhausted.

FERROL WHAT IT IS AND WHY YOU SHOULD TAKE IT

THE FERROL CO., LIMITED
CITY

May 24th, 1905

GENTLEMEN,

The bottle of FERROL I secured from you, I have found to do great good. My son used it for a bad cold, and it cured him. I know it to be an excellent remedy for a bad cold and for building a person up after sickness. I might say that it was a prominent doctor friend of mine in the city, who used it for his son, and spoke to me of it. I have since recommended it to a great many of my friends to try.

Yours truly,
J. B. TINNING
T. P. AG'T.

WHAT FERROL DOES.—A careful perusal of the foregoing will readily suggest to the reader what FERROL does.

It builds up the run down constitution as no other preparation can.

It cures Anæmia, no matter how chronic, by supplying the blood with just what it requires in the only form in which impoverished blood can be so supplied.

It prevents Consumption by fortifying the constitution against its attacks.

It restores Nervous Vitality in a manner little short of marvellous.

It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis and kindred diseases by building up the constitution so that the system will throw off the disease by NATURAL PROCESS—a very different thing from the usual method of treatment by administering cough medicines and other drugs which are sure to impair digestion and are always debilitating in their effects. FERROL, on the other hand, while removing the disease, at the same time INCREASES THE WEIGHT, ENRICHES THE BLOOD and improves the patient in every respect.

It assists in the development of delicate infants and children, and it is particularly valuable for boys and girls at the period of transition into manhood and womanhood, when they are so likely to outgrow their strength and the system is rendered peculiarly susceptible to the attacks of disease.

It strengthens the muscles, tones up the nerves, improves the vitality, strengthens the action of the heart, and builds up the whole system so that the germs of disease can obtain no foothold.

It has a wonderful recuperative effect on the Brain—bringing to it in proper form Phosphorus, the Brain's chief constituent; attacks of depression and morbidness, "brain fag," etc., are dispelled—the cure is basal, constructive and complete.

WHAT IT IS NOT—It is not a "Patent Medicine"—the ingredients are freely made known, only the method of manufacture being secret.

REMEMBER—There is only one Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus, and that one is FERROL.

If you feel the need of a Restorative see that you get FERROL and do not be put off with something "just as good"—there is nothing half so good—nothing "just the same." Protect yourself.

Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus are not new remedial agents; for ages their merits have been known and recognized, and for many years physicians have indulged the hope that some day a satisfactory combination of these remedies would be perfected and the full benefit of their life-giving properties made available.

In "FERROL" that hope has at last been fully realized, and the practical benefits resulting from its use have far exceeded the most sanguine expectations.

These agents are combined in a scientifically prepared Emulsion so palatable that even a nursing infant can and will take it readily, even greedily; so easily assimilated that the most delicate digestive organs will dispose of it with less difficulty than they would experience in the digestion of the plainest food.

WHAT IT IS.—"FERROL," as its name implies, is composed mainly of Oil and Iron—it is, in short, a PERFECT EMULSION OF COD LIVER OIL AND IRON, with a modicum of Phosphorus added, and is positively the only preparation combining these ingredients.

The apparently extravagant claim that it has no equal in its peculiar sphere is based on the following common sense reasons:

It combines in palatable form Cod Liver Oil, the greatest tissue-builder and flesh-producer known to medical science, with Iron, the one and only agent which will supply impoverished Blood with the red corpuscles which it must have in order to insure a healthy condition, and Phosphorus, which has no equal as a Nerve tonic.

Half-Sick

When your nerves are weak, when you are easily tired, when you feel all run down, then is the time you need a good strong tonic—Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Your doctor will tell you why it has such power over weak nerves, why it makes the blood rich, and why it gives courage and strength. Ask him if it is not just the medicine you need.

We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our medicines! J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

DAIRYING OR MIXED FARMING.

Dairying and being able to get five or six cents per quart for milk is the most remunerative, or selling butter at a contract price the year round. Dairying and selling milk to the creameries for less than $1 per hundred pounds is a slow but sure way to the poorhouse, as they are slowly but surely selling their farms for less than their real value, not including their labor.

Last, but not least, is the man who follows mixed farming, keeping six or eight cows, raises his calves, takes three years to grow them before they are ready or large enough to get a buyer to look at them, and finally sells all at once in the fall for beef, gluts the market, and gets a low price per pound, and then claim feeding cattle does not pay; but start in the following spring and graze from sixteen to thirty-two head all summer and have every spear of grass as well as weeds pastured off, and then complain that their soil is lacking in humus. And nine out of ten will say, "I guess I must apply lime as I cannot get clover to catch."

To this class of people I would say, the Lord is certainly good and kind to you. He is giving you a living on the farm, and, in my judgment, they are not entitled to it for the amount of energy and labor applied. They have more than they are entitled to, and I truly hope the time is not far distant when the average farmer will make better application of his time than he does at present, or go out of business.—A. T. Holman, in American Cultivator.

PAINTING FARM BUILDINGS.

Farmers should use more paint on their buildings. It is the best of economy to do so. Even at the highest retail price of materials it pays handsomely to keep the buildings well painted. Everybody will acknowledge that a set of farm buildings well painted are a great deal more attractive than are those that are unpainted. But this is far from being the whole benefit to be received. The building in most of its parts is greatly preserved if kept well painted. The farmer can do all of this work himself during slack times of regular farm work, so that he need not feel it to be such a very heavy expense, especially when he comes to consider the fact from an economical point of view, which is the right way to look at it. The fact is, the farmer cannot afford to neglect the use of paint on his buildings or on his implements either.

PRACTICAL POULTRY POINTS.

Construct your house good and warm, so as to avoid damp floors, and afford a flood of sunlight. Sunshine is better than medicine.

Provide a dusting and scratching place where you can bury wheat and corn and thus induce the fowls to take the needful exercise.

Provide yourself with some good healthy chickens, giving one cock to every twelve hens.

Give plenty of fresh air at all times, especially in summer.

Give plenty of fresh water daily, and never allow the fowls to go thirsty.

Feed them systematically two or three times a day; scatter the food so they can't eat too fast, or without proper exercise. Do not feed more than they will eat up clean, or they will get tired of that kind of food.

Give them a variety of both dry and cooked feed; a mixture of cooked meat and vegetables is an excellent thing for their morning meal.

Give soft food in the morning and the whole grain at night except a little wheat or cracked corn placed in the scratching places to give them exercise during the day.

Above all things, keep the henhouse clean and well ventilated.

Do not crowd too many in a house. If you do, look out for disease.

Add insect powder and sulphur and wood ashes to the dusting bins to destroy lice.

Wash your roosts and bottom of laying nests, and whitewash once a week in summer, and once a month in winter.

Let the old and young have as large a range as possible, the larger the better.

Don't breed too many kinds of fowls at the same time, unless you are going into the business. Three or four will give you your hands full, and to make a specialty of one breed is often the best plan.

Introduce new blood into your stock every year or so, by either buying a cockerel or setting of eggs from some reliable breeder.

In buying birds or eggs, go to some reliable breeder who has his reputation at stake. You may have to pay a little more for birds, but yet you can depend on what you get. Culls are not cheap at any price.

Save the best birds for next year's breeding, and send the others to the market. In shipping fancy poultry to market send it dressed.

THE VETERINARIAN.

Answers to Correspondents.

For Cows — Will one tablespoonful of saltpeter given to cows once a week, when they are in good condition do them any harm or good. Is millet cut green and cured as hay a first-class feed for cows heavy with calf? What is the proper way to care for a cow that has came in three or four months ahead of time? Will saltpeter in any way help to cause abortion? Ans.—The dose of saltpeter for a cow is one ounce, a tablespoonful would do practically neither harm nor good. Millet well cured is good roughage for cows, but it is well to feed clover or corn fodder once a day and millet hay once a day, rather than millet altogether. Get cow out of herd at once; disinfect stable; also wash cow and sponge the body within reach of end of tail with disinfectants; also inject vagina, and do not have her served for two months. Saltpeter is of nno use as a remedy for abortion.

With Calf.—How can I tell if my cow is with calf? She is a medium-sized grade Jersey, about 7 or 8 years old, and has now been milking continuously 18 months, during which time she has accepted service five times, the last time being June 8. For several weeks I have milked her in the morning only, and have given her only two quarts of grain per day. She is fed only hay, and is now giving as much as she gave early in November, viz., 4 or 5 quarts, which, by the way, is almost solid cream. I am not experienced in these matters, but I have failed to detect any internal movements, even immediately after drinking cold water. There is occasionally a slight discharge, absolutely clear, and of the consistency, color and appearance of the white of an egg, but never any blood. In the morning she looks as flat as a slab, but at night, after eating hay all day, she is like a balloon.—Ans. Get some one who is expert in these matters, and let him examine her at the right flank. Even if she were impregnated at the last service, you would not be apt to see motion as yet, but you might feel it by holding the palm of your hand flat against the right flank. Of course the foetus often lies quiet for some time and until the movement occurs there is nothing to be felt. During the next 30 days, one ought to be able to feel the calf, if there is one. You should milk her twice a day, and unless she is fat, give her two quarts of grain twice a day; but if you intend to do this, begin by giving a slight increase to half of present ration twice a day, and gradually bring her up to the four quarts. You should also give hay night and morning.

THE HORSE.

Feeding a Working Horse.

We do not agree with some writers as to varying the amounts fed at the three different meals, such as, for instance, omitting the noon grain ration entirely or feeding double the amount at night that is fed at the morning or noon meal. All seem to agree, however, that the horse, on account of the peculiar construction of his digestive apparatus, can advantageously be fed oftener and in relatively smaller quantities than other farm animals. This seems reasonable, therefore it is inadvisable to reduce the number of feeds to less than three a day or to increase the amount at one time, for, if a double ration of grain is fed at night, the liability to colic is greatly increased and that at a time when no assistance is at hand.

And is it not a fact that the bulk of the colic cases occur in the night time? The explanation is, we think, partly that the horse eats more at night as a rule, having plenty of time and abundance of fodder before him, and partly that he is not exercising. Also we are very sure few if any horses capable of properly digesting food, are unable to thoroughly digest one-third of the day's grain ration in five or six hours, even when at hard work.

Wherever Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil has been introduced everybody is talking about its wonderful curative powers. Here is what one sufferer writes;

A LETTER OF THANKS.

Dear Sirs,—I want everyone to know what Tuck's Bone Oil did for me. I suffered for a year and nine months from a sore leg and at times the pain was almost unbearable. If I moved about the house I was obliged to go with my knee on a chair. I was under the doctor's care for months, and was six weeks in the ——— hospital from which my husband brought me home not much improved. A neighbor told me of Tuck's Bone Oil and advised me to try it. I did so and at once began to get relief. Four bottles cured me and I can now walk over town and back again at my ease. I think Tuck's Bone Oil is the best medicine ever made.

MRS. J. HOPKINS,
Smith's Falls.

For rheumatism, lame back, neuralgia, sprains, coughs, colds, quinsy or bronchitis, in short for any and all kinds of inflammation there is nothing to equal Tuck's Bone Oil. A bottle should be on the shelf in every home. For sale by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent prepaid by The Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ont.

DESTROY THE CAUSE.

You Cannot Cure Dandruff Without Destroying the Cause of it.

Many people wash their scalps Saturday night or Sunday to try to keep the dandruff down for the week, but on Monday night the scalp has begun to itch, and Tuesday morning will find a good supply of dandruff when the hair is brushed. There is but one real scientific way of curing dandruff; and that is to kill the germ that causes it, and falling hair, and finally baldness. There is only one preparation that will destroy the germ, and that is Newbro's Herpicide. It is an entirely new discovery and the only hair preparation that is based on the new scientific principle. In addition Herpicide is a very refreshing hair dressing for regular toilet use. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Approximately, ten pounds oats, 5 pounds of corn and 3 pounds of bran divided into three equal feeds, make a day's ration that cannot be much improved on. The relative amount of corn can well be increased during the winter months, and for sake of variety it may be omitted at the morning meal and fed at noon. The weight fed at each meal should be kept about the same and for the evening meal crushed oats should, when possible, be substituted for the whole grain, along with the bran and a few handfuls of cut hay, fed wet and salted enough to render it palatable. Horses soon become very fond of this food and this alone aids digestion. 16 pounds would be a fair amount of hay per day, the larger portion, of course, being consumed at night. Would prefer clover hay if in perfect condition. The reason clover hay is in bad repute for feeding work horses, we think, is because horses are allowed altogether too much of it, they being very fond of it.

While some well-known authorities advise the using of barley as a ration, I am satisfied that it is of so little value as not to be worth considering. Fed in any form in considerable quantities, we have found it much more irritating to the blood than corn, and seeming to have an especial irritating effect on the skin, and when fed unground exceedingly liable to cause intestinal irritation. The only way we would allow it fed would be on Saturday nights, well boiled and mixed with an equal bulk of bran while hot, and this only during the winter months, when grass was not available.

As to the feeding of idle work horses, it would be well if we could dispose of this subject by saying there should never be any, for this undoubtedly is the hardest treatment the work horse gets—the occasional rest when kept absolutely idle, tied to the manger, with all the fodder before him he can consume. Never allow the idle horse to remain in the stable, but see to it he has a pasture or yard to exercise in part of every day, winter and summer, of course materially cutting down the amount of grain and using more succulent food, if possible.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

The Science of Soup-Making.

The housewife who is wise in her day has discarded the idea (if she ever had it) that serving soup habitually adds to the work or expense of feeding her family, for it most assuredly lessens both. Most receipts call for a shin of beef or a given number of pounds of meat as the basis of soup "stock," but the French housewife, who is admittedly the finest soup-maker in the world, keeps her stock-pot on the stove all the time, and puts into it every scrap of meat or fowl, cooked or raw, which is not used in other ways, as well as the water in which meat or fowl is boiled. The stock-pot stands at the back of the stove, where slow cooking extracts every particle of flavor from the meat, and about twice each week the contents are strained and prepared for serving; then when wanted it needs but to be heated before sending it to the table.

This stock, which has only meat used in its preparation, is employed in many sauces and gravies where a vegetable flavor is not wanted, and for this reason the French housewife keeps a second pot on the stove, into which meat of all kinds is put, and with the meat all pieces of vegetables, bits of herbs and other things which are left when preparing foods. The contents of this second pot need only straining to be ready for serving as a consomme. Either of these "stocks" may be kept where they will slightly freeze, and be as good when several weeks old as when first made, while the stock made entirely from meat may be cooked down until it forms a stiff jelly when cool, and kept for an indefinite time. When made into the jelly form it needs but the addition of hot water to prepare it for use.

One of the most important points in soup-making is a good kettle; if the Romafin clay-ware is not to be had, the next best is a porcelain-lined or granite kettle, with tight-fitting cover—to prevent evaporation. If the meat is to be cooked purposely for soup, put it into cold water, and bring to boiling heat very slowly. Soft water is better than hard, and because salt hardens the water, it should not be added until the meat is nearly done.

For a clear soup, the best results are obtained by letting it get cold and removing the fat which forms in a cake on top; but when there is not time for this, skim off as much as possible, and then draw a coarse brown paper, or blotting paper, over the stock, and it will absorb almost every particle of fat that is left.

To clarify soup, let it get cold and remove the fat; when ready to serve, mix the shell and white of one egg with a tablespoonful of cold water for each quart of soup. Put the egg on the bottom of a saucepan and pour the cold stock over it. Bring to boiling heat very slowly, and the egg will come to the surface, bringing with it all blood or other element of cloudiness. Boil slowly until perfectly clear beneath the scum; remove that with a spoon or skimmer, and strain the soup through a cloth.

When making a clear soup, it is better to leave the vegetables used in large pieces. They are more easily removed, while flavoring the soup as much as when cut fine.

When a brown soup is wanted, dice as many varieties of vegetables as are liked, and mix them in proportions to suit the family taste; then to each cupful of mixed vegetables add a tablespoonful each of butter and sugar. Put the mixture into the soup kettle, and brown to a rich color, but do not scorch; then pour on stock, and cook until the vegetables are perfectly tender.

Many an otherwise fine soup is spoiled in the seasoning, and the fault is, usually over-seasoning. An expert soup demonstrator gave this rule: "Add salt until the soup is bright-tasting, but not salty; pepper to the brink of pungency—giving the tone of warmth, but not the note of burning." As a help toward securing the "tone of warmth," a little mustard cooked with the meat is fine, but it should never be enough to give a decided taste of mustard. The secret of a delicate soup is to have the flavors so blended that no one predominates, unless the soup is intended to be decidedly of one flavor.

HURRY DISHES.

Even with the best of planning, there will be times when the hurry dish is in demand. Some sudden and unexpected change in the situation calls for a quick response. Though there may be scant material at hand for its production, the hurry dish must be evoked on the spur of the occasion, something presentable, attractive if it may be, and sufficiently "filling." There is scant room for choice as to material; all that can be done is to set one's wits in play to turn to the best account whatever chance provision there may be. It is from these ordinary materials that the hurry dish must be contrived.

Meat Souffle. — Make a cupful of white sauce, seasoning it well and adding a little chopped parsley or shaved onion. The usual large spoonful of butter and as much flour must be very smoothly rubbed together, and either milk or milk and hot water in equal proportions used for thinning. A good sauce is perfectly smooth, and thick enough to mask the back of a spoon. Stir into the sauce a cupful of finely-chopped meat of any kind, available. Beat the yelks of two eggs, and add over the fire; remove, and when cooled, fold in the whites, beaten to a stiff froth. Bake half an hour in a buttered dish, and serve immediately.

Potato Puffs.—Add half a cupful of thin cream or sweet milk to a pint of mashed potatoes, then two well-beaten eggs. If the potato is not already seasoned, add butter, salt and white pepper to season properly. Beat till very light and creamy, and drop by spoonfuls on a buttered oven. Set in a hot oven, and they will brown while you are making coffee.

Stuffed Beefsteak.—Mix a teaspoonful of French mustard, one of celery salt, a pinch of cayenne, a saltspoonful of black pepper, a shaving of onion and one beaten egg. Thicken to a paste with fine bread crumbs. Spread this over the steak, roll and tie. Dredge with flour, and cook in a hot oven, basting it freely. This makes quite a different dish of an inferior round steak.

Ham with Tomatoes.—Put through the chopper enough lean ham to make one cupful. Mix it with a pint of fine bread crumbs two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley or shaved onion, salt and pepper to season highly, and moisten to bind it together with a little of the liquid drained from a can of tomatoes. Put half the solid fruit from the can in a baking dish, then the ham mixture, and over it the remainder of the tomato. Strew the top with bread crumbs, dot freely with butter and bake in a hot oven.

Baked Bean Croquettes.—Cold baked beans formed in small rolls with the hands, dipped in beaten egg and crumbs, and fried in deep fat make excellent croquettes. Should there be a lack of meat to accompany them, try broiling a few slices of bacon in the oven. Put it in a folding wire gridiron, with a pan under it; have the oven very hot, and it will cook quickly to crisp perfection, with no vital force wasted by means of smoke and dripping grease.

A PROVINCE IN NIGERIA

ONE OF BRITAIN'S LITTLE WARS JUST CONCLUDED IN SOKOTO.

Lively Little Affair in Which Natives Twice Charged British Bayonets—Revolt Was of Religious and Not of Political Origin — How Sheepish Natives Became Desperate Fighters—Peace With Their Extermination.

To few readers has the name Sokoto any significance; it might belong to a patent medicine or a tribe of Indians for all the man in the street knows or cares. Yet in Sokoto, a province in Nigeria, has just been concluded one of those little wars that are always beginning or ending somewhere or other under the British flag. The fight that crushed the rebellion must have been a lively little affair, for we read that the natives twice charged upon the British bayonets, and that 300 of them had to be killed before the survivors gave up. The rebels were practically annihilated, and the expedition supplies one more instance of the desperate fighters that religious fanaticism will make of the most sheepish and ignorant natives. That the Sokoto revolt was of religious and not political origin is proved by an article in The London Times. A Mahdi arose and told the people that the white men were to be driven out of Nigeria. Of the dense population of the district only a devout handful listened to him, but the faithful polished up their spears and knives and took the warpath. Then a punitive expedition was fitted out, and the machine guns harnessed up, and the Sokotans were wiped off the face of the earth, and peace resumes her reign in Nigeria.

The Nigerian Protectorates.

The Northern Nigerian protectorate was established on Jan. 15, 1900, and includes the northern portion of the territories formerly administered by the Royal Niger Co. The southern portion was taken over at the same time, and is known as Southern Nigeria. Each protectorate has a high commissioner and an administrative body, appointed by the British Government, as well as a small field force. Northern Nigeria is bounded on one side by French possessions in the hinterland of Dahomey and the Soudan, and on another side by German territory in the Cameroons. Thus it occupies an important strategical position. Control was established by slow degrees and only by the use of force; but in 1903 Kano, Sokoto, and Kategum were occupied, after some stiff fighting, and since then there has been quiet and content in these benighted regions.

An International Principle.

There was every reason for this satisfactory condition, as the Emir of Sokoto was established on his throne by the British, and felt grateful enough to swear on the Koran an oath of allegiance to King Edward. There is no evidence to show that he has broken faith. On the contrary, it appears that the Emir regards the revolt as directed against himself, not less than against the British. Moreover, to be quite accurate, the rising was in reality an invasion, for it seems to have originated in French territory, and it will be recalled that France has been doing some suppressing on her own account. Says The London Times:

"The whole matter illustrates the inevitable solidarity of European peoples in presence of a less fully developed civilization, and shows the impossibility of remaining indifferent to the methods employed by neighboring administrations. Disaffection in the territory of one power must have its sympathetic disturbance in another; and the moral to be drawn from most African troubles is that European agreement upon all important questions of native policy is very urgently to be desired."

The application of this dictum to the matters now under discussion at Algeciras will occur to everyone.

The Nigerian Prophecy.

Englishmen who have been in Northern Nigeria since the British protectorate was established now recall the prediction occasionally heard among the natives; that after five years of rule the white men would be swept away and not a trace of their occupation remain. That this tradition had in it elements of possibility will not be denied when one learns that the population of the Hausa States alone numbers about 30,000,000, and that the Hausas are but a portion of the Nigerian peoples. When the Mahdi arose and made his appeal to the religious feelings of the people he was disappointed at the answer, for while several thousands fell in behind him, the black millions remained indifferent or hostile. Religiously they considered him a heretic, politically an anarchist. To the Emir of Sokoto, who is also the head of the Mohammedan Church in the Western Soudan, they looked for leading in matters concerning the faith, and the Emir's satisfaction with British rule was well known to them all. Nevertheless the Mahdi and his followers declared for war, and first attacked and destroyed a French port. Then they crossed into British territory, and there, as the despatches tell us, met their fate.

Mohammedans Are Satisfied.

Speaking of some of the reasons that made the Mahdi's rising a forlorn hope, The London Times says:

"Our knowledge of the religious sentiments of the country is too slight, and the nature of religious movements is everywhere too inexplicable by rules of ordinary reason, to enable us to speak with certainty of the effect which may be produced on even the most peaceful population by fanatical preaching. But prosperity may always be trusted to act as a pacific influence. Nothing has given greater satisfaction to the Mohammedan population of Northern Nigeria than the guarantee everywhere publicly given and scrupulously maintained of perfect religious toleration under the British flag. The customs of the people have been respected their mosques and schools have flourished. Their chiefs have learned by association with white men the history of British rule in India, and they fully understand that no religious belief is endangered by their acceptance of British protection. In Nigeria it is the upper and relatively cultivated classes who are Mohammedans. The most ignorant part of the population, the peasantry, among whom the infection of religious excitement might be expected to spread, are for the most part pagan, and will of necessity remain indifferent to the preaching of a sacred war."

The Partition of West Africa.

Since it seems to be an accepted law that weak and uncivilized peoples occupying valuable land shall be subdued and controlled by Christian nations, it is a little late in the day to quarrel with the fact that the partition of West Africa has been completed by the European powers. Gambia, Sierra Leone, Lagos, the Gold Coast, and Nigeria are the Lion's share; the Germans have the Cameroons and Togoland; the French have Dahomey, and the Belgians have the Congo State. That the inhabitants of Nigeria should be happy and prosperous under British rule and unwilling to exchange it for the mastership of a Mahdi is a tribute to an administration, if not a justification of principle.

FORTUNE IN HOTEL TIPS.

Five Pound Notes Frequently Given by Wealthy Guests at London Hotels.

"Head waiters make more money in less time in London than in any other city in the world—but they keep the fact to themselves," said the manager of the Hotel Cecil.

"Unquestionably the richest members of the fraternity are the principal waiters at the leading London hotels. There is no telling what they make, but their incomes must run well into four figures.

"I know of one instance where a head waiter—an Alsatian of a very economical turn of mind—at a London hotel returned to Alsace not long ago to enjoy in retirement a snug fortune of between £15,000 to £16,000 he had accumulated in tips.'

"Charles Miller, who I see to-day reported to have retired from service at the Astor House Hotel, New York, with an estimated fortune of £20,000 is by no means the richest waiter. Oscar Tscherky, the head waiter, or superintendent, at the Waldorf-Astoria, I should say, is a millionaire, and he is still working. He is probably as much interested in the business as the proprietors.

All waiters through whom visitors settle their accounts are naturally in the best position for receiving "tips," and they are the envied of their lower-priced brethren.

It is a comparatively easy matter for a successful waiter who has saved a little money to start in business as a restaurateur on his own account in London. Brewers, bakers, butchers, or other tradesmen are often only too glad to help him, especially if he is well known.

Dining out is on the increase—so are the number of hotels — and waiters who are on the high road to fortune are those who study the peculiarities of customers and contrive to transform a casual patron into a regular visitor at his particular table.

Waiters are not the only people who make money at hotels and restaurants. Carriage and other attendants at well-known resorts frequently receive five-pound notes from wealthy patrons.

In October, 1904, it may be recalled, William McCullough, one of ten attendants in the cloak rooms at the Carlton Hotel, sued the management in the Westminster County Court for £83, 19s. as his share of £891, which represented the "tips" contributed by customers who used the rooms during the eighteen months he was employed there. The attendant, who said his nominal wages were 5s. a week, was awarded £50 by the jury.

In his evidence, Mr. McCullough said the "tips" given by customers were put in a box, and, at the end of each week, the contents were divided into specified shares, according to length of service and position among the attendants.

When he drew his first week's money—£2—he noticed, according to an account shown, that the company deducted from the week's "tips" £12 for uniforms, and £1 for "unnamed calls." He was shown a printed statement that attendants agreed to the deduction of this £13 each week, from March to September, and, for the remaining months, £9 per week.

Non-Irish Bulls.

The herding of bulls is not by any means confined to the Emerald Isle. It was a Scotchwoman who said that the butcher of her town only killed half a beast at a time. It was a Dutchman who said that a pig had no marks on his ears except a short tail. It was a British magistrate, who, on being told by a vagabond that he was not married, responded, "That's a good thing for your wife." It was a Portuguese mayor who enumerated, among the marks when found, "a marked impediment in his speech." It was a Frenchman who, contentedly laying his head upon a large stone jar for a pillow, stuffed it with hay. It was an American lecturer who solemnly said one evening, "Parent, you may have children; or, if not, your daughter may have." It was a German orator who, warming with his subject, exclaimed, "There is no man, woman, or child in the house who has arrived at the age of fifty years, but has felt the truth thundering through their minds for centuries."

A Gentle Hint.

Some time ago there lived a gentleman of indolent habits who spent his time visiting among his friends. After wearing out his welcome in his own neighborhood he thought he would visit an old Quaker friend some twenty miles distant.

On his arrival he was cordially received by the Quaker, who, thinking the visitor had taken much pains to come so far to see him, treated him with a great deal of attention and politeness for several days.

As the visitor showed no signs of leaving, the Quaker became uneasy, but bore it with patience until the eighth day, when he said to him:

"My friend, I am afraid thee will never come again."

"Oh, yes, I shall," said the visitor. "I have enjoyed my visit very much, and shall certainly come again."

"But," said the Quaker, "if thee will never leave, how can thee come again?"—Black and White.

THE PLANET MERCURY.

Like Venus and For Like Cause, It Is Now a Dead World.

Mercury is a body devoid, practically if not absolutely, of air, of water and of vegetation. Consequently it is incapable of supporting any of those higher organisms which we know as living beings. Its surface is a vast desert. It is rough rather than smooth. Whether this roughness be due to mountains proper or to craters we are too far away from it to be able yet to say. The latter is the more probable. Over the greater part of its surface change either diurnal or seasonal is unknown. Three-eighths of its surface is steeped in perpetual glare, three-eighths shrouded in perpetual gloom, while the remaining quarter slowly turns between the two. The planet itself, as a world, is dead.

Interesting as Mercury thus proves to be, the interest as regards the planet itself is of a rather corpselike character. Less deterrent perhaps is the interest it possesses as a part of the life history of the solar system, for tidal friction, the closing act in the cosmic drama, has brought it where it is. The machine has run down. Whether it ever supported life upon its surface or not, the power to do so has now forever passed away. Like Venus and for like cause, it is now a dead world. And it was the first thus to reach the end of its evolutionary career, earlier to do so than Venus, inasmuch as tidal action was very much greater upon it than on Venus and consequently produced its effect more quickly. Mercury has long been dead. How long, measured by centuries, we cannot say, but practically for a very long time. Venus must have become so comparatively recently. Both, however, now have finished their course and have in a most literal sense entered into their rest.

SEEING SICILY.

Not to Know This Island Is Not to Know Greece.

There are some lands which have always laid a spell upon the mind, upon the imagination, upon the heart. Greece, above all other countries, has entranced the mind. The imagination has ever loved the east—Egypt, the Indies, forgotten Asia, the almost as mysterious Asia of today. For most of us the home land is the country of the heart; for many, it may be, it is Palestine, where was lighted the fire at which the hearts of incalculable millions are still warmed. Others are content to say with Emerson in the fine essay on "Heroism," "That country is the fairest which is inhabited by the noblest minds." But, above all other lands, there is one which has at once impressed the mind, the imagination and the heart of western peoples. When a famous poet declared that on his heart would be found engraved the word Italy the words voiced the emotion of a multitude in every country of Europe and in the great northern continent oversea.

To see Sicily, the old "Garden of the Sun," as the poets have loved to call it, is not to see Italy, though there may be a measure of truth in Goethe's remark that not to know Sicily is not to know Italy. In a sense one might more truly say of Sicily that not to know it is not to know Greece. In another sense, however, we have in this most beautiful of islands the intensification of Italy. Whatever is most Italian is in evidence here, though it is Italian of the south and not of the north. What a gulf divides them is known only to those familiar with the whole peninsula.—William Sharp in Century.

"Bulls" Not Irish.

Those who are not Irishmen sometimes trespass on Irish property. A French cure, preaching about sudden death, said, "Thus it is with us—we go to bed well and get up stone dead!"

An old French lawyer writing of an estate he had just bought added, "There is a chapel upon it in which my wife and I wish to be buried, if God spares our lives."

A merchant who died suddenly left in his bureau a letter to one of his correspondents which he had not sealed. His clerk, seeing it necessary to send the letter, wrote at the bottom, "Since writing the above I have died."

A Sentiment and an Autograph.

A certain young lady, so the story runs, wrote to F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, requesting that he send her a bit of sentiment and his autograph. The reply was:

Dear Miss A.—When you request a favor that is of interest only to yourself, please inclose a two cent stamp. There's your sentiment, and here's your autograph. F. MARION CRAWFORD.

A Simple Precaution.

Landlady (of country inn on the eve of a popular holiday to her daughter, who is kneading the dough for a cake)—Resel, you'd better put a couple of eggs and a bit of butter into the cake. It looks as if we were going to have a storm, and if the townsfolk don't stir out tomorrow we shall have to eat it ourselves.—From the German.

Language.

Language is a solemn thing. It grows out of life—out of its agonies and ecstasies, its wants and its weariness. Every language is a temple in which the soul of those who speak it is enshrined.—O. W. Holmes.

Feminine Finesse.

Duffer—My wife got a fiver out of me today with one happy remark. Puffer—Let's have it. Duffer—She told our boy Willie that she was his nearest relative, but that I was his closest.

CITY COUNCIL'S LONG SESSION.

Sat Until Midnight Last Evening, and Then Adjourned Till To-night--Civic Salaries Caused Two Hours' Talk--Some Proposed Increases Were Not Made--Estimates Read But Not Adopted.

The City Council sat until midnight last night, and if they had cleaned up the order paper they might have sat till daylight. The reason for the long-drawn-out session was that the salary question took up a lot of valuable time, and the estimates for the year were discussed, but not adopted. The salary question, after being threshed out for about two hours, finally wound up this way: The engineers at the pumphouse get their increase; Dr. Yeomans, Medical Health Officer, gets an increase of $100 a year, and everybody else remains exactly in statu quo.

There were no absentees.

Ald. Knox was chairman in committee of the whole.

The reports of the standing committees, as already published, were passed without discussion.

A recommendation prevailed that the Street Surveyor and Chairman of Public Works obtain information as to a crusher, and also as to the best kind of paving, and that they may visit cities to acquire such information, and that the Treasurer be authorized to pay the expense of same on application of the chairman.

The chairman of Public Works, in the course of a discussion, promised that Mill street would be cleaned before long.

The following accounts were passed:—

E. Stapley	$ 6.60
H Carre	10.00
G.N.W. Telegraph Co.	.25
E. C. Clarke	17.16

A petition from residents of Meyers street, that that thoroughfare be repaired, was referred to the Public Works committee, the Street Surveyor being instructed to bring in a report in regard to this and other streets.

A recommendation prevailed that [illegible]able Patrick Hayes be appointed [illegible]lding Inspector at a salary of $[illegible] month.

INTERESTING STATEMENTS.

Mayor Sulman, who, in company with Ald. Marsh, was in Ottawa last week with the deputation, spoke in reference to their visit. The Trent Valley Canal would be finished but the route was not named. In reference to the drill shed, the Hon. Minister of Public Works stated that the foundation would be built this year. The deputation had an interview with Col. Biggar in reference to the location of the permanent camp. What is wanted by the Government is 200 acres of suitable land and they needed water and light. The Mayor thought it would be a wise move if the Belleville Council could secure this camp, as it would mean a large sum of money left in the city every year.

In answer to an enquiry His Worship said that when the Government decided to establish a permanent camp it would no doubt purchase the site.

Ald. Marsh stated that the Hon. Mr Hyman assured the deputation that something would be done this year in reference to the drill shed.

SALARY INCREASES.

The Executive Committee's report re civic salaries recommended the following schedule;

Engineer Malleck, $55 per month.

Engineer McCrudden—$50.00 per month.

Solicitor and Clerk Mikel — $1200 per year.

Dr. Yeomans, Health Officer—$200 per year.

City Treasurer D. Price—$1040.00 per year.

P. Meagher, Janitor—$480.00 per per year.

That the application of W. J. Thomson, manager of the Gas Works, for an increased salary be referred to the Gas committee for further consideration with the auditors' report.

The recommendation re Manager Thomson was adopted.

Ald. Sinclair moved that the increase to the engineers at the pumphouse and to the Medical Health Officer be adopted, and the remainder of increases proposed be struck out.

Ald. Marsh thought that if one official was entitled to an increase, then all were.

Ald. Green was not in favor of the report presented to-night, but considered the former report was about right. In 1899 the city paid $1,000 to the City Clerk and $600 to the City Solicitor. If the salaries we were then paying were equitable then they were not just and equitable to-day. Since that time extra work was placed upon this official. The same can be said about other officials. In 1899 the City Treasurer's salary was $900, and he had nothing to do with water and gas. The increase in the cost of living since that time cannot be denied, and the officials have also increased duties.

Ald. Paterson moved that the report be adopted.

Ald. Gordon said he would like to see the Street Surveyor have an increase of $100 and thought that an additional $60 should be given to the Treasurer, making his increase $100. He would make an amendment to that effect.

Ald. Panter thought the salaries were good, and if the positions were vacant he believed the same gentlemen would apply for them at the salaries designated by the report. He would be willing to give an additional $100 to the Clerk on account of services rendered to the gas works. He thought that if increases were to be made they should apply to every person who draws a salary from the city.

Ald. Paterson said he would withdraw his motion and support Ald. Gordon's amendment.

Ald. Panter had no doubt the officials were efficient but the question was should the city pay more for the work than it could get it done for? He would like to know if the city finances would allow the increases contemplated.

Ald. Marsh stated that he had the estimates prepared and he had placed the increases in the estimates.

Ald. Sinclair contended that his motion should be adopted. The Mayor, in his inaugural address, recommended that the salaries of the officials be fixed and a special committee had considered it. To pick Mr. Mikel out as the only official to be raised in salary he did not like. It looked to him like favoritism.

The Mayor said he had no favorites in this matter. He supported an increase in salary to the engineers at the pumphouse and also the Medical Health Officer.

Ald. Sinclair — "The Mayor only voted for an increase to Mr. Mikel's salary."

Ald. Cooper did not think the remarks of Ald. Sinclair were called for, and he did not like to hear them made.

Ald. Gordon's amendment was defeated, as only four voted for it, namely, Ald. Gordon, Marsh, McCrodan and Paterson.

A vote was taken on Ald. Sinclair's motion, which resulted in a tie, Ald. Marsh, Green, Panter, Sinclair and Vermilyea voting for it, and Ald. Gordon, Cooper, Paterson, McCrodan and the Mayor voted against it.

The chairman, Ald. Knox, voted in favor of Ald. Sinclair's motion, which was carried.

The Clerk contended that he had extra work and should be given extra pay. He did not think that he had been fairly dealt with.

Ald. Sinclair — "Your friends killed you."

The use of the Council Chamber was granted to the Cheese Board during the coming season.

A communication from Mr. S. S. Lazier, re taxes on a vacant lot on George street, which he claimed he had paid, and which does not now appear as a payment, was referred to the chairman of the Executive Committee and the Treasurer.

Mr. F. D. Diamond applied to be appointed tax collector for 1906.

Ald. Panter thought that Mr. Diamond had made an efficient collector.

Ald. Marsh said a by-law to appoint a tax collector would be brought in later.

The Belleville Portland Cement Co. wrote, thanking the Council for their offer to purchase 2000 barrels of cement at $1.83 per barrel.

THE ESTIMATES.

Ald. Marsh stated that he had prepared the estimates, which were ready to be submitted to the Council. The rate of taxation would be the same as last year, namely, 23 1-2 mills. He read over the various items of controllable and uncontrollable expenditure, which showed that $3,000 was the appropriation for the Public Works Committee and $5,200 for the Fire Committee.

Ald. Panter did not think that $6,000 was sufficient for the Public Works Committee. He thought that another $1000 should be added to that Committee's estimate.

Ald. Cooper thought that if he, as chairman of the Fire Committee, had to buy hose and pay for extra work done to the fire halls, the estimate of $5,200 was not enough. He might also be compelled to pay some of the men increased salaries.

Ald. Sinclair suggested that the estimates be laid over until the next meeting.

The Mayor stated that another matter to be considered was street crossings which were needed to be built in various parts of the city.

Ald. Cooper said that it would cost at least $200 more this year to draw the hose carts and hook and ladder wagons.

Ald. Marsh moved the adoption of the estimates. He had asked the chairman of the committees to give him estimates of what they wanted, and some had not complied with that request.

Ald. Cooper moved in amendment that the appropriation for the Fire committee be $5,500, and the Public Works appropriation be $7,000.

After some further discussion it was decided to meet again Tuesday evening to pass the estimates.

MR. MIKEL MAKES A STATEMENT.

The Clerk wished, before the committee rose, to speak about his case. He had given unstinted service and time to the city and had earned more money before he took the office than he did now. He was obliged to keep a clerk and other extra expenses such as having a telephone in his house on account of doing the city work properly. The work he was doing could not, he was certain, be done by anyone for the salary he was given. The Medical Health Officer's salary had been raised to the proper standard and he considered his salary should also be raised. His work had become greatly increased. He did not consider that he had been fairly dealt with in this matter.

The Mayor said the position of Clerk was ably filled to-day and everything was in first-class order. He did not think that Mr. Mikel was getting what was due him.

On motion the committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Marsh moved, seconded by Ald. Vermilyea, That a committee composed of the Mayor and Chairman of the Executive be appointed to ascertain upon what terms 200 acres for the holding of a military camp could be rented.—Carried.

Ald. Panter gave notice of a motion to repeal all provisions of the Dog by-law.

At the witching hour of midnight the Council adjourned until Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"VIRGINIUS" TO-MORROW NIGHT

The dramatic event of the season will probably be the appearance of the great tragedian, Louis James, at the Carman to-morrow night, when he will present "Virginius." Mr. James, we believe, has surrounded himself with an excellent company, headed by that clever young actor, Norman Hackett, who will be well remembered by his splendid performances in support of Mr. James in the past. Another fine actor is Charles Stedman, who years ago supported such illustrious stars as Booth, Barrett, McCullough, James A. Young is also conspicuously cast, likewise Harry C. Barton, Milton Nobles, jr., Terese Deagle, Aphie James and Ethel Harding.

MOST INTERESTING.

The repertoire of plays selected by the manager of Marks Brothers' Dramatic Company, headed by the charming actress, May A. Bell Marks, who will appear at the Carman opera house for six nights and two matinees, commencing next Monday evening, is as follows: Monday, "The Banker's Wife"; Tuesday, "Lost in London"; Wednesday, "Little Starlight"; Thursday, "For His Sake"; Friday, "A Bird in a Cage"; Saturday, "The Girl from 'Frisco"; matinees — Wednesday, "Under Two Flags"; Saturday, "Kathleen Mavourneen." They are all popular and successful and it can be truthfully said that there will not be a dull night during the week's engagement.

FOUND GUILTY OF SWINDLING.

GEO. A. BOOTH, FORMERLY OF TRENTON, IN SERIOUS TROUBLE IN MONTREAL.

Montreal, April 2. — George A. Booth, of Trenton, Ont., who was found guilty on Friday of false pretences, was condemned Saturday morning, by Judge Choquet, to pay a fine of $50 or serve four months in jail. Chief Detective Carpenter says that Booth is wanted in Napanee, Ont., to answer to a charge of false pretences and when he leaves the jail here there will be a warrant awaiting his arrest on the Napanee charge.

In the court of Special Sessions here Booth was charged with having received, under false pretences, thirty dozen of eggs from G. A. Goulet, The Brook, Ont.

Booth sent out circulars under the name of Band & Co., requesting farmers in different places to send him their butter and eggs, and he would sell for them on commission, or purchase the produce. It was proven that he made arrangements with two or three local firms to receive any produce that was sent addressed to him, and gave them instructions to advance 50 per cent., and dispose of the goods for whatever they could get.

Judge Choquet explained to Booth that honesty was the best policy and that if he wished to succeed in life he must stick to honest ways. Booth was arrested here February 23, and has been in jail since then.

THE LLOYD CASE.

IS LIKELY TO COME UP TO-MORROW — NEW EVIDENCE MAY BE FORTHCOMING.

It is not likely that the Lloyd murder trial will be proceeded with before to-morrow, as a civil case, Moon vs. Mather, was taken up by the Assize Court when it reassembled this afternoon.

It is said that some new evidence, not submitted before Magistrate Flint, may come out in the forthcoming trial.

BASKET BALL.

Albert Rises to Remark.

The Albert College boys desire to state that they played basket ball at great disadvantage on Friday night at Peterboro. Jack Goddard, right guard, one of the most experienced men on the team, was at the last moment unable to go on account of a sprained ankle, and his place had to be taken by Geo. Wilson, who, although a clever player, had not practised with the team and had not played a game since December. When the Peterboro boys played at Albert in December the college boys won by a score of 40—16, so that on the two games, Albert wins on the total by 6 points.

A CHICKEN CASE.

J. F. Eagle was charged with purloining a chicken from Mr. H. Lake. From the evidence of Mr. Lake it appeared that Eagle last night went to the barn of Mr. J. C. Lake and took away a game rooster, which was the property of Mr. H. Lake. The bird was valued at $1.50. Officer Downs testified that he found the bird in Mr. Eagle's possession. The defendant alleged that the rooster was his property and was taken away from his barn. After considerable evidence had been submitted the Magistrate imposed a fine of $3 upon Mr. Eagle.

INSURANCE BILL PASSED.

Governor Higgins of the State of New York on Signing Made Some Eminently Sensible Remarks.

Albany, April 3.—The first of the ten bills proposed by the special investigating committe, as the result of its long and sensational investigation of life insurance methods and conditions, is now a law. Governor Higgins yesterday afternoon affixed his signature to the bill, which postpones until Nov. 15, the annual elections of the New York Life, Mutual of New York, Mutual Reserve of New York and Security Mutual of Binghamton — the four purely mutual life insurance companies incorporated under the laws of this state. It does not affect the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which is a stock company.

In approving the bill, Governor Higgins filed a memorandum in which, after summarizing the provisions of the bill, he says:

Few Have Been Loyal.

"The bill is a useful one. It takes the control of certain companies from the present boards of directors, members of which have been discredited by the poor account given on their stewardship to the investigating committee. Some were careless, some selfish, and few proved so loyal to the interests of policyholders as to justify their being continued in office, except by the exercise of the enlightened franchises of such policyholders.

"On the other hand, the policyholders must now act with calmness and intelligence, lest their last condition be worst than their first; lest under the new regime an anxious and hungry horde of adventurers, of self-guaranteed integrity, obtain, by loud assurances of good will, the misplaced confidence of those who blindly seek refuge from existing evils.

Beware of Proxies.

"The bill provides that no proxy executed prior to Sept. 15, 1906, shall be valid. Each policyholder affected by this act should think carefully and enquire cautiously into the motives of those who solicit his vote, before giving his proxy. Organization is inevitable, but the control of the companies should pass to wise and conservative financiers, and not to energetic and plausible promoters."

SHOT TWELVE KAFFIRS.

They Murdered Policemen During An Uprising At Natal.

Pietermaritzburg, Natal, April 3.—The twelve natives condemned to death for the murder of policemen during the uprising in February against the collection of the poll tax, the postponement of whose execution led to a dispute between the Imperial and Colonial Governments, were shot yesterday morning.

At the request of Governor McCullom, and in view of the Earl of Elgin's assurances, the Natal Ministry has withdrawn its resignation.

Called Murder.

London, April 3.—The announcement of the execution of the Natal natives was received with angry cries of "shame" from the Irish Nationalists and Labor benches, and from some Liberals in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. One Ministerialist amid cheers and some protests described the execution as "bloodthirsty murder," and James Ramsey Macdonald, secretary of the Labor representation committee, promptly moved an adjournment of the House to discuss the manner in which martial law was being applied in Natal, and "to the imminent and great danger to which the native subjects of the crown are involved in its administration."

The motion was debated last evening, but nothing new developed.

PROPHET DOWIE REPUDIATED.

Mrs. Dowie and Son Cast Lots With New Leader Elected.

Chicago, April 3.—At a meeting Sunday of 5,000 adherents of the Christian Catholic Church at Zion City, of which John Alexander Dowie, is the founder and first apostle, Dowie's authority was repudiated, and Wilbur Glenn Voliva, who for some time has been conducting the affairs of the church, was elected in his stead. Mrs. Dowie also repudiated her husband, and their son, Gladstone Dowie, cast his lot with his mother and the new leader, Voliva.

PRINCE OF WALES COMING.

London, April 3.—(C. A. P.)—Reynolds' Newspaper Sunday, in "Secret History of To-day," said it it quite on the cards that the Prince of Wales may make another Australian voyage, leaving England in September or October next, returning by way of Japan and Canada. The Canadian Associated Press has private information that it is possible that the Prince may go direct to Japan, and return by way of Canada.

London, April 3.—The portrait of Benjamin Franklin, which, as announced by Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, at the Pilgrims' dinner in New York, March 31, is being restored to the United States, will be shipped this week. It is already in the possession of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid.

Infernal Machine Exploded.

Askabad, Turkestan, April 3.—A time infernal machine was exploded yesterday in the vestibule of the Governor-General's residence, shattering part of the wall and blowing a gun, which was mounted on one side of the entrance, across the street, but injuring no one.

St. Petersburg, April 3.—M. Annesky, a well-known writer, and M. Orishkoff, president of the railroad congress, which ordered the railroad strike of last fall, have been exiled to Archangel by administrative order.

TO OVERTHROW CASTRO.

New York and Paris Capital Is Financing An Army Expedition to Capture Venezuela.

New York, April 3.—One of the largest merchants in New York said Sunday night that arrangements are being perfected here and in Paris for a revolution in Venezuela which will annihilate Castro and open up that country to American capital and enterprise.

A number of rich New York merchants are said to be interested in the movement, which the promoters declare will involve the employment of 15,000 soldiers and the expenditure of $5,000,000 in the campaign. President Castro, if the plans do not go astray, is to be expelled or destroyed and a native Venezuelan statesman to be installed as his successor.

In this connection it is said that Castro, anticipating a successful revolution against him sooner or later, has converted some of his alleged $40,000,000 fortune into cash and has sent it to America and France.

Charles B. Fergueredo, Venezuelan consul in New York, said Sunday night at his home that he had heard an expedition was being organized or promoted, but had been unable to learn anything definite about it. He said he had understood shares in the scheme were being sold.

"I would like to get hold of one of those shares," he said. "I would buy all that was offered."

The consul inquired eagerly as to the point the expedition was to sail from.

The expedition is to set out shortly from Europe in three large steamships, which are already under contract. They are to carry about 5,000 volunteers, with the following quantities of arms and ammunition: 8,000 mauser rifles of the latest pattern; 24,000 rounds of cartridges, 5,000 shells, eight rapid-fire guns, 8,000 army belts, 1,000 officers' swords, 1,000 officers' revolvers, 3,000 machetes and swords and other supplies.

Japan Thanks Canada.

Ottawa, April 3.—The Japanese Government have instructed Hon. T. Nosse, their Consul-General in Ottawa, as follows: "Convey to the Canadian Government the sincere thanks of the Imperial Japanese Government for their philanthropic donation in relief of the famine sufferers. (Signed) Marquis Saionji, Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Currants.

Currants are really little grapes, quite without seeds, having thin skins and very sweet. They have been known from very ancient times, for the name itself is a corruption of "Corinth," the Greek city where they were originally cultivated. Vines produce no fruit for three years after planting, but in the fourth year there is a small crop, which increases up to the twelfth. Those grown in the island of Zante are most esteemed. Currants are simply dried in the sun on the ground and then packed for shipment. In some parts of Greece they are also made into a sweet wine.

Norway In Scotland.

Few people are aware of the fact that the Orkney and Shetland islands, strictly speaking, belong to the kingdom of Norway. Toward the close of the fifteenth century King Christian of Norway pledged the Orkneys and the Shetlands, over which his rule was undisputed, to King James III. of Scotland for the payment of the dowry of his daughter Margaret, who became queen of Scotland. The pledge has not yet been redeemed.

Begging.

A man on being accosted by a beggar said:

"Why don't you go to work? Why do you waste your time begging?"

The beggar drew himself up.

"Did you ever beg?" he said.

"No, of course not," said the man.

"Then," said the beggar, "you don't know what work is."

Montreal, April 2.—(Special.)—Liverpool and London cables on Canadian cattle came firmer, with prices slightly higher at 11¼c, while Glasgow advices stated that the prospects for trade were fair. Exports from Portland and St. John, N.B., were 4023 cattle and 658 sheep. Receipts were 1300 cattle, 50 milch cows, 200 calves and 900 hogs. The weather was favorable, and the butchers turned out in full force, and trade was fair, with firm prices for all good cattle. A few extra Easter beeves were sold at 6c per lb.; prime beeves at 5c to 5¾c; the common stock at 2¾c to 3¾c, and large bulls at 3¾c to 5c. Several carloads of extra cattle were sold to go to Quebec, and Mr. Williams of Whitby, Ont., sold a load of extra cattle to the Montreal Meat Packing Company at a little less than 6c per lb. Milch cows sold at $25 to $55 each. An extra calf sold for $15; the other calves sold at $2 to $6 each. A much stronger feeling developed in the market for hogs, and prices advanced 25c per hundred pounds. This was due to the increased demand from packers, the comparatively small offerings and the strong advices from European sources on Canadian bacon. An active trade was done, and the competition between buyers for supplies was keen. Sales of selected lots were made at $7.75 to $7.85, and lower grades at $7.60 to $7.65 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars. Our cables on Saturday reported the markets for Canadian bacon stronger. Liverpool prices showed an advance of 2s to 2s 6d, at 56s to 63s. Bristol, 2s higher, at 55s to 63s, and London was firm.

AUTOMOBILE TALK.

Mr. Sutherland's Bill Discussed in the Legislature—Americans Chief Offenders, Says Premier Whitney.

Toronto, April 3.—But six Oppositionists and 26 Government members were in their seats in the Legislature yesterday. It was an extremely dull session, enlivened only by some talk on the auto, arising out of Mr. Sutherland's bill.

Mr. Ross was informed by Hon. Dr. Reaume that 85 fishery overseers had been dismissed since Feb. 7, 1904, and that 139 new appointments had been made, 15 of these without salary. Two game wardens had been dismissed, and there had been four new appointments, two to replace the men dismissed and one each for Nipissing and Algoma.

Five private bills were advanced through the committee stage.

When Mr. Pratt's bill to regulate proprietary and patent medicines came up for its second reading the Premier said it was out of order for a private member to introduce a bill of that character.

Natural Gas Wells.

Mr. Kohler asked for a second reading for his bill respecting natural gas wells, the object being to prevent damage to property by the boring of wells.

The Premier thought the bill was a decided encouragement to litigation. He did not wish the mover to withdraw his bill, but wanted some change. He could not see the merits of the bill.

Mr. Kohler observed that the sinking of wells very often drains a farmer's well, and in such a case the farmer should be reimbursed.

Then Hon. Mr. Hanna offered the experience of the Petrolea oil field. It was very often the case that a man sinking an oil well drew the oil from his neighbor.

The bill stands over.

Again the Auto.

Motor legislation was again discussed on Mr. Sutherland's bill coming up for its second reading. Mr. Sutherland admitted that the auto had come to stay, and it would not be wise to forbid its use; but the laws of Ontario in this respect were altogether too lax.

Mr. Hoyle voiced the feeling in the country districts against the auto.

It would be impossible to stop the automobile, said Mr. Whitney. But they might improve the law; there were defects, no doubt, to be removed. He opposed the clause which provides that one-half the fines imposed should go to the informer. The effect of that would be strictly immoral. It was also, he thought, be useless to demand the name of the driver of a vehicle. A majority of those breaking the law and causing accidents were Americans, and even if they gave their names they would be out of the country before anything could be done. The Premier also pointed out that it would be wrong to allow municipalities to designate certain roads for the use of autos. He showed how a driver of a motor vehicle who wished to pass into another municipality would be submitted to endless vexation if the law passed.

Hon. Dr. Willoughby said the motorists were driving the horsemen off the good roads to the by-roads. Usually a man who owned an automobile had more money than brains, and would have to be taught a lesson.

Rights of Municipalities.

Mr. Little complained that the Legislature had taken the right to control the highways from the municipalities. He would have automobilists restrained from using the roads after sundown, because of the fright caused to horses by the blinding flashlights. Those who were using autos at the present time were sports, and they were "rushing pell-mell all over the country."

Mr. McNaught upheld the right of the autoist as of any other British subject to use the highways. Because a few cranks hit up a speed of 30 or 40 miles an hour was no reason why the others should be restricted.

Mr. Preston (Brant) feared that if the present restriction were of no use, it would be futile to make any more. He agreed with the Premier that the giving of municipal councils power to prescribe the roads to be used was one of the most objectionable features. He believed that making it compulsory for autoists to give their names after an accident, and the licensing of chauffeurs, were steps in the right direction.

Mr. Reed was against any drastic changes. He thought the present laws might be more thoroughly enforced.

Withdraws One Clause.

Mr. Sutherland consented to withdraw the clause of his bill fixing the amount of fine, and what portion thereof should go to the municipality. He expressed a hope that whatever changes might be made that the municipalities would be given power to regulate the speed and determine what roads should be used.

The bill was sent on to the municipal committee.

TO SLAY ROYAL FAMILY.

Alleged Anarchist Plot Is Discovered Near Seville.

Madrid, April 3.—The Spanish authorities have discovered an Anarchists' plot at Lebrija, 29 miles from Seville, the notorious centre of the Black Hands, to assassinate the royal family during the visit of King Alfonso, the Dowager Queen Christina and the sister of the King, the Infanta Maria Teresa, to Seville during Holy Week. The censorship prevents the sending of details regarding the conspiracy.

Too Aged to Appear In Court.

Toronto, April 3.—In reference to the application of Lady Wilson to reopen the accounts of her late husband's estate, of which the Toronto General Trusts Corporation is executor, she will be questioned at her residence by Judge Winchester. F. E. Hodgins, K.C., counsel for Lady Wilson, suggested this course because of the great age of his client. She is 86 years of age, and a doctor's certificate was produced, stating that it would not be wise for her to appear in court.

FIRST DAY FRUITLESS

Anthracite Committees Adjourn Until Thursday.

Tie-Up of the Anthracite Industry Remains as Complete As It Was—Working Agreement Drafted by the Anthracite Strike Commission Not Aceptable to the Miners—Soft Coal Situation Improves.

New York, April 4.—The sub-committees representing the anthracite operators and the mine workers or eastern Pennsylvania held their first joint meeting here yesterday, and after nearly a three-hours' session adourned on Mr. Mitchell's suggestion until 1 p. m. Thursday, without coming to an agreement.

Each side to the controversy has refused to make the slightest concession, and the whole question is apparently as far from solution as it was before yesterday's conference begun. In the meantime the tie-up of the anthracite industry remains as complete as it was.

Not Acceptable.

Mitchell's attitude indicated that the counter proposition made by the operators for a renewal of the working agreement drafted by the anthracite strike commission, was not acceptable to the miners.

Mr. Mitchell, in discussing the situation in the bituminous fields, said he had received many telegrams during the day from the soft coal fields which satisfied him that affairs in those regions are working themselves out as he had anticipated. Thousands of men, he said, returned to work today under the scale of 1903, which gives them an increase of 5.55 cents over the wages received during the last two years."

44,000 On Strike In France.

Lens, France, April 4.—The strikers in the mining districts now number 44,000. Seven arrests have been made on charges of exploding dynamite cartridges and stoning the police and non-strikers. The strikers made a determined demonstration yesterday against the arrests, but the cavalry charged and dispersed them. The coal companies are discontinuing the workmen's trains, and the feeling against the companies is increasing.

Mine Company Is Accused.

Paris, April 4.—In the chamber of deputies yesterday, M. Basly, president of the Miners' Federation, who is deputy for the department of the Pas de Calais, in which the Courrieres mine disaster occurred, declared that the fire which caused the explosion, and which resulted in the loss of over 1,200 lives, originated in a heap of rubbish which had accumulated owing to the company's negligence. The Minister of Public Works announced that the Government would rigoreusly investigate the disaster.

Back to the Cars.

Winnipeg, April 4.—A settlement of the strike is likely to soon be reached. Yesterday, for the first day since the strike, there has been a noticeable patronage of the ca

Government Takes Another Forward Step For People.

Premier Whitney on the Gillies' Limit: "We Will Keep It and We Will Develop It and Dispose of It For the Benefit of the People of Ontario" Believed to Be Loaded With Silver Ore —One Sale Announced.

Toronto, April 4.—Just before the Legislature rose at 6 o'clock yesterday, Premier Whitney made two announcements of Government policy with regard to the valuable mineral lands of the north. He said in brief:

The Government proposes to hold the Gillies' timber limit for the benefit of the people of Ontario. This limit adjoins the rich Cobalt region and it is believed that a portion of it is loaded with silver ore.

The Government proposes to ask for tenders for three and a half miles of the right of way of the Temiskaming Railway, in the immediate neighborhood of the silver bearing mines.

Regarding the right of way Mr. Whitney said the Government proposed to invite tenders for the purchase of that portion described on the plans as between 101 and 105, a distance of three miles and a half. This right of way was believed to be rich in silver ore. Some time ago it had been turned over by the Government to the Temiskaming Railway Commission.

Three Conditions.

In a short time tenders would be advertised for and the mineral rights of this mileage sold to the highest bidder, on three conditions being complied with, namely:

1. A rental of $500 a year for the use of any land outside the 99 feet of right of way, the land to be used for buildings only.
2. The payment of $50,000 in cash to the Government, as a bonus.
3. A percentage to be paid to the Government, as follows: Ten per cent. of the ore to the value of $100 a ton or less: 25 per cent. of the value of $1,000 or less; 50 per cent. of the value of $1,000 or over.

These would be the conditions, observed Mr. Whitney, and the successful bidder would have to give at least $50,000 for the privilege. The Government did not say the bonus would be no more than that amount; but it would not be less.

For the Public Good.

Regarding the Gillies' limit, Mr. Whitney said he understood that the property consisted of valuable ore-producing land. It was well known that the limit had been withdrawn from sale and that the owners of the timber had disposed of the timber. There had been a great deal of curiosity as to whether the Government would dispose of the minerals on this property in the usual way; and he desired to say that the Government, after much consideration, had come to the conclusion not to dispose of it.

"It being our property," said Mr. Whitney, "we will keep it and we will develop it and dispose of it for the benefit of the people of Ontario."

The Gillies' timber limit consists of about 100 square miles. It is in the form of a triangle and the apex runs into the organized Township of Coleman, to within a half mile of the Town of Cobalt. The mineralized portion of the limit consists of about three square miles.

The output of the 17 working mines in the Cobalt district last year was as follows:

Silver, 2,441,421 ounces, of the value of $1,355,306.

Cobalt, 118 tons, of the value of $100,000.

In addition to arsenic and nickle.

Will Encourage Smelters.

The announcement of policy by Premier Whitney was received with loud applause from the Government supporters, in which Mr. Smith, Liberal member for the Soo, joined. It is believed that this forward step will lead to the establishment of Government smelters in New Ontario. This has been advocated for some years by Mr. Gamey. At present most of the ore from Cobalt goes to New Jersey, but the Copper Cliff Mining Co. has installed a smelter and is getting a portion of this business.

Routine in the House.

A lively discussion on Mr. Hanna's liquor license bill, especially with reference to the dismissal of Toronto officials, took place.

Hon. Dr. Reaume introduced a bill respecting colonization roads, which provides that no grants shall be made towards constructing or improving roads by the province except under this act and by the act for the improvement of public highways.

Mr. Lennox brought in an amended auto regulating bill.

Major Craig introduced a bill for the inspection of school children's teeth.

Hon. Dr. Reaume's bill for the improvement of public highways was read a second time, as was Hon. Mr. Cochrane's Volunteer Veterans' Land Grants Act.

Hon. Adam Beck introduced a bill entitled "An Act Respecting Local Municipal Telephones," which provides that municipal councils may organize a telephone system if a group of citizens petition for such service.

Sleeper Burns to Death.

Wallaceburg, April 4.—At an early hour yesterday morning fire was discovered in a house on Wallace street occupied by Robert Maclean. Thos. Coulter, who was sleeping in one of the upper rooms was burned to death. Coulter, who was drunk Monday evening was helped to his room. The people sleeping below were awakened by fire falling from the ceiling on their bed. The fire then had gained so much headway there was no possibility of getting Coulter out. An inquest will be held.

Earl Is in Washington.

New York, April 4.—Earl Grey, Governor-General of Canada, left New York for Washington yesterday afternoon, and will remain at the capital several days.

President Roosevelt gave a dinner at the White House last night in honor of the Governor-General of Canada and Countess Grey and their party.

Took Acid For Medicine.

Toronto, April 4.—In mistake for a bottle of medicine William J. Ferguson, a laborer, 79 Ontario street, took a dose from a bottle of carbolic acid early yesterday morning. He died within a few minutes after taking the dose. Mr. Ferguson was 54 years of age. He leaves a widow and eight children.

Murder Will Out.

Snowflake, Man., April 4.—The body of Vincent Weller of Mount Carmel, N. D., missing since last November, was discovered Monday evening in a wild and secluded spot in the bush in the Pembina Valley, about four miles east of Snowflake. Weller, when last seen, was in company of M. Doyle of North Dakota. When Doyle returned to town a few hours later alone he was very much excited. He was arrested on suspicion, but later released on bail. Weller was evidently murdered, as a bullet hole was found in the back of the head, and his throat was cut.

The Proposed New Patent Medicine Act.

There is now before the Ontario Legislature a bill introduced by Mr. Pratt, M. P. P., entitled "An Act Regulating the Manufacture and Sale of Proprietary and Patent Medicines."

While it might be well to eliminate some patent medicines and nostrums from the market and stop effectually the scattering of free samples promiscuously on residential door steps the bill, if passed would be a great hardship to legitimate manufacturers who have really good proprietary medicines now on sale throughout the province. The first clause in the bill makes it necessary to publish the formula of any proprietary medicine on the outside wrapper of the package. This cannot be called regulation. It looks like something akin to confiscation. Many formulas are the chief assets of the manufacturers. If they are forced to disclose them to the public they no longer can be their exclusive property, and what would become everybody's property no longer possesses a value. But, more than this, if they gave their formula to the people of Ontario, it would mean giving it to the whole world. The bill, if passed, as it stands would simply mean the driving of proprietary medicine men out of the province, as they could not be expected to sacrifice themselves for the sake of the Ontario trade. We opine that there is no demand on the part of the public for legislation of this drastic and unfair kind. It, no doubt, is the fad of a few, possibly backed by a section of the medical fraternity.

Crown Lands—How They Are Managed.

Dr. Roche, one of the Manitoba representatives, in a speech delivered a few days ago in the House of Commons, laid bare the manner in which the Crown Lands in Manitoba and the Northwest are managed in the interests of speculators.

He called special attention to the manipulations through the Interior Department, presided over by Clifford Sifton of the Saskatchewan Land Company. This favored corporation was taken in hand by Mr. Sifton, and Mr. Oliver, the successor of this politician, has continued the consideration. For $1 PER ACRE the company was placed in possession of a QUARTER of a MILLION ACRES of PUBLIC LAND. This land has since been on the market at from $8 to $10 PER ACRE. Thus for an outlay of $250,000, which sum was not paid TO THE GOVERNMENT UNTIL THE LAND WAS SOLD, the company draws in at least $2,000,000. Giving it a profit of $1,750,000, out of which expenses have to be paid. It is pleaded by the Government that the company has to place settlers upon the land. The pretence is made that this is a startling condition, mitigating the financial terms. It appears, however, that it is the Government that does the immigration work, through its agents in different parts of the world. In other words, the country bears the expense involved in the carrying out of the contract. Further, the requirement that settlers be placed upon the land is simply a stipulation that the company shall do what it is in its interests to do, namely, sell the land at a profit as speedily as possible.

This transaction is a sample of the Sifton-Oliver deals.

Men go into the game poor and come out rich.

Who could not make a fortune, if he were given a block of 250,000 acres of Northwest land, to be paid for as sold, and enjoy the difference between $1 an acre and $8 and $10 an acre, as the case may be?

How many more deals of this nature have been put through the Interior Department is a question that should be enquired into. The names of the politicians who have waxed rich in the operations should also be brought into the light.

Then the people will learn how some men went into the Ministry poor and leave it after a few years' service RICH.

Usually the man who worries over the country's difficulties lets his wife do the worrying for the family.

We should be careful about taking things as they come. Many a man has got into jail just that way.

"THE OLD SCRATCH."

How The Evil One Came to be Popularly Known as "The Old Scratch."

One of the many familiar names of his satanic majesty is "The Old Scratch." It is undoubtedly due to the fact that scratching is so disagreeable that people thought it no worse than the evil one. A scalp full of dandruff keeps one scratching all the time, not only disagreeable but considered very inelegant in polite society — as it should be — because one ought to keep the scalp so clean that it would not itch. To cure the scalp of dandruff effectively, use Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the germ that creates the dandruff, which is preliminary to falling hair, and, finally, baldness. No other hair preparation kills the dandruff germ. Herpicide also is a very delightful and effective hair dressing.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Ald. Panter's remarks re the Dog by-law in Council last night were sensible and to the point. The old by-law was all right if it were enforced, and by the same token no by-law will be any good unless it is enforced. The increased tax has done nothing but work injustice and make a lot of people very angry. It should be repealed. People who have paid the increased tax (and they are very few) could have the difference returned to them. It is to be hoped the Chairman of Public Works will keep up his agitation till the injustice done has been repaired.

There is reason for thinking it was a small proportion thinking it was a small proportion indeed. The Montreal Gazette has the following sensible remarks on the question of Labor and Capital: "Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has promised his support to the Labor members' trades disputes bill, in order, as he put it, "to place the rival powers of capital and labor on an equality, so that in the event of a fight it should be a fair one." Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman is evidently no deeper a thinker than is the directing mind of the Laurier Government's labor bureau. The public man who creates or spreads the idea that capital and labor are rival powers which must always be looking forward to a strike is as bad a mischief maker as cheap politics can produce. The employer's enterprise is as necessary to the worker's profit as the worker is to the employer's; and the recognition of this and not cheap chatter about the rivalry and war of labor and capital is what is needed to check the evils of the day in the labor world."

Extreme Radicalism is the same the world over. In Conservative Old England, the new Liberal Government is giving an illustration of profession vs. practice. The announcement of two retreats in a single day, is evidence of the impossibility of carrying out reckless promises made to the electors. The Natal question and the Labor bill, may fairly be taken as an indication that the Ministry will not last long when it runs into a really troublesome question.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

"VIRGINIUS" TO-NIGHT.

Pages have been written in eulogy of the masterly impersonation of "Virginius" as given by that sterling actor, Louis James, who is scheduled to present that masterpiece at the Carman to-night, and volumes have been printed in commendation of the literary and dramatic beauties embodied in this truly great drama. Since 1820 "Virginius" has been played by every heroic actor of note, and notwithstanding the harsh treatment it has evidently received at many of their hands, yet its construction is so perfect, its theme so human and its motive so ennobling that to-day it is the most popular Roman tragedy presented to the public.

THE GREATEST REPERTOIRE.

It would be hard to find a week stand company presenting a line of plays equal to those given by Marks Bros.' Dramatic Company, which will appear at the Carman opera house for six nights and two matinees, commencing Monday evening. Some of the similar attractions have one or two bills which are featured, but Mr. Marks believes that every performance should be equally powerful and that each and every one should be a decided drawing power in itself. It is not the aim of the management to open with one particularly attractive play and then follow up a good impression with a series of unpalatable presentations. The opening bill Monday evening will be the great comedy drama, "The Banker's Wife."

BOARD OF TRADE ELECTS OFFICERS.

INTERESTING SESSION AND GOOD ATTENDANCE AT LAST NIGHT'S MEETING — MR. R. J. GRAHAM THE NEW PRESIDENT.

A meeting of the Board of Trade for the election of officers and general business was held last evening.

Those in attendance were Messrs. C. M Stork, President; J. H. Reeves, W. N. Ponton, R. J. Graham, H. C. Hunt, W. J. McCamon, P. Wims, W. B. Deacon, J. W. Johnson, C. J Bowell, T. J. Blackburn, H. Carre, F. M. Clarke, D. R. Leavens, S. C. Clapp, S. S Lazier, W. Alford, J. P. Thomas, A. McGie, J. W. London.

Some communications were read but no definite action were taken with the majority. The Secretary was authorized to answer one in reference to what canned goods were being put up in this city.

Messrs. W. E. Schuster, C. W. Stroud and B. Hudson were proposed and elected as members of the Board.

Mr. T. Blackburn, Treasurer of the Board, reported that during the year the receipts were $134.10, and the disbursements $45.61, leaving a balance of $88.49 on hand.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The election of officers resulted as follows;

President—Mr. R. J. Graham.
Vice-President—Col. W. N. Ponton.
Hon. President—Mr. J. P. Thomas.
Secretary—Mr. W. J. McCamon.
Asst. Secretary—Mr. F. S. Deacon.
Treasurer—Mr. T. J. Blackburn.
Auditor—Mr. Walter Alford.
Councillors — Messrs. J. W. Johnson, C. J. Bowell, A. McGie, A. E. Lewis, C. S. Clapp, R. Templeton, S. S. Lazier, W. B. Deacon, H. C. Hunt, P. Wims, and C. B. Scantlebury.

THE BOARD MEETINGS.

Mr. Hunt moved, seconded by Mr. D. R. Leavens, that the meetings of the Board be changed, and, instead of being held monthly, be held quarterly, namely, on the 1st Tuesdays in February, May, August and November.

Mr. Alford moved in amendment, seconded by Col. Ponton, that the meetings be held monthy and upon the second Tuesdays of each month.

After some discussion it was finally decided to meet monthly, the night of meeting to be the second Thursday of the month.

A large number of resolutions, which will be presented by the Board's delegates to the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, to be held in London, Eng., in July next, were read.

Mr. McCamon spoke in support of having these resolutions sent to the Chamber of Commerce as proper subjects of discussion. He introduced a motion to that effect, which was unanimously carried.

WANTS LOCAL MATTERS DISCUSSED.

Mr. W. B. Deacon said he would like to see some matters of local interest discussed by the Board. One matter in particular was in reference to the post office service. A conference with the postmaster might improve the service.

Mr. J. W. Johnson stated that some months ago he had brought this same subject up in the Board.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr Stork vacated the chair and Mr. Graham, President-elect, succeeded him.

The newly-elected President thanked the members for the honor conferred upon him. Belleville, he was certain, would be heard of at the meeting of the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire. At the next meeting of the Board the matter of insurance might be taken up. This was a subject in which all were interested. He referred to the need of having a fire alarm system established in the city which would mean 5 per cent. less to be paid for insurance if this were done. At the very least it would mean a saving of $1,750 yearly in insurance. The cost would not be very great and much benefit to all citizens would result.

On motion the Board adjourned.

FOXBORO.

The funeral of the late Mr. Benj. Reid was largely attended on Friday last. The services were conducted at the house by Rev. Mr. Smith, after which the remains were taken to Foxboro cemetery for interment.

Many from our village attended the funeral of the late Mrs. W. Barnum in Belleville on Friday last. The deceased lady was formerly a resident of our village. The many friends of both families extend their sympathy to the mourning ones.

We are glad to be able to report that Mrs. Smith, wife of Rev. Mr. Smith, who has been very ill for some time, is now better.

Mrs. Reddick, of Wallbridge, is visiting at the home of Mrs. Gibbs in our village.

Mr. A. Andress, of Fraserville, has been spending a couple of weeks visiting friends in this locality.

Mr. H. Simmons and Jas. Scott have just loaded their car for the west. They go to the Battleford section. We wish them every success.

The cheese factory is about to begin work. The prospects are good for high prices this season.

One of the grandest events of the season took place at the Presbyterian church here on Wednesday evening last, it being the marriage of Miss Annie Lenore, only daughter of Mr. A. Demorest, to Mr. John Longwill, of Sidney. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Smith, of Foxboro, after which the guests, about 150 in number, repaired to the dining-hall and partook of a very sumptuous repast. The bride was the recipient of many very valuable presents, which show the high esteem in which the young couple are held. Mr. and Mrs. Longwill left on the midnight train to visit Detroit and other western points. On their return they will take up their residence in Sidney. We join with many friends in wishing them a long and happy wedded life.

TO PIANO PURCHASERS.

An invitation is extended to all to see two beautiful "Nordheimer" pianos now on view at T. P. Brown's store, Front St. Mr. Addison A. Pegg, the Nordheimer Co.'s travelling representative, is in the city and would be pleased to meet any intending purchaser. Terms can be arranged to suit, and liberal allowance made for old instruments taken in exchange. 3-2t

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

Council Passed The Estimates.

Rate This Year is 23 1-2 Mills--Fire and Public Works Appropriation Raised to Proper Figures --Salary Question Bobbed Up Again, But Was Sidestepped--A Bunch of By-laws Passed.

The adjourned meeting of the City Council was held last night. Those present were Ald. Panter, McCrodan, Gordon, Green, Marsh, Paterson, Sinclair, Vermilyea.

Ald. Gordon was moved to the chair as acting Mayor. He gracefully donned the gold chain.

Council went into committee of the whole on estimates, etc., Ald. Panter in the chair.

The following accounts were passed, subject to checking:

C. B. Foster	$ 36.29
Trenton Electric Co.	345.38
F. Dumesnil	1,50

A communication from the W.C.A. was referred to the Executive Committee. It stated that, after September next, no more patients suffering with infectious diseases would be admitted to the Hospital. This was owing to the fact that the Government had decided to withdraw its grant in case infectious diseases were admitted.

It was resolved to pay the Auditors the balance of salary due them—$25.

THE SALARY QUESTION.

Ald. Marsh asked if the salary question was to be reconsidered; if so he would like to see the matter brought up before the estimates were introduced.

Ald. Green did not think any such action should be taken at such a slimly attended meeting of the Council.

Ald. Sinclair concurred in Ald. Green's remarks.

Ald. Marsh agreed with the previous speakers. He then introduced

THE ESTIMATES.

He said he had gone into the matter carefully, and the Council need not send the estimates back to him for further revision. He had taken much trouble with them today, to the detriment of his own business. He was sorry that Ald. Cooper, Chairman of the Fire Committee, was not present, as he would be able to see that certain remarks he made last night were slightly erroneous. Ald. Marsh then read his estimates, as follows:

Speaking of the Gas Committee, Ald. Marsh said it showed, last year, a clear profit over everything of about $1700. He had estimated a revenue of $1000 from the gas works next year, which he thought was a safe estimate. The collection of gas accounts, he might say, was not what it should be. However, if the gas works continued to make as favorable a showing as was expected, they might, in time, look for a reduction in the price of gas.

Ald. Sinclair was glad that Ald. Marsh had formed so favroable an opinion of the gas works. For some years he (Ald. Sinclair) had stood in rather an isolated position in the Council in regard to the usefulness of the gas works. Ald. Sinclair then went on to paint a glowing picture of the possibilities of gas in this city. The city, he felt, needed larger mains and a more extended service.

Ald. Marsh moved that the estimates, as presented, be adopted.

Some questions were asked re the proposed heating apparatus in the city building.

Ald. Marsh said it might be possible to instal such a system this year.

Ald. Panter thought the estimates should be adopted, and the Council's thanks be extended to the Chairman of the Executive.

Ald. Marsh's motion was carried. The report of the committee of the whole was adopted.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Marsh asked what the present salaries of the Solicitor and Clerk and Treasurer were.

Ald. Panter said $1000 and $900 respectively, but they were drawing $100 extra each.

Ald. Marsh said it would be well, he thought, to make it a case of straight salary.

The Council thought so, too.

Ald. Panter asked if section 4 of the Dog by-law had ever been enforced. The section provides that any dog or bitch running at large without a collar and tag on might be destroyed by the police.

The consensus of opinion was that it had never been enforced, but should be.

Ald. Green said he had heard that the Police Magistrate had expressed the opinion that there was no authority for the destruction of dogs.

Chorus of Aldermen: "See the Chief of Police."

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

The Chairman of the Executive introduced a bunch of by-laws, as follows,

A by-law providing for the collection of taxes for High School purposes.

A by-law to provide for the collection of taxes for Separate School purposes.

A by-law to provide for the collection of taxes for Public School purposes.

A by-law to provide for the collection of municipal taxes.

A by-law to appoint a tax collector. F. Davey Diamond, the present incumbent, was again appointed, at 1 per cent. commission, said commission payable monthly, in full.

A by-law relating to the collection of taxes.

Eleven local improvement by-laws were also introduced and passed.

The by-laws were numbered from 1262 to 1278 respectively.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Panter said he had given notice of motion for the repeal of all amendments to the Dog by-law. He intended to press it now. The increased tax, he thought, had done nothing to abate the dog nuisance. If the old by-law were properly enforced there would be no dog nuisance. He moved that the Clerk be instructed to prepare a by-law repealing the recent amendment raising the tax.

Ald. Marsh said it would interfere with the revenue of this year to the extent of about $200. He thought the increased tax might be tried for this year.

Ald. Panter said he had been told by a party who was in a position to know that the city would get less revenue from the new tax than the old. Already the city had had to dispose of two dead dogs.

The matter was referred to Committee.

THE MAN IN THE NEW SILK HAT.

Oh, the jaunty straw and the tourist cap
Are all very well in their way,
And the honest derby is just the thing
For the wear of every day.
The Panama is a swell affair
If the kind you can crush quite flat;
But the man who gets his money's worth
Is the man in the new silk hat.

It is smooth and shining and black as jet,
With the maker's name inside;
It is lined with satin as snowy white
As the dress of a dainty bride.
It suits the man who is tall and thin,
And the man who is short and fat,
And the crowd makes way respectfully
For the man in the top hat.

The college man with his coat of tan
May dance with the girls all night,
And may have his pick of the fairest buds
For a stroll in the pale moonlight:
But they all forget in a flash, you bet,
His fame at the ball or bat,
When the conquering hero comes in sight,
The man in the new silk hat.

Prosperous, elegant, up-to-date,
Right in the latest style,
Crown of the citizen well to do,
Hail to the glossy tile!
The man arrayed in the fur-lined coat,
And the man in the white cravat,
Must pocket their pride and step aside
For the man in the new silk hat.

It seems strange that the immigration law of the United States cannot be relaxed even in such a case as that of the Italian laborer who was stopped and sent back to Canada while on his way to a hospital, on the American side of Niagara Falls, with both legs broken. It is not creditable to a great nation that treatment so inhuman should be extended to any human being in such a plight.

EVERYBODY WORKS BUT FATHER.

(Springfield Republican.)

The Boston version of a well-known ditty:

Everyone labors except our distinguished progenitor,
He reposes in a recumbent position within our residence through the day,
His pedal extremities idling upon the the bronze of the steam radiator,
Serenely engaged in extracting nebulous atmosphere from a tobacco respectable of mundane matter.
Our maternal mentor receives soiled linen for the purpose of cleansing it,
And in this connection I should include filial Ann,
Indeed, everybody is engaged in some variety of occupation in our domestic habitat—
Excluding, as primarily suggested, our distinguished progenitor.

Most housewives judge the purity of a flour by its whiteness. White somehow signifies purity. But while pure flours are always white, white flours are not always pure.

Royal Household Flour is the whitest flour that is milled. It is also the purest. You may think the flour you are using is about as white as flour can be. Yet if you place it beside Royal Household Flour it will look yellow by comparison. Ask your grocer for Royal Household, and make sure that he understands that you mean it.

Buried by Torchlight.

Allerton Hall was upward of four centuries the property and residence of the Kitchingman family. It was the largest and most ancient mansion in Chapeltown, consisting of about sixty rooms, with gardens and pleasure grounds. The Kitchingman family for upward of 400 years were carried from this hall by torchlight to be interred in the choir of St. Peter's church in Leeds. At the interment of any of the family the great chandelier, consisting of thirty-six branches, was always lighted. In the year 1716 Robert Kitchingman died May 7, aged 100 years. He ordered his body to be buried with torchlights at Chapel Allerton. He was interred on May 16, when 100 torches were carried. The room where the body was laid was hung with black, and a velvet pall, with escutcheons, was born by the chief gentry. The pallbearers had all scarf, biscuits and sack; the whole company had gloves. Fifty pounds were given among the poor in the chapel yard on the day of his interment. Mary, his wife, died July 28, 1716, aged ninety-seven years She was interred precisely in the same way.—"Annals of Yorkshire."

For Black Eyes.

It is often the case that people meet with accidents and bruises that cause disfiguring discolorations, from which they suffer not a little embarrassment and annoyance. It is worth while to know that there is a simple remedy and one quite within the reach of every one. Immediately after the accident mix an equal quantity of capsicum annum with mucilage made of gum arabic. To this add a few drops of glycerin. The bruised surface should be carefully cleansed and dried, then painted all over with the capsicum preparation. Use a camel's hair brush and allow it to dry, then put on the second or third coat as soon as the first is entirely absorbed. A medical journal is authority for the statement that if this course is pursued immediately after the injury discoloration of the bruised tissue will be wholly prevented. It is also said that this remedy is unequaled as a cure for rheumatism or stiffness of the neck.

Two Archbishops.

The archbishop of Canterbury is primate of all England and therefore takes precedence of the archbishop of York, who is only "primate of England." This very nice distinction was made several centuries ago on account of a very bitter dispute arising between the two functionaries as to which should precede the other. The matter was settled by conferring precedence upon the archbishop of Canterbury, the two titles being also bestowed at the same time.

The Australian Native.

For hundreds of years, perhaps thousands, the Australian black has accepted the doctrine of a Trinity in heaven and the theory of evolution. In some respects he is far superior to his civilized contemporary, but he curls himself around like a dog and sinks to sleep on the bare ground at sunset. In the dark he is a veritable coward.

What Happens.

In a written examination on physical geography one of the questions was:

"What happens when there is an eclipse of the moon?"

A boy with rather an admirable knack of getting out of a difficulty wrote the following answer:

"A great many people come out to look at it."—London Answers.

"Yes; she sticks to her principles as if it were a matter of etiquette."

CATTLE MARKETS.

Cables Unchanged—Cattle Slow, Hogs Higher at Chicago.

London, April 3.—Cattle are quoted at 11c to 12c per lb.; refrigerator beef, 9c per lb.; sheep, dressed, 15c to 16c per lb.; lambs, 17c, dressed weight.

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

Toronto, April 3.—Receipts at the city cattle market since Friday last, as reported by the railways, were 68 car loads, composed of 1222 cattle, 617 hogs, 258 sheep, 277 calves and 2 horses. The quality of fat cattle generally was a little better, but there still is much room for improvement.

Exporters.

Not many shipping cattle were on the market, but there were too many for the demand, as there was one load left unsold at the close of the market. Drovers and farmers between them have got prices of shipping cattle too high for export dealers, some of whom have quit shipping and others are talking of doing the same, as prices are too high in comparison with the British markets. Prices ranged from $4.80 to $5.15; export bulls sold at $3.50 to $4 per cwt.

Butchers.

Loads of good butchers sold at $4.50 to $4.70, and anything bought at higher prices were a few prime cattle for the Easter trade and some of which were exporters. Medium butchers sold at $4 to $4.40; common and mixed, $3.75 to $4; cows at $3 to $4 per cwt.

Stockers and Feeders.

Mr. Murby reports a fair trade in stockers and feeders. There was quite a sprinkling of good feeders on the market, which were easier to buy, as the butchers got what they wanted without having to buy feeders. The highest Mr. Murby paid for any feeders was $4.60, but only in a few instances, the general price being from $4.40 to $4.50. The run of light stockers was light, but there were enough holdovers to fill the demand. Mr. Murby bought about 150 head at the following quotations: feeders weighing from 1050 to 1200 lbs., costing from $3.90 to $4.70 per cwt.; best short-keeps, 1150 to 1250 lbs., at $4.50 to $4.75; medium short-keeps, 1150 to 1250 lbs., at $4.40 to $4.60; best feeders, 950 to 1100, at $4 to $4.40; medium feeders, 950 to 1100 lbs., at $3.85 to $4.25; best feeders, 800 to 950 lbs., at $3.60 to $4; medium feeders, 800 to 950 lbs., at $3.35 to $3.65; best stockers, 500 to 750 lbs., at $3.30 to $3.50; best stock heifers, 500 to 750 lbs., at $2.10 to $3.25; common stockers, $2.75 to $3.

Milch Cows.

Only a limited number was offered, few of which were good enough to command good prices, which ranged from $30 to $55 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves, or, we should have said, that class known as "bobs," were plentiful. Prices for bobs are easy, but choice new milk fed calves are as good as ever. Prices ranged from $3.50 to $6 for the bulk, but there were two calves sold at $7.25 and one at $7.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts were light, with prices firmer. Export ewes sold at $5.25 to $5.75; bucks, $4.50 to $5; prime yearling lambs, at $7 to $7.50 for the bulk and a few at $7.75 per cwt.; spring lambs sold at $4 to $7 each.

Hogs.

Prices have again advanced 25c per cwt. and Mr. Harris quotes selects at $7.25 per cwt. and lights and fats at $7 per cwt. Sows are worth $5 and stags $3.50 per cwt.

EAST BUFFALO CATTLE MARKET.

East Buffalo, April 3.—Cattle—Receipts, 800 head; quiet; prices unchanged.

Veals—Receipts, 60 head; active and 25c higher, $5 to $7.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 1700 head; fairly active and 5c higher; heavy, mixed and Yorkers, $6.85 to $6.90; pigs, $6.75 to $6.80; roughs, $5.90 to $6.20; stags, $4.25 to $4.75.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 2400 head; slow, but steady; prices unchanged.

NEW YORK LIVE STOCK.

New York, April 3.—Beeves—Receipts, 526, all for slaughterers direct except one car; no trading in live cattle; feeling dull but steady; exports to-day, 850 cattle, 1250 sheep and 4300 quarters of beef; to-morrow, 2900 quarters of beef.

Calves—Receipts, 15, all light veals and sold at $6.50; market steady.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, none; 13½ cars held over yesterday; slow but steady; sheep nominal; unshorn lambs, all Colorados and westerns, sold at $7; car of clipped Colorados at $5.80.

Hogs—Receipts, 2285, all for slaughterers; nominally firm on Buffalo advices.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, April 3.—Cattle—Receipts, 2500; market slow; common to prime steers, $4 to $6.40; cows, $3.40 to $5; heifers, $2.75 to $5.50; bulls, $2.00 to $4.25; calves, $2.75 to $6.75; stockers and feeders, $2.75 to $3.75.

Hogs—Receipts, 13,000; market 5c higher; mixed and butchers, $6.35 to $6.62½; light, $6.35 to $6.57½; heavy, $6.30 to $6.00; packing, $6.52½ to $6.37½.

Sheep and Lambs—Receipts, 18,000; market steady; sheep, $4.50 to $6.50; yearlings, $5.75 to $6.40; lambs, $4.75 to $6.70.

Second Hague Conference.

Washington, April 4.—The Russion Ambassador, Mr. Rosen, called on Secretary of State Root yesterday and stated to him that, in agreement with the Government of the Netherlands, the Russian empire proposes that the second conference at The Hague assemble in the first part of July. He handed to Secretary Root a resume of what the Russian Government proposes to submit to the conference.

King Edward At Marseilles.

Marseilles, France, April 4.—King Edward arrived here yesterday from Biarritz and boarded the royal yacht Victoria and Albert, where he joined Queen Alexandra. He was received with military and naval honors.

Has Taken a Thousand

Zutoo

Always Cured Headache.
Never Affected her Heart.

Here is a testimonial from the wife of Doctor W. L. Shurtleff, K.C., of Coaticook, Que., who has taken a thousand Zutoo Tablets (the Japanese Vegetable Headache remedy.)

It should convince any doubting one, that while the tablets cure headache, they do not, like the drug cures, affect the heart, nerves or stomach. No one would or could take such a number if they were not perfectly harmless. Mrs. Shurtleff herself had to discard the drug cures.

Here is what she says:

I have always been a great sufferer from headache, and have taken a great many headache cures. I found that after taking them for a time they caused palpitation of the heart. Three years ago I began using Zutoo. I have likely taken over a thousand tablets. I have never yet felt the least ill-effect from using them and they cure my headaches as quickly as any remedy I ever took.

They are Harmless as Soda.

BOGUS ANTIQUES.

Collectors Constantly on Their Guard Against Fraud.

Collectors of antiques have to be all the time on their guard against fraud. Even then they are often deceived. Artists exist who can impose on the very elect. A well known collector had a precious box of rare enamel. He sent it to Vienna to be repaired, and the ingenious mender fitted it with a new lid. Then he put a new lower part to the original lid, and two collectors were made happy.

A gem cutter took a modern gold Greek ring, recut the stone with an intaglio of an important subject, made a turkey swallow the ring and after some time killed the turkey. The residence in the bird's crop had endowed the gem with all the marks of age.

A scholar in a little known part of Dalmatia was seeking gold coins and ornaments of the old Servian dynasty. A dealer came to him with a beautifully wrought crucifix, which he claimed to be a genuine antique. In examining the article with a glass the student came across a tiny inscription, and, better versed than the dealer gave him credit for being, he read it aloud, "This cross was made in 1893 by —," giving the name of the maker it said. The dealer stood not on the order of his going, but left at once.

Many a reputed article is its own undoing. At one time a number of lead coins were put on the market as antiques. It was discovered that the Arabic numerals with which they were dated were of the fashion not invented at the supposed time of their making.

Collectors, young and old, trained and untrained, are constantly being taken in. Even museums themselves are not free from fakes.

PUMICE STONE.

The Best Quality Comes From the Island of Lipari.

We often hear it remarked, and particularly after the eruption of a volcano, that pumice stone ought to be plentiful and cheap, as quantities must have been ejected during the volcanic disturbance. As a matter of fact, however, none of the white stone in general use is obtained from active volcanoes. It comes from the deposits of the article discovered in one or two quarters of the globe, the best of which is at present to be found in the island of Lipari, situated in the Tyrrhenian sea. The island is mountainous in character and consists of tuffs and lavas and of highly siliceous volcanic products. The district where the stone is found is called Campo Blanco or Monte Petalo, 1,500 feet above the level of the sea.

After riding a considerable distance, partly along precipitous paths sufficiently dangerous to be interesting and partly through vineyards and over grassy plains, one almost comes suddenly upon a seemingly snow clad valley, inclosed by hills also quite white, and the whole glaringly bright on a sunny day. Into those hills workmen are unceasingly digging deep burrows, working within by candlelight. In their excavations they come across many lumps of pumice stone, which are placed in baskets, subsequently being conveyed along the valley to the seashore, where small boats are loaded and sail to the seaport near by, where the stone is sorted, packed and shipped to distant parts either by way of Messina or Leghorn.

Adirondack.

The word "Adirondack" comes to us from the language of the Mohawks. With them it was Ha-de-ron-dack and meant wood eaters. This term was applied in derision to a few members of a once powerful branch of the Algonquins, who were defeated by the Iroquois and forced to seek refuge in a fastness of the mountains. They were in great distress, and it is said they sent messengers to their victors asking them to make no further war upon them, as they were reduced to the necessity of eating roots and the bark of trees. A few of them finally escaped to the north, and others were captured and held in slavery by the Mohawks.

The Giant of Lobsters.

The largest lobster ever caught on the coast of America was taken by a Belfast (Me.) fisherman in 1891. It weighed twenty-three pounds and measured thirty-seven inches from the end of its tail to the tip of the long front claws. The monster was too large to enter a common lobster trap, but as the trap was being drawn up it was caught in the netting and safely landed. Many years ago a lobster weighing twenty-two pounds was captured near the same place, and the event was considered to be of enough importance to be given a place in Willimson's "History of Belfast."

Insect Bites.

The London Lancet remarks: "Many people do not know how easily they can protect themselves and their children against the bites of gnats and other insects. Weak carbolic acid sponged in the skin and hair and in some cases clothing will drive away the whole tribe. We have no doubt that horses and cattle could be protected in the same way from flies, which sometimes nearly madden them."

One View of Love.

Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do, and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whippers are in love too.

The Usual Result.

Little Willie—Pa, I'll be awful glad when I get old enough to do as I please. Pa—Naturally, my son, and when you reach that age you'll probably get married and not do it.

BLOODLETTING.

It Is Still Resorted to by Doctors In Certain Emergencies.

Bloodletting, or "venesection," as it is known scientifically, was once the common remedy for nearly every form of ailment. Washington died of it, in the opinion of modern medical authorities, and soon after his time there was a reaction against venesection. Better medicinal agents accomplished whatever benefits were attributed to this heroic treatment, and a better knowledge of physiology condemned the practice.

Venesection, however, is still employed in certain emergencies by the most advanced practitioners. A German physician has made an extensive study of the subject, with clinical experiments, and reaches the conclusion that in certain cases where the heart and lungs are engorged with blood venesection is permissible because of the speedy relief it gives, often after other resources have failed.

Deadly toxins are also present in the blood in some diseases, and venesection reduces them. The lost fluid is replaced with an injection of salt solution. Bloodletting affords relief to the livid sufferer from a distended heart when every breath is a struggle, but its use has been reduced to an exact science, and it is regarded in medicine as a final resort for giving ease in a comparatively restricted group of ailments. The days when it was a cure-all, administered by the corner barber as well as every physician, have disappeared into the past.

DON'T CODDLE YOURSELF.

Fussiness About Health Does More Harm Than Good.

When one thinks of the newfangled ideas about health and sees people on every hand hunting for disease germs in water, milk, meat, fruit and the atmosphere, analyzing everything, dreading swallowing and in constant fear with every mouthful they eat, one almost wonders whether or not life is worth living. If we are liable to be made the victims of tens of thousands of enemies which are in and around everything, in all liquids and all solids alike, we are in just about the same condition to enjoy life as was one of the olden kings who lived in mortal terror that everybody was trying to poison him. All his foods and drinks, everything, had to be tasted and tested by some trusted member of his household before he dared to touch it himself.

If there is a pitiful object in the world it is a person who has become finical about his health, who lives in terror of germs and must examine and analyze everything he eats or drinks, looking for infection.

It is an insult to one's Creator to go through life whining, complaining and fearing, in morbid terror that a thousand enemies are combined to rob one of comfort, of happiness and of health. Man was made to hold up his head, to walk erect, with boldness, fearlessness and confidence.—Success.

PINEAPPLES.

The Way They Grow and How the Plants Reproduce.

Pineapples do not grow on trees. Imagine a plant four feet in extreme height from the ground to the tip of leaves. A single stalk at the surface, but dividing at once into swordlike blades or leaves, fifteen in number, from the center of which appears a stiff, upright stem, at the top of which is the fruit. This stem is short, and the crown of the fruit when fully grown is a foot or more below the points of the leaves. At the end of a year and a half from planting each plant produces a single fruit, even as a cabbage plant produces a single head. But the pineapple does not die after fruiting once. Down on the stem below the fruit and among the long, narrow leaves a sucker appears. If allowed to remain this will soon become the head of the plant, and within another year it will yield another fruit. This process may go on for a term of years. In the meantime, however, other suckers will make their appearance.

These are broken off, and when stuck into the ground they put out roots and become other plants. Thus a single pineapple plant may produce a dozen or more others while it is yielding fruit from year to year.

Not For Strangers.

"What in the world does that mean?" asked the traveler through a sparsely settled region on the cape. "There's no such place on my road map."

The man whom he addressed first took a leisurely survey of the traveler and his horse and then turned his eyes toward the weather beaten sign which bore the single word "Tolpim."

"That ain't a name," he said, with dignity; "it's jest an indication. It means, 'To Long Pond one mile.'

"It's plain enough to folks from near by that's hunting for the pond, and we don't reckon on strangers taking much interest."—Youth's Companion.

Such a Waste!

"I wonder," said the man of a statistical turn, "I wonder how much powder is destroyed daily in useless salutes?"

"There must be a lot," said the frivolous girl, "but I suppose women will go on kissing each other just the same."

A Daring Distribution

The undersigned Druggist at the earnest solicitation of the Ferrol Co., Limited, of Toronto, has made a thorough and searching investigation into the merits of FERROL, and of the methods of that Company, and he finds that: Every cure claimed by the Company is absolutely genuine; that FERROL is manufactured from the best quality of Munn's Celebrated Cod Liver Oil (the whole of the oil) and is richer in oil than any other emulsion, and while it contains just the right quantity of the best form of Iron and Phosphorous, it is so scientifically prepared, that not one in a thousand finds any trouble in taking it; that the medicine has accomplished the most amazing results in its own city; that its sales in the Home City have been phenomenal; that it is endorsed by all druggists without hesitation or qualification; that it is, in short, all the Company claims for FERROL, and more.

The more I investigated the more enthusiastic I became. It is no longer a question of my willingness to handle the preparation—FERROL—but how can I bring it to the immediate suffering of this city?

It is a heavy responsibility, but I have faith in the honesty and fairness of the Ferrol Company, Limited, of Toronto, and the unequalled merits of their preparation, FERROL.

(Signed) D. M. WATERS.

I find also that the druggists in other cities have taken upon themselves the solemn responsibility of standing behind this medicine; and that these druggists have made in each city a daring and remarkable distribution of full-sized bottles.

Impressed by the action of my fellow-druggists, and convinced that they would not have given this remedy such unqualified approval without positive knowledge of its merits, I have decided to follow their example and distribute free of charge

There is absolutely no sentiment in this endorsement of FERROL. It is merely a business recognition of a preparation that possesses positive merit, and a keen desire on the part of a progressive concern to always supply the best goods at the lowest possible price.

THIS CERTIFICATE,

Properly filled out and signed, entitles the holder to one large sized bottle of FERROL (Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorus), if presented Friday, April 6, at the drug store of D. M. Waters, from 9 a.m. until samples are exhausted.

HINDU ADEPT MARVELS

MANGO TREE GROWS FIFTY FEET WHILE YOU WAIT.

Visitor From the Occident Who Actually Climbed Up Into One of the "Wizard" Trees—Sat at the Feet of Coomra Sami, the Philosopher of Srinagur — The Wonderful Rope Trick.

The writer has spent six months in Kashmir at the feet of Coomra Sami, the philosopher of Srinagur, one of the greatest of the thousands of adepts who are to be found all over the wilds of India. They are not ordinary fakirs or the jogis, but the higher brotherhood of Sadhu and Sanaysis, who seldom exhibit their powers and never for reward, Dr. Heasoldt says in The Occult Review.

These marvellous illusions have been the wonder of centuries. If I could produce anything like them and go up and down the country exhibiting them it would cause a sensation such as Occidental humanity never experienced.

I shall never forget the day and the state of my feelings when I saw the mango feat for the first time. This was in a large public square at Agra and in the presence of about 400 people, forming a circle of perhaps sixty yards in diameter. In the centre stood the "Sadhu." Some of the onlookers were, of course, much nearer to him than others, and he seemed to have no objection if people came within ten or fifteen yards of him, but the average distance kept by the spectators was, I dare say, thirty yards. Most of my readers will know what a mango is. For the benefit of the few who may not I will say that it is an edible tropical fruit, about the size of a large pear, growing on a tree which reaches a height of from forty to a hundred feet.

Not a Cheap Western Trick.

The "Sadhu" dug a hole in the ground —by means of a short white stick— about six inches deep, placed the mango in it and covered it with earth. I now expected to see a modification of a well-known trick practiced by some of your western conjurers. The performer plants a bean or pea in a flower pot, containing quicklime at the bottom covered with earth. The bean has been previously soaked in warm water for several days and is on the point of germinating. Then by pouring in enough water to reach the quicklime the earth is warmed to such an extent that the germ is driven out in a few minutes, forcing its way upward through the soil and reaching a height of several inches in less than half an hour. This will astonish all those who are unacquainted with the wonder of plant life.

Instead of this I was startled to see in the air above the spot where the mango had been buried the form of a large tree, at first rather indistinctly presenting as it were mere hazy outlines, but becoming visibly more distinct until at length there stood as natural a tree as ever I had seen in my life—a mango tree about fifty feet high and in full foliage with mangoes on it.

A Shadowless Tree.

All this happened within five minutes of the burying of the fruit. It may have been three minutes till I saw the tree, but as I had been at first looking intently at the spot where the mango was planted, the apparition may have been there even sooner. I was so intensely surprised at what I beheld that I could hardly realize the fact that I was not dreaming. There stood a tree, to all intents and purposes as natural as any tree could have appeared to human eyes—a huge tree, with a stem at least two feet in thickness at its base.

And yet there was something strange about this tree, something unearthly, something gruesome. There was a weird rigidness about it, not one leaf moving in the breeze; it stood there as if carved out of some hard solid, like the obelisk on the Thames Embankment. Another curious feature I noticed—the leaves seemed to obscure the sun's rays and yet I could not detect a particle of shade; it was a tree without a shadow.

But the most amazing thing of all was this: after having gazed at it for about two or three minutes, I slowly approached it, wishing to make a closer examination of the stem and, if possible, to secure some of the leaves. Now in proportion as I drew near the tree seemed to lose its distinctness; its outlines became blurred and faded so that I had to strain my eyes to retain the impression of its form until when about ten yards from the supposed stem the apparition had completely vanished. Only the "Sadhu" stood there, and he smiled as he caught my eye, but his look was one I shall not easily forget.

Not Too Near Nor Too Far.

And my surprise did not end here, for no sooner had I commenced retracing my steps than the outlines of the tree appeared once more, growing more distinct with every step till, at last, when reaching the spot where I had originally stood, it resumed the same marvellous reality. Precisely the same thing happened when, instead of approaching the tree, I went further away from it. It faded, and finally disappeared completely when I had about double the distance; then came back again and appeared as distinct as ever when I got to my original position. And it was evident that all the rest of the onlookers underwent the same experience, viz., each individual saw the tree only from the place where he stood.

The mango tree had now been in view fully twenty minutes, during which a large concourse of people had gathered. The adept who, until then, had not opened his lips, now placed a small mat of cocoanut fibre on the ground, and squatted down on it, eastern fashion, with his legs crossed, which was at once interpreted by the people as a sign that he wanted to address them. The Hindus squatted likewise, and most of them came around to the side where they could face him.

A Buddha Birth Tale.

"Once," he began, "when Brahmadatta was King of Benares, the Bodhisatta was born as a white crane, far in the Neilgherry mountains, near a lake where the lotus never fades." And then he went on, giving the details of one of those strange and beautiful Jatakas, or birth-tales of Buddha, of which an incredible number are circulating in India, showing how the great teacher, for the hundredth time, resolved to quit the blessed repose of Nirvana, out of divine compassion, to be once more incarnated in an earthly form and undergo the suffering and sorrow which all terrestrial existence involves.

The Tree Disappears.

It was easy to perceive that the listeners were profoundly impressed with the Sadhu's preaching, and as for myself I had become so absorbed in it that I seemed to forget time and space. I certainly did not notice what afterward startled me more than anything else, viz., the disappearance of the tree. When the Sadhu had finished his discourse the tree was gone. It must have vanished suddenly, and yet the precise moment of its disappearance nobody could tell. The adept quietly arose, folded up his mat, then went to the spot where the tree had stood and kneeled down, taking from a small bundle which he held under his arm a short stick. With this he stirred up the earth, and in a few moments brought out again the fruit which he had planted.

I was very close to him at the time, and he allowed me to take it in my hand. It was an ordinary mango, an unripe one, apparently, for it felt rather hard. I expressed my surprise at his wonderful powers and complimented him on his eloquence, but he merely smiled. I then offered him two rupees and tried to engage him in conversation, but he refused the present on the ground that a Sadhu who practised Voga Vidya was not in need of money, and he begged to be excused as he had a great way to go.

A Very Real Mango.

This was my first experience of the famous mango feat, which I witnessed five times in various parts of India. On one occasion I saw it performed in a little village in the valley of Kashmir near Srinagar, in the Himalayas, by a certain Ram Surash, an adept famous throughout the Punjab, and I am almost afraid to record this experience, as it may be deemed utterly incredible. Yet I am telling here no ideal fairy tales. The mango tree which this adept produced did not vanish in proportion as I approached it, but retained its full realism, and I not only touched it, but actually climbed several feet up its stem.

On the west coast of India, about 230 miles north of Bombay, lies the city of Baroda. It is the capital of one of the semi-independent native states, Guzerat, and is ruled by a Maharatta prince who bears the title of Geakwar, which in plain English means "cowherd." It was in front of the Geakwar's palace, in the open air and in broad daylight, that I first witnessed the illusion, which, in the opinion of the Hindus themselves, is the climax of Sadhu achievement, viz., the celebrated rope trick. I say illusion, not because the performance gives one any such impression, or as if that word afforded some kind of explanation, but for want of a better term at the present moment. What I saw appeared to be just as real as the fact that I am now engaged in penning these lines.

Where Is That Adept Now?

A "Sadhu," after having addressed a large assemblage of people, and preached one of the most impressive sermons I ever listened to, took a rope about fifteen feet long and perhaps an inch thick. One end of this rope he held in his left hand, while with the right he threw the other end up in the air. The rope instead of coming down again, remained suspended even after the adept had removed his other hand, and it seemed to have become as rigid as a pillar.

Then the adept seized it with both hands, and, to my utter amazement, climped up this rope, suspended all the time, in defiance of gravity, with the lower end at least five feet from the ground. And in proportion as he climbed up it seemed as if the rope was lengthening out indefinitely above him and disappearing beneath him, for he kept on climbing until he was fairly out of sight, and the last I could distinguish was his white turban and a piece of the never-ending rope. Then my eyes could endure the glare of the sky no longer, and when I looked again he was gone.

I have seen this marvellous feat on four different occasions, performed in precisely the same manner, and the mystery seemed only to deepen with each repetition. It has been the standing wonder of India from a time antedating perhaps the building of the first pyramid. Marco Polo was profoundly impressed with it, and Tavernier, who visited India about the middle of the seventeenth century, speaks of it in terms which plainly denote his bewilderment.

Gloves and Microbes.

It was noticed in Paris when King Edward was there that he always appeared in public with his right hand gloved, but not his left. As it is a common practice to carry the right glove loose and not the left, much speculation has been excited by the King's reversal of this custom. One learned writer suggests that it is due to a sound perception of hygienic propriety. The object of a glove, he says, is not to adorn but to protect the hand. Which hand has the more constant employment and is therefore brought into closer contact with microbes? Why, the right hand. It follows that in keeping that hand gloved the King shows his unfailing sense.

Irish Fuel Supply.

Experts claim that Irish bogs are capable of turning out 50,000,000 tons of fuel per year for a thousand years, and if this were sold at the moderate figure of 5s. per ton it would bring in £12,500,000 a year. When this sum is multiplied by a thousand it will be seen that Ireland is richer in undeveloped resources than is sometimes imagined. It is claimed for the new fuel that it is practically smokeless, that it has no clinker or cinder, deteriorates but little by keeping, does not crumble by handling, and has high calorific power.

Only Half the Brain Work.

Prof. Symes Thompson lectured the other evening before the Gresham College, London, on "The Nervous System." In every man's brain there are many cells waiting to be developed, he said, and as a matter of fact the normal person uses only half of the brain, the other half being kept in reserve.

Are You Ready For the Spring ?

Are you in a position to enjoy to the full the soft breezes and softer sunshine that are due to arrive almost any morning now? Have you cleared out the dregs of your winter stocks of coughs, colds and grippe? Have you given your body the spring overhauling it must have if you would have perfect health?

Everybody Needs Medicine in the Spring, and the greatest of all spring medicines is Psychine. Psychine is really two medicines in one. It clears out coughs and colds, root and branch, and it kills all germs of grippe and consumption that have found lodging in your system during the winter months.

But in the preparation of Psychine it was not forgotten that killing germs and stopping their ravages was only half the work of giving good health. To complete that work the damage already done must be repaired. This is where the great tonic properties of Psychine come in.

Acting directly on the stomach, the nerves and blood-making organs, Psychine gives new force to the life-making machinery of the body. It helps the appetite and helps digest the food, it sends pure, rich blood leaping through the veins, it tones up the body all over and makes you know once more the joy of living.

That is why Psychine is the Greatest of all Spring Medicines. It clears out all disease, and results of disease, repairs all damage done, and gives new life all over the body. To meet the warm weather without a trace of that tired feeling anywhere about you you must use

The Throne of Thunder.

Mungo Mam Lobeh, the throne, o place of thunder, as the natives call it, the peak of Kameruns, as the whites call it, is the highest point on the western side of the African continent. The first view the voyager gets of it who, coming from the northward, has been coasting for weeks along low shores and up the stagnant rivers, fringed with mangrove swamp, is a thing no man can ever forget. Suddenly, right up out of the sea, the great mountain rises to its 13,700 feet, while close at hand, to westward, towers the lovely island mass of Fernando Po to its 10,190 feet, and great as is its first charm every time you see it it becomes greater, although it is never the same. Five times I have been in the beautiful bay at its foot and have never seen it twice alike. Sometimes it is wreathed with indigo black tornado clouds, sometimes crested with snow, sometimes standing out hard and clear, as though made of metal, and sometimes softly gorgeous, with green, gold, purple and pink vapors tinted by the sunset.—London Mail.

A Trying Reform.

A Presbyterian clergyman of New York with two popular daughters has discovered a new way to end the visits of their beaus at a seemly hour—a plan which might appeal to lay families as well. For a number of years it has been a custom of this good man to hold evening worship after supper, always concluding the prayers with a short discourse. Things went very well until the daughters began to receive the attentions of young men and begged off or stole away to make their evening toilets. Then the minister changed the devotional hour until 10 in the evening. This reform created an upheaval, but the father insisted, and at the stroke of 10 the visiting young men are now left one alternative—either to leave or join with the family in prayer—and it has proved a severe test of their devotion for the daughters when those not prayerfully inclined stick it out, sermon and all.

The Good Fellow.

The treasurer of a church temperance society told at a temperance meeting a dramatic story.

"A woman entered the barroom," he said, "and advanced quietly to her husband, who sat drinking with three other men. She placed a covered dish on the table and said:

"'Thinkin' ye'd be too busy to come home to supper, Jack, I've fetched it to you here.'

"And she departed.

"The man laughed awkwardly. He invited his friends to share the meal with him. Then he removed the cover from the dish.

"The dish was empty. It contained a slip of paper that said:

"'I hope you will enjoy your supper. It is the same as your wife and children have at home.'"

Happy at Last

Her Husband no longer gets Intoxicated—Samaria Tasteless Remedy Cured Him.

This lady says: "For the first time since I have been married I can be happy and content—my husband is cured of his bad habit of drinking. Several months ago you sent me a free sample of your remedy at my request, and without my husband's knowledge I gave it to him in his tea and food. I then got a full treatment and gave it regularly. It is wonderful, and I cannot sufficiently thank you for the blessed change it has brought to my home."

Coffee-Tea.

Coffee-tea is the common beverage of the natives of Java and Sumatra. When required for infusion the coffee leaves are gathered fresh from the trees and are dried in a pan over a slow fire until they are light brown. They are then put into a teapot, boiling water is poured over them, and the infusion is drunk with milk and sugar. It seems the general opinion that coffee should come in contact with metal as little as possible. The Viennese people prefer a glass bottle to a canister for storing, and Brazilians use earthenware in preference to a metal pot for making.

Antelopes Choose the Open.

The antelope lives always in open country, unlike members of the deer family, which invariably prefer a thick, dense forest. They cannot be driven into timber cover or thickets of brush, but will literally turn about and run over a pursuer, if necessary, rather than be forced into cover. If they are ever obliged to pass by or through such places for food and water, they take a great deal of time to do so, as if they were determined to see everything that could be seen en route.—H. H. Cross in Century.

The Great Lakes.

Lake Superior is the deepest of the great lakes, showing by soundings 1,008 feet in at least one place. Michigan stands second, with 100 feet less. Huron and Ontario are about 750 in the deepest parts, while Lake Erie is but 204. Vast areas of Lake Erie will not show a depth exceeding 80 feet. The bottom of Lake Michigan is 400 feet above sea level.

An Odd Verdict.

A jury in Lindsey, Lincolnshire, England, after being out some time on a case of alleged false pretenses, returned to court and said, "We can't bring him in guilty and don't like to say he is not guilty." They were sent back and in fifteen minutes reached this verdict, "We find him guilty, but not with intent." The prisoner was discharged.

Blackmail.

"Mamma," said five-year-old Margie, "I'll make a bargain with you."

"What kind of a bargain, dear?" asked her mother.

"If you'll give me a penny every day to buy candy with," replied the small diplomat, "I'll not tell any one you have false teeth."

ROYAL COURTSHIPS.

Romance From Days of King George III.—How Queen Victoria Proposed to Albert of Saxe-Coburg.

The romantic wooing of the King of Spain reminds one how rarely the element of romance has been associated with royal marriages, writes Lady Violet Greville. What could have been more brutally inconsiderate than the arrangements for the marriage of Queen Charlotte, wife of King George III.

This princess, just 17, was selected as consort for the King of England. Her life at Mecklenburg had hitherto been of the simplest. She dressed "en robe de chambre" every day except Sunday, when she put on her best gown and drove out in a coach and six. The ambassador sent to demand her hand having arrived, she was told nothing of his mission, merely that she was to dine downstairs that night for the first time.

"Mind what you say," was the warning of her eldest brother. After dinner, at which she was naturally shy, she beheld the saloon illuminated, a table, and two cushions prepared for a wedding, her brother saying, "You are no longer a child. You are to be Queen of England," as he led her in.

Some kind of ceremony then took place; she was embraced by her family, and presented by the ambassador with a beautiful parure of diamonds, including the little crown of diamonds which so often appears in her portraits. She was pressed for an immediate departure, but pleaded for the respite of a week in order to take leave of everybody. During this time she ran about visiting the poor and the little garden of medical herbs, fruit, and flowers which she cultivated herself for the benefit of the poor.

The poor little bride suffered a terrible crossing to Harwich, the royal yacht being nearly driven on to the coast of Norway. The duchesses of Ancaster and Hamilton, sent to conduct the princess to England, were both much indisposed, but Charlotte herself remained quite well, and cheered the company by singing Luther's hymns to her harpsichord in her cabin, with the door open. Perhaps she remembered the saying attributed to Henrietta Maria, the wife of Charles I., who was also nearly wrecked on her crossing, "Les reines ne se noient pas."

Arriving in London at about 3 o'clock, having traveled since 12, she was met by the King in the garden of St. James' palace. Attempting to kneel she was caught up by the enthusiastic monarch, who embraced her kindly and nearly carried her upstairs. That same evening the wedding ceremony took place. Horace Walpole writes of the new Queen:

"She looks sensible, cheerful, and is remarkably genteel" (that favorite epithet of the period). Her tiara of diamonds was pretty, her stomacher sumptuous, her violet velvet mantle and ermine so heavy that her clothes were dragged almost down to her waist. The wedding over, and supper not being quite ready, the Queen sat down and obligingly played and sang to her harpsichord. The royal party never separated till between 3 and 4 in the morning, no slight trial for a bride of 17, who had employed the few moments she passed in her room after her arrival, in trying on her wedding gown and the rest of her trousseau.

When first she caught sight of the palace she became nervous, and, being told that she was to be married that evening, she, in fact, fainted in the carriage. The Duchess of Hamilton, one of the beautiful Miss Gunnings, smiling at her fears, Charlotte said:

"You may laugh, you have been married twice, but to me it is no joke."

It is pleasant to think that after being so highly tried, Charlotte's married life proved perfectly happy.

Different was the arrival of Catherine of Braganza, who, when first seen by Charles II., was laid up with a cough and a little fever in bed. He was not favorably impressed by his new consort and remarked as much to his attendants.

George IV.'s reception of his bride, Caroline of Brunswick, is well known. How the blue-eyed, bouncing, buxom girl was implored by Lord Malmesbury to be particular about her person and her toilet, how the prince pretended to be overcome at their first meeting and called for a dram of brandy, and how the princess afterward declared that he was drunk on her wedding night.

Until quite recently little liberty was accorded to princesses. Queen Charlotte, even after her marriage, was for several years in thralldom to the Dowager Princess of Wales and denied all diversion and pleasure. She told Miss Burney that even her jewels had ceased to dazzle and interest her. "Believe me," she said, "it is the pleasure of a week, a fortnight at most, and then returns no more."

The courtship of Queen Victoria brings us into a pleasanter atmosphere. On Prince Albert's first visit to England she liked and appreciated him at once, and his tastes agreed with hers. "Every grace had been showered by nature on this charming boy," says Baron Stockmar of him at this time. The baron judged him critically, calmly, and impartially until he finally became his most attached and devoted friend and adviser.

Queen Victoria and her cousin met at first unconscious of the object of their acquaintance, and when the desired impression had been produced, the young prince, like a second Sir Galahad, was sent away to travel and fit himself by study and careful education for his great position. On his return to England the Queen writes: "Albert's beauty is most striking, and he is most amiable and unaffected—in short, fascinating."

The young couple were genuinely in love and the Queen informed Lord Melbourne that the conquest of her heart was complete. So serious, so dignified, so studious, and so excellent a young man would infuse an element of poetry and deep feeling into his love making. But by the rules of etiquette the proposal itself had to come from the young Queen, whose maidenly modesty was somewhat embarrassed at the prospect. She summoned to her boudoir, where he found her alone. After some desultory talk due to her shyness, she suddenly said: "Could you forsake your country for me?" The prince answered by clasping her in his arms. In such simple fashion did a young sovereign woo and win the husband of her choice.

A SPRING TONIC.

WEAK, TIRED AND DEPRESSED PEOPLE NEED A TONIC AT THIS SEASON TO PUT THE BLOOD RIGHT.

Spring blood is bad blood. Indoor life during the winter months is responsible for weak, watery, impure blood in the spring just as much as a tree needs new sap to give it vitality for the summer. In the spring the bad blood shows itself in many ways. In some it breeds pimples and eruptions. In others it may be through occasional headaches, a variable appetite, perhaps twinges of neuralgia, or rheumatism, or a lazy feeling in the morning and a desire to avoid exertion. For these spring ailments it is a tonic you need, and the greatest blood-making, health-giving tonic in all the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red, health-giving blood, which reaches every nerve and every organ in the body, bringing health, strength and energy to weak, despondent, ailing men and women. Here is proof. Mrs. Chas. Blackburn, Aylesford Station, N. S., says, "For the past ten years Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine I have taken when I found I needed a medicine. Last spring I was feeling poorly, was weak, easily tired and depressed. I got three boxes and they made me feel like a new person. These pills are the best medicine I know of when the blood is out of order.'

Thousands of people not actually sick need a tonic in the spring, and to all these a box or two of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will bring new energy and new strength. To those who may be more seriously ailing, who are suffering from any of the ailments due to bad blood—a fair treatment with these pills will bring new health and vitality. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer or by mail from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50.

SHIPS THAT VANISH.

Tales of Vessels That Never Reach Port—Disappearance Common.

There are few things which are so full of mystery or which make such a powerful appeal to the imagination as the stories of ships that sail gallantly out to sea and of which nothing is ever heard or seen after masts have dipped below the horizon. At present the papers are full of the records of these marine tragedies. To-day it is the Claverdale, which left Hong Kong for Vladivostock, and of which no trace has been found; yesterday it was the Royalist, which cleared from Singapore to Hong Kong and never reached her destination; the day before it was the Idum, from Norway, which vanished from human view, and so on, through the long list of ships that have sailed and disappeared.

What are the secrets of these mysterious vanishing of stately ships with their crews and cargoes? In nineteen cases out of twenty the secrets lie with the ships many fathoms deep, and will, perhaps, never leap to light. To this day no one knows what became of the City of Glasgow, which set her sails so gallantly in the Mersey half a century ago, bound for Philadelphia, nor was she seen again after the hills of Wales were lost to view.

The Bervie Castle left London some years ago on a long voyage to Australia. She should have made a final call at Plymouth, but she never came within sight of the Hoe, nor has human eye ever seen her from the day she dropped down the Channel. It was on May 10, 1854, that the Lady Nugent spread her sail at Madras with 367 of the Twenty-first Madras Light Infantry and other passengers on board. Her destination was Rangoon, but half a century has gone and neither Rangoon nor any other port has sighted her.

Nearly two years later the Collins liner Pacific dropped down the Mersey with 180 souls on board. She was accounted one of the stoutest and swiftest vessels of her time, and so, no doubt, she was. But she went the way the City of Glasgow had gone a couple of years earlier, and for forty-nine years has been lying at the bottom of the sea, but where none may know till all secrets are revealed. The trading vessel Atlanta started a quarter of a century ago for a short cruise in Bermudan waters, and from that day to this no one knows what became of her and the 250 souls she carried.

On Jan. 20, 1870, the City of Boston sailed from Halifax for England with 191 souls on board. She was an Indian liner, a fine ship, splendidly equipped and handled; but she, too, was destined to vanish from the face of the waters.

The victim of another still remembered ocean mystery was expected at Liverpool in March, 1881. March passed and Liverpool saw nothing of her. The long delay in her arrival caused great anxiety, and the wildest rumors began to be circulated. On April 13 news came that her engines and rudder had been disabled in heavy weather, and that she had put into Madeira for repairs, and there naturally followed a reaction from gloomy forebodings to transports of joy. The vessel was expected at Liverpool on a certain day, and her arrival was awaited by hundreds of people who had friends aboard, but she never came, and it was found that the story of her arrival at Madeira was a heartless hoax. All the time the ill-fated vessel was at the bottom of the sea.

On Nov. 30, 1886, a large vessel was seen from the beach at Deal, sailing toward the Goodwin Sands. She was a picture to look on as she moved over the waters with her stately spread of sails. But as the eyes of the watchers followed her she was seen to pause, and within a few seconds she vanished utterly from their view. What caused this tragically sudden disappearance of a stately ship? That is another of the countless secrets which the ocean has in its jealous keeping.

LAWYERS MAKE FACES.

London Lecturer Severely Condemns Specialists, Especially Medical.

Many society women, dressed in the very height of fashion, are studying the philosophy of Plato at Claridge's Hotel, London, where Dr. Emile Reich delivered his second lecture recently. The lecture was entitled "The Particular and the General; the Individual and the Society," and many and varied were the subjects dealt with. One of its most interesting features was the belief expressed by Dr. Reich that professions make faces.

"I find it very difficult to say whether the lawyer's face is growing more like that of a wolf or a fox, but it is certainly getting more animal-like," was one of the lecturer's statements.

"The general physiognomy of a Roman Catholic priest is different from the general physiognomy of a Protestant priest, and, if the two were dressed the same, you would be able easily to distinguish them," he continued, adding that a similar difference might be seen in the faces of Oxford and Cambridge graduates.

The man who endeavors to be a "specialist" in anything came in for severe criticism from Dr. Reich.

"The specialist knows nothing, because he does not generalize," he said, and then, referring to the medical specialist who particularizes on the eye, the ear, hair or teeth, he added, "You will soon be going to a specialist for the right ear, and a specialist for the left ear. And you will lose your hearing."

Fruit As an Aid to Digestion.

Dr. J. G. Sharp in The London Lancet calls attention to the very considerable digestive action of the juices of such common fruit as apples, pears, cherries, strawberries, etc. He states that the fruit acids combine with the iron in proteid foods and enable the blood to take it up; hence meat and fruit are the proper diet for anaemia. The ferments contained in many common fruits, as well as in the pineapple, give them considerable digestive power of a nature similar to that possessed by the pancreatic juice. To obtain the best therapeutic results from fruit Dr. Sharp recommends that it be eaten at the end of the chief meal. All tinned fruits are lacking in this digestive power, since the high temperature preceding the canning kills the ferments.

Gruesome Exhibit In Court Room.

Chair in Which Mrs. Lloyd Was Found Dead Exhibited This Morning--Plans Showing Location of the Lloyd Building Explained--Judgment in Simmonds vs. Chown and Moon vs. Mather.

Adam Lloyd, the aged farmer, charged with killing and afterwards trying to cremate his wife, was commenced this morning, as soon as the Moon vs. Mather alleged slander case went to the jury.

Old Mr. Lloyd was brought into court at a quarter past 10. The old man did not look so robust as at the preliminary investigation.

The charge of murder was read to him, and he pleaded "not guilty" in a voice which had no sign of tremor in it. His son-in-law, Mr. Brickman, took a seat inside the bar, just in front of the prisoner's dock.

The selection of a jury was then proceeded with, with the following result:

THE JURY.

Walter Windover, Frankford.
Richard Baxter, Deseronto.
Eugene M. Badgley, Tyendinaga.
Charles Vermilyea, Sidney.
James McMullen, Thurlow.
Patrick Gillen, Marmora.
Thomas Montgomery, Rawdon.
Harvey Hoskins, Thurlow.
Geo. Bateman, Deseronto.
James Flynn, Monteagle.
David T. Laughlin, Hungerford.
John Hunt, jr., Tyendinaga.

There was a large number of jurors challenged, one of them being loudly challenged by the prisoner himself.

THE CROWN'S CASE.

Mr. Meredith, Crown Prosecutor, then laid the Crown's case before the jury. He reminded them of their solemn duty. Nothing they had heard or read should weigh with them. They must judge the case by the evidence they heard. There was much crime nowadays, the Crown Prosecutor said, and, in the interests of society, it must not go unpunished. The circumstances of the case were then related. The prisoner and his dead wife had been married 25 years. Their daughter had married a man named Brickman, and the Brickmans, it was said, desired to get hold of the small property the Lloyds had, owned by Mrs. Lloyd. The prisoner was to have a life lease of the property upon the death of his wife That might show a motive for the commission of the crime. They would show that there had been frequent quarrels between the prisoner and his dead wife, and one theory was that they had a quarrel on the morning of the tragedy, and that the prisoner and his dead wife, and one theory was that they had a quarrel on the morning of the tragedy, and that the prisoner, in the heat of passion, struck his wife, causing her death. Then, to cover up evidence of his crime, he poured coal oil over her clothes and set fire to them. In such a case as this, the Crown Prosecutor said, the jury might be justified in bringing in a verdict of manslaughter. The incidents of the tragedy, as told in The Intelligencer at the time, were related by the Crown Prosecutor. Suspicious circumstances in connection with the case were pointed out, among them the prisoner's statement that the dead woman was sitting peacefully in an arm chair when he found her; that the fire was under control, and that it could not, according to the prisoner, have been a spark from the stove which set fire to his wife's clothes. Neighbors, in preparing the old lady's body for burial, found a wound on her head. The old man was asked, by a party who entered the house, how the wound was caused. The prisoner said he did not know how the wound was made. The Crown Prosecutor said doctors would testify that the wound was made while old Mrs Lloyd was alive. It was possible the blow which caused the wound might have caused death, as doctors would testify that she had a weak heart. The fact that the dead woman was burned from the navel to the neck was dwelt on by the Crown Prosecutor. But the most startling evidence was that there were no burns on the woman's hands or arms. Was it within the range of possibility that that old woman would have sat there alive and not have tried to put the fire out, thus causing burns to appear on her hands? Doctors would testify that the burns on the woman's body could not have been caused by the combustion of the old lady's dress unless there had been some inflammable matter poured over it. The question was, who struck her on the head; who poured coal oil over her clothes? There was no one else there, according to the prisoner, but himself and his wife. The jury, the Crown Prosecutor said, must determine by the evidence what their verdict would be.

The Prosecution.

W. R. AYLESWORTH.

Mr. Aylesworth identified a plan of the Lloyd house, introduced in court, as having been made by him. The distance from the house to the barn would be 145 feet. The house would be 160 feet from the travelled road, and the barn over 212 feet. The nearest house to Lloyds' was a quarter of a mile away. Mr. Aylesworth was then ordered to explain the submitted plan to the jury, which he did.

Cross-examined by Mr. Porter, Mr. Aylesworth said he had noticed some spots on the floor, which looked as though someone had tried to rub them out. The marks were about midway between the stove and the door in the living room. He did not notice that a piece had been taken out of the floor.

A GRUESOME EXHIBIT.

Mr. Porter produced a piece of board, about a foot long, but Mr. Aylesworth did not remember seeing any hole in the floor of the Lloyd living room which the piece would fit. One of the exhibits in court was the rocking chair in which the dead woman was sitting when found. The back of the chair was almost entirely burned out. It gave one a "creepy" feeling as he looked at the chair and called to mind the lifeless and burned body which was sitting in it when old Mr. Lloyd, according to his story, went back from his barn to his house on that fateful morning of January 23, 1905.

Mr. Porter asked Mr. Aylesworth several questions about the lay of the furniture in the Lloyd living room. He produced a model of the bedstead in the Lloyd house, the dimensions of which were minutely explained.

The prisoner sat nervously twitching his fingers while all this was going on.

Mr. Porter asked Mr Aylesworth if he had noticed a stovepipe hole in the ceiling of the room, which was much too large for the pipe.

Mr. Aylesworth remembered the stovepipe hole, but could not say whether it was too large for the pipe or not. He remembered, however, that the stovepipe hole was almost directly above the spots which he remembered seeing on the floor. The windows and doors of the Lloyd house were loose and shaky, and would, perhaps, allow smoke to escape. The witness did not remember that the stove was in a dilapidated condition. It seemed in fair condition to him.

Re-examined, Mr. Aylesworth said he visited the Lloyd place in October. He had no knowledge of what conditions were like in January.

A life lease of the Lloyd property, from Brickman and wife to Adam Lloyd and wife, was entered as an exhibit.

MRS. ISABELLA WRIGHT.

Mrs. Wright said she lived in the nearest house to the Lloyds. Mr. Lloyd came to her house about 8 o'clock on the morning of Jan. 23, and said Hannah was dead—burned to death. He entered the house and sat down. Then he told of how he and his wife had arisen that morning, his wife being in her apparent usual health. He went out to the barn. Smelling something he returned to the house and found his wife dead in a rocking chair, with her dress on fire. Lloyd then went back home and Mrs. Wright tried to get some neighbors to go with her to the Lloyd house, and finally got Miss Kincaid to go. When she arrived the prisoner was getting his breakfast — a hot breakfast. There was much smoke and a smell of burnt flesh. The bed was in one corner of the living room.

BODY LYING ON THE BED.

Mrs. Lloyd was lying on the bed, covered with a robe. Witness recognized the chair produced in court as being in the Lloyd living room that morning The chair was about nine or ten feet from the stove when she saw it. She did not remember whether there was a couch there or not. Witness did not remember whether Lloyd said anything or not. Miss Lily Bowers came in shortly afterwards. Then Mr. Kincaid's boys, John and William. Then Mrs. Burleigh and Mrs. Bowers arrived, and they got the water ready to wash Mrs. Lloyd. Witness helped to wash her. Her face was smoked some, and there was a cut over her eye — the left eye. The skin was off her cheek and nose. There was not, so far as she could see, any blood around the wound. The witness told of finding burns around the dead woman's body.

NO BURNS ON HANDS OR ARMS.

There were no burns on the hands or arms. After they had washed Mrs. Lloyd they put her in the other room, on a board. Witness did not hear anything said, by Lloyd, about the wound. She went home to dinner after Mrs. Lloyd had been laid out. She took Lloyd and Mrs. Burleigh with her. Witness remembered seeing some hair on the burnt chair. She identified it as being partly there at present. The floor near the chair was burnt a little in one spot; the spot was just in front of the chair. Witness went back to Lloyd's home after dinner. Lloyd told her he had found a cloth with coal oil on it. He did not say where he had found it. It was between 10 and 11 at night when Lloyd told her about finding the cloth with coal oil on it. Lloyd said he didn't know how his wife got a fire. Witness went back to the Lloyd house next morning, but did not remember seeing any coal oil. Just before Lloyd was arrested, some time after, Lloyd said he hoped God would strike him dead if he had put his hands on his wife.

Court adjourned at 12.30 till 1.30.

SIMMONDS VS. CHOWN.

In the case of Simmonds vs. Chown the jury did not arrive at a conclusion until nearly 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after being locked up for upwards of three hours. The verdict was for the plaintiff, who was allowed, as damages, $150.

Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff; Mr. F. E. O'Flynn for the defendants.

MOON VS. MATHER.

The attention of the court was yesterday afternoon taken up in hearing the case of Moon vs. Mather. This was an action for unstated damages. The plaintiff in the case is Mrs. A. Moon, who conducts a hotel at the Village of Stirling, and the defendant is a storekeeper in the same village, and it is alleged that the defendant made remarks to certain travellers in refence to Moon's hotel, which caused them to quit patronizing the hotel. Considerable evidence was submitted in the case. At the opening of the court this morning His Lordship delivered his charge to the jury. At 11.15 the jury came into court with a verdict of $350 for the plaintiff. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff; Mr. A. E. DuVernet and Mr. J. E. Halliwell for the defendant.

Attempted Suicide.

MAN FOUND IN WATER NEAR BAY BRIDGE APPROACH — HAD PROBABLY SWALLOWED SMALL QUANTITY OF CARBOLIC ACID—VICTIM SENT TO THE HOSPITAL.

At about 1 o'clock this afternoon, as Messrs. Asa Brickman and Wm. Giles, of Ameliasburg, were driving along the roadway to the bay bridge, they noticed a man floundering about in the water and as quickly as possible they pulled him out. That the man intended to end his existence there seems to be no doubt, as it was apparent that he had, in addition to attempting to drown himself, taken a small quantity of carbolic acid, from a bottle which was found in his possession.

The affair was reported to the police and the man was conveyed to the police station with very little delay. He was in a very nervous condition. He gave two names, David Lalonde and John Allore, and gave Trenton as his home. He also said he was 60 years of age, but his appearance would not indicate such an age.

Dr. Yeomans was summoned to the station and made an examination of the man and ordered him to be sent to the hospital, which was done.

The unfortunate man's face presented a rather haggard appearance. The left eye was very black, there were a severe cut upon the chin and some scratches on the face.

Of a number of persons who saw the man in the police station, none had seen him about the city. His mind was in such a condition that a satisfactory statement could not be obtained.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING.

ONE OF BELLEVILLE'S MOST POPULAR DAUGHTERS BECOMES THE BRIDE OF A TORONTONIAN.

A pretty wedding took place here at 2.30 this afternoon, when the marriage was solemnized of Miss Helen Mary ("Mollie") Goldsmith, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. P. D. Goldsmith and Mr. Norman Gundry Evans, son of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Evans, 82 Spadina Road, Toronto. The ceremony was performed in the large drawing-room of spacious "Maplehurst" by Rev. George Brown, pastor of the Tabernacle, in the presence of about 100 guests.

The bride looked charming in a handsome gown of white brocaded satin en princesse, draped over white shirred chiffon, with bolero and trimmings of point lace. She wore a coronet of orange blossoms, with tulle veil, and carried a bouquet of violets.

Miss Nelle Goldsmith, the bride's sister, who was bridesmaid, wore pale blue chiffon taffeta trimmed with baby Irish insertion and carried pink roses.

The best man was Mr. Norman Gibson, of Niagara Falls. Little Miss Ruth Bone, the groom's niece, as flower girl, was dressed in white organdie inserted with valenciennes lace, and carried a sheaf of white easter lilies with the ring concealed in one. Master George Goldsmith, the bride's nephew, as page, wore a black velvet suit with lace collar. The ushers were Messrs. H. S. Banwell and Tom Brown, of Toronto.

Mrs. Goldsmith, mother of the bride, wore a handsome grey silk gown with insertions of Irish point lace. Mrs. Evans wore black chantilly lace over pale blue taffeta, with toque of blue tulle and ermine stole and muff.

Mrs. J. R. Bone, sister of the groom, wore white broadcloth en princesse with trimmings of gold embroidery and white hat.

Mrs. Perry Goldsmith wore black chiffon, with handsome hand-painted design in pink, over white taffeta.

Mrs. W. H. O'Flynn was in green voile over silk. Mrs. Gundry, the groom's grandmother, wore black brocaded silk with touches of white and bonnet to match. Miss Grace Gundry, of Baltimore, Md., was charmingly gowned in pale blue, with white hat trimmed with pale blue.

After the ceremony the bride held a reception and after the wedding breakfast the happy couple left on a trip to Washington and the Southern States.

The exceedingly numerous and handsome presents included a case of solid silver and cutlery from the staff of the Dominion Bank, Toronto, the associates of the groom.

The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful diamond and sapphire hoop ring. To the bridesmaid he gave a sunburst of pearls, to the flower girl and page pretty pins.

BOLD AND BRAZEN STEAL.

Hon. Mr. Foster On the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company Transaction —Roche's Motion Lost.

Ottawa, April 4.—Mr. Greenway (Lisgar) this afternoon resumed the debate upon the motion of Mr. Roche (Marquette), declaring that the lands of the Northwest should be reserved for the settlers, and that railroads should be required at once to select the lands to which they are entitled.

Mr. Foster declared the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company transaction to have been a bold and brasen steal.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that Mr. Foster had traveled out of his way to insult two members of this House, fully as honorable as himself. Sir Wilfrid denied that there was any scandal.

R. L. Borden doubted the good faith of the Government.

Upon division Roche's resolution was lost, yeas 58, nays 111. Bourassa voted with the Conservatives and Verville with the Government.

The Sunday bill was referred without comment to a select committee to be named hereafter. Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick briefly explained the bill.

Fatal Result of Freight Collision.

Welland, April 4.—In a collision at Port Robinson early yesterday, between G. T. The President For a Day Story.

The story that David R. Atchison of Missouri was president for a day started as a joke. Atchison was president of the senate at the expiration of President Polk's term, and the law at that time provided that that official should succeed to the presidency in default of both president and vice president. March 4, 1849, was Sunday, and President Zachary Taylor did not take the oath of office until Monday, March 5. Somebody thereupon started the joke that neither Polk nor Taylor was president during the odd day and that Atchison must have been. But if Taylor could not under the constitution be president until he had taken the oath of office how could Atchison? He did not take the oath either.

The Word "Tariff."

The word tariff has an interesting origin. It is derived from the Arabic ta 'rifa, meaning an inventory of fees payable on demand, and became current in the following way: A certain Moorish general, by name Tarifa, seized in the year 710 upon a small seaport some twenty miles from what is now Gibraltar and the southernmost town in Europe. Here he founded a station for levying toll on all craft trading in the neighborhood and bestowed his name upon the place, after the manner of Constantine, Alexander and others. The word came eventually to signify a schedule of charges and passed into the French, Italian and English.

Weird Story of a Chair.

In the museum at Cape Town is shown an old fashioned, high backed wooden chair, to which attaches a weird story. It is related that the chair is the one in which the Dutch governor was found sitting dead a few moments after the execution of a soldier whom he had sentenced to be hanged, and who on his doom being pronounced solemnly called upon his condemner to accompany him to the throne of the Supreme Judge.

"On Satan's Knees."

A little girl of five or so was much puzzled on hearing the lines of the old hymn:

> And Satan trembles when he sees
> The weakest saint upon his knees.

"Whatever," she asked, "did they want to sit on Satan's knees for? I'm sure I should not like to sit on Satan's knees at all, and why should he tremble if they were so little?"

From the Irish.

Taking No Chances.

"Perhaps," suggested the waiter, "you would like a Welsh rabbit."

"No," said the austere customer; "I am a vegetarian."

"A Welsh rabbit is made of cheese, you know, sir."

"I know it. As I said before, I am a vegetarian."

MUNICIPAL POWER COMMISSION REPORT

Cost of Niagara Electrical Energy at Doors of the People.

WOULD CUT COST OF POWER AND LIGHT

Estimates of Cost of Plants of 30,000, 60,000 and 100,000 Horse Power, and Its Distribution Among Contributing Municipalities — Annual Cost of Maintenance and Provision For Interest and Necessary Sinking Fund —Details of the Cost of Power Per Horse Power, Arc Lighting and Incandescent Lighting.

Toronto, April 4.—The finding of the municipal power commissioners would reach the mayors of the several municipalities represented in the investigation yesterday. The report, which was signed by Mr. E. W. B. Snider of Waterloo, chairman; P. W. Ellis of Toronto, vice-chairman; Hon. Adam Beck, M. P. P., of London; W. F. Cockshutt of Brantford, and Reginald A. Fessenden of New York, technical adviser, is, in part, as follows:

Recommend the Enterprise.

Your commissioners believe that the industrial future of the communities that are capable of being supplied with electric power generated at Niagara Falls depends in very great measure upon the utilization of that power, and they strongly and unhesitatingly recommend that, whether or not expropriation of the lighting companies becomes necessary, the proposed enterprise be taken up and pushed to completion. They are unanimously of opinion, and they definitely recommend:

1st. That a municipal development of the type reported on herein be carried out, on a scale suited to the needs of as many municipalities as are willing to join in the undertaking, and, to that end, they advise that all other municipalities capable of being served by a Niagara Falls development be furnished with copies of this report, and be requested to join in the carrying-out of the proposed enterprise.

2nd. That, in the event of other municipalities being unwilling to take up the matter, those directly represented herein, namely, Toronto, London, Brantford, Guelph, Stratford, Woodstock and Ingersoll, carry out, with all possible expedition, a development of the 60,000 h. p. type reported on.

Site of the Development.

3rd. That, subject to the approval of the construction engineers, the development be carried out at site 4, as shown on the illustrative map No. 1, annexed. This site is, for development purposes, the best and cheapest within the park limits. This opinion appears to have been held by Mr. Randolph, C. E., of Chicago, who was retained by the park commissioners to report upon the available power sites. It has been confirmed by Messrs. Ross and Holgate, and ratified by Prof. Fessenden, and they do not think that the interests of the municipalities should be sacrificed either to illusory fears that the beauty of the park would be impaired by the proposed development, or to any dispute arising out of the contested claims of another company.

In the event of other municipalities being willing to join with those your commissioners represent, for the purpose of carrying out a development corresponding to their needs, it would be well to make specific enquiry into the actual power conditions prevailing in such other municipalities, and, at the same time, to estimate the additional cost involved, including the distributing stations and plants that would be required in connection therewith.

To Go Before Ratepayers.

By so doing, the total cost of one consolidated scheme, beginning at Niagara Falls and terminating at consumers' premises within the participating municipalities, would be ascertained, and could be placed before the respective bodies of ratepayers for consideration. Your commissioners have, by ascertaining and stating the facts herein reported, and by submitting the conclusions and recommendations that a careful study of the facts has led them to, discharged the duties they assumed, and they now leave the matter and its issues in the hands of the public they have had the honor of representing.

Respectfully submitted,
E. W. B. SNIDER, Chairman.
P. W. ELLIS,
W. F. COCKSHUTT,
A. BECK,
R. A. FESSENDEN.

Legal Position.

Section 62 of the Municipal Power Works Act expressly states that "Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed . . . to authorize the commissioners to supply power, heat or light in contravention" of the "provisions contained in sections 566 to 568, inclusive of the Municipal Act." Section 566 of the Municipal Act permits certain municipal corporations, therein described, to construct works for lighting the public streets, but only upon condition that an offer be first made in the prescribed manner to purchase the works and property of any existing electric light company, "that has supplied, or shall supply . . . electric light for street lighting in the municipality."

Your commissioners applied to the municipalities they represent for copies of all existing contracts with electric light companies for the purpose of ascertaining the municipal corporation rights and obligations thereunder. They received in reply, copies of the contracts and governing bylaws from all the municipalities to which they applied, with the exception of Ingersoll. . . . The said contracts were submitted to counsel, who advised that, before the municipalities could proceed to carry out the proposed undertaking, they would require to make offers to buy would require to make offers to buy out the existing electric light companies in Toronto, London and Brantford.

The position of Ingersoll is uncertain, on account of lack of information. Your commissioners instructed their engineers to value the assets of the lighting companies concerned upon the principles laid down in the Municipal Act.

The Brantford Electric and Operating Co., Limited, freely gave access to its premises, but the Toronto Electric Light Co. and the London Electric Co. refused access to their plants. Your commissioners having no power to force admission estimated the cost of an entirely new undertaking.

Section 62 of the Municipal Power Works Act and sections 566 to 568 of the Municipal Act (this latter being popularly known as the Conmee Act), will, as they stand at present, interfere with the carrying out of the new undertaking hereby reported on.

Financial Provisions.

Sections 34 to 42, inclusive, of the Municipal Power Works Act deal with the manner of financing the undertaking. The principal directions, apart from those relating to form of procedure, are as follows:

1st. The municipal corporations concerned are authorized to issue debentures to the estimated amount of their respective shares of the capital cost, and deliver the same to a trustee appointed under the act. The debentures are to be sold under an agreement between the municipal corporations, the construction commission and the trustee, and the proceeds of the sale are to be paid over to the construction commissioners.

2nd. The construction commissioners are authorized to issue bonds, secured upon the total assets of the undertaking, to the amount of the proceeds of the municipal debentures aforementioned, which are to be held by the trustee in trust for the municipal corporations, subject to the express trusts governing the collection and disposition of interest, sinking fund and other matters, as set forth in the act.

3rd. In the event of the capital cost of the completed works exceeding in amount the proceeds of the bonds issued in connection therewith, the commissioners are authorized, with the approval of the Chief Justice of Ontario for the time being, to issue "special bonds," secured by a first lien on the whole property of the undertaking, and carrying "a preference over the other bonds," to meet the amount of such deficit. Further, if it should become necessary or advisable at any time that funds are not otherwise available to meet the cost of such extension or improvement, the commissioners may, with the approval of the Chief Justice of Ontario, raise, from time to time, the amount necessary by the issue and sale of "special bonds," carrying priority over the other bonds, as aforesaid.

Reliability of Costs Submitted.

Messrs. Ross and Holgate, the consulting engineers herein, have made what they consider ample allowance for all contingencies, in respect of both capital and operating costs. Their work has been done in the most satisfactory way, with great care, and, in addition to purely actuarial checks, it has been fully and critically examined and confirmed by Prof. Fessenden. All known and probable conditions and the experience of the companies already established have been taken into consideration, with the net result that the engineers believe the costs are over rather than under-stated. Your commissioners have every confidence in the capacity and judgment of their advisers, and believe that the event will vindicate the estimate.

Conditions of Success.

There is no dispute as to the existence of the power or the demand for it. There is no doubt as to the supply of skill necessary to establish and operate the works required. There is no question as to the financial ability of the municipalities to carry out the undertaking.

The one fundamental condition of success is that the constructing and operating commission shall be composed of highly capable business men, whose supreme and constant aim shall be that of realizing the highest degree of efficiency in the various services.

Operating this as a purely business institution, and absolutely divorced from politics, your commissioners have every confidence that the future of the enterprise will prove increasingly successful.

A Mass of Figures.

The balance of the report is a mass of figures. These deal chiefly with the financial side of the question as it affects those cities which contributed to the cost of preparing the report—Toronto, London, Brantford, Guelph, Stratford, Woodstock and Ingersoll.

They go further, and give estimates upon the possibility that eleven municipalities, other than those mentioned may also join in the municipal power scheme. They report that a 30,000 horse-power plant would for the present possibly suffice for the needs of the municipalities who have already joined hands. Then they estimate for a 60,000 horse-power plant, which would cover the needs of the future for some time at least. Upon top of this again, they estimate for a 100,000 horse-power plant—a plant calculated to meet the needs of the eleven additional municipalities who might be induced, seeing the advantages of the plan, to take a partnership.

Cost and Its Distribution.

The capital cost of the construction of a sufficient power developing plant, and of the transmission of the power to the municipalities is as follows:

For a 30,000 h. p. plant, $6,684,629.
For a 60,000 h. p. plant, $9,354,611.
For a 100,000 h. p. plant (exclusive of the cost of delivering same to the eleven additional municipalities), $11,909,100.

The distribution of the cost is placed as follows:

	30,000 h. p.	60,000 h. p.	100,000 h. p.
Toronto	$4,323,069	$6,295,424	$6,216,113
London	847,119	1,095,356	945,185
Brantford	429,152	571,097	509,248
Guelph	317,441	425,386	377,821
Stratford	329,923	431,018	368,154
Woodstock	216,226	278,939	244,589
Ingersoll	221,672	287,391	249,754

The annual cost of maintenance of these several plants, including the provision of the necessary interest and sinking fund to meet the capital expenditure, is estimated as follows: For 30,000 h. p., $859,610; for 60,000 h. p., $1,138,551; for 100,000 h. p., $1,413,624.

These figures include payment of entire plant in forty years, and of 4 1-2 per cent. interest to municipalities on money raised by them, giving a profit of one per cent. on the regular 3 1-2 per cent. rate paid by them on loans.

Estimated Power Rates.

Following are the estimated rates upon which power may be furnished to the municipalities, delivered on premises, upon the twenty-four hour basis:

	30,000 h. p.	60,000 h. p.	100,000 h. p.
Toronto	$21.97	$15.73	$14.60
London	33.07	23.27	20.34
Brantford	30.02	17.92	15.57
Guelph	27.68	18.26	16.70
Stratford	33.67	21.45	19.42
Woodstock	34.43	21.05	17.53
Ingersoll	33.96	21.61	17.99

Cost of Arc Lighting.

The cost of arc lighting per lamp of 2,000 c. p. is estimated as follows:

	30,000 h. p.	50,000 h. p.	100,000 h. p.
Toronto	$42.02	$37.61	$36.43
London	54.08	44.89	41.36
Brantford	49.73	42.91	40.55
Guelph	47.84	40.69	39.13
Stratford	56.83	47.23	45.20
Woodstock	56.16	48.16	44.64
Ingersoll	72.58	64.02	60.40

The present charges per lamp in these municipalities are as follows: Toronto, $69.35; London, $76 (with forty-eight dark night for moon); Brantford, $60; Guelph, $65; Stratford, $65; Woodstock, $60; Ingersoll, $60.

Incandescent Lighting Cost.

For incandescent lighting the cost per kilowat hour per light is estimated as follows:

	30,000 h. p.	60,000 h. p.	100,000 h. p.
Toronto	7.41c	6.40c	6.14c
London	11.05c	9.25c	8.39c
Brantford	9.45c	7.78c	7.20c
Guelph	11.04c	9.65c	9.26c
Stratford	12.18c	9.83c	9.34c
Woodstock	13.07c	10.91c	9.95c
Ingersoll	13.21c	11.12c	10.23c

No allowance is made for over-lapping, or the use by customers of a less amount of power than they contract for, by means of which some private companies are said to add as much as 50 per cent. to their profits.

WORTH $10,000 EACH.

Crown Attorney Curry Gets Some Result From Probing Into Young Ladies' Financing of York Loan.

Toronto, April 4.—The Hudson girls figured prominently in the Phillips' investigation yesterday. Miss Lilian Hudson informed the court that she was worth $10,000, mostly in Toronto Life stock, which, Crown Attorney Curry said, "made a valuable property out of the moneys of the York Loan, money that should absolutely belong to York Loan shareholders." Her sister, Georgina was worth about the same. Books purporting to be collection books of the Liszt Piano Co., and the York Loan were produced. Crown Attorney Curry asked Miss Lilian if a book he held up was the original. Witness replied it was copied lately. The original book was thrown into the waste paper basket and eventually burnt. It was because they were soiled and blotted that she made new ones, she said.

Witness was being questioned as to whether she had any cheques that she had given to the York Loan or to the Toronto Life, when she complained that she was feeling unwell.

"You had better go home and get to bed," said Col. Denison to the witness, who left the court.

A Reticent Witness.

Her place in the box was taken by Miss Georgina Hudson, with whom the crown attorney had several verbal tussels during the afternoon. She professed either vagueness or a want of memory or of knowledge when asked most of the questions, especially those with regard to persons to whom she had loaned amounts and also with respect to the sources of her income. Witness held her ground well, but the ordeal was obviously a keen one, and it must have been with relief that she left the box at 4.30.

A Trip to the Coast.

The witness was very short in her memory concerning a trip to the coast she had made with Joseph Phillips, Miss Robb and E. J. Burt. They had to visit several offices in connection with the Toronto Life and the York County.

"It would not take four of you to go visiting offices," said the crown attorney.

"It was a general inspection," said witness, who was very hazy concerning the business transacted at all the places visited.

With formal evidence by the Misses Hall, the proceedings closed for the day.

Water Tanks Crash Through Roofs.

Montreal, April 4.—A 12,000 gallon water-tank on the building of Boivin, Wilson & Co., wholesale liquor dealers, St. Paul street, crashed through the roof yesterday morning and killed a girl named Ross, an employe of the firm mentioned, and injured several other employes.

Last week a similar accident happened at the Davies Packing Co.'s factory, on the canal, a 30,000 tank breaking through the roof, falling sideways, and carrying away part of the wall. It caused over $5,000 damage.

Railway Changes.

Montreal, April 4.—The Central Railway of Canada, formerly the Ottawa River Railway Co., has purchased the Irondale, Bancroft & Ottawa Railway, planned to run from Kinmount to Ottawa, 150 miles, fifty of which are completed. The same company has also purchased the Ottawa River Navigation Co., together with their thirteen miles of road from Carillon to Grenville.

Russia's Radical Tide.

St. Petersburg, April 4.—The official canvass of the votes cast at the election on Monday had not been completed at midnight, but it is conceded that the Radical tide has swept to victory every one of the 160 constitutional democratic candidates. The constitutional Democrats look forward to a working majority in the National Parliament.

A. W. Puttee Hurt.

Winnipeg, April 4.—While wheeling home late Monday night, A. W. Puttee, ex-M. P. for Winnipeg, was struck by an automobile at the corner of Main and Selkirk avenue. He was thrown several feet in the air, and picked up unconscious. He is suffering from concussion of the brain.

AERONAUT LOSES LIFE

Fearful Struggle in Long Island Marsh End in Death.

Exhausted, Falls Face Downward in Bog, After Superhuman Efforts to Reach Land—Paul Nocquet Essayed a Trip That a Strong Man Could Not Possibly Complete In Daylight—Crossed 14 Islands.

New York, April 5.—Death in the waters of Bass Creek on the south shore of Long Island, between Jones' Beach and Amityville ended the daring balloon ascension begun Tuesday afternoon by Paul Nocquet, a French sculptor of note and an enthusiastic amateur aeronaut. The body was found last night on the muddy shore of the creek where the tide had left it and not a great distance from where Nocquet's collapsed balloon was discovered by the life savers of Jones' Beach.

Nocquet evidently landed safely with his car and in fighting his way out of the meadows in the darkness had crossed 13 or 14 different islands and had swam or waded through the runlets between them.

He stopped on the next to the last island he reached and removed the life preserver and the overcoat and then resumed the preserver. He crossed the runlet and climbed into the bog—shaking mass of mud, sand and dead rushes known as Cat's Island. He crossed it at a distance of perhaps 100 feet and apparently as he reached the near bank he must have fallen exhausted into the Shallow creek. He may have died from sheer exhaustion or heart disease before falling. The body lay face down in the bog.

Nocquet must have struggled the last mile of the two he traveled under fearful difficulties. He essayed a trip that a strong man could not possibly complete in daylight.

Hotel Guest Suffocates.

Bangor, Maine, April 5.—John McDonald of Cape Breton, a guest at the Globe Hotel, was suffocated yesterday morning in a fire which damaged the hotel. The financial loss will not exceed $10,000.

Engineer Saves Passengers.

Norfolk, Va., April 5.—A wreck occurred on the Norfolk and Western Railroad, yesterday, when the "Cannon Ball" train, bound from Richmond to this city, ran through an open switch at Juniper Siding. Seven persons were injured in the wreck, and but for the vigilance of Mark Noble, engineer of the train, who was watching for just such a thing as an open switch, which caused the wreck, probably many of the 50 or 60 passengers aboard would have been killed. The train was running at the rate of 75 or 80 miles an hour.

Two Men Killed.

Sault Ste. Marie, April 5.—The bodies of two unknown men were found on the track of the Canadian Pacific at Echo Bay on Tuesday. They are supposed to have been killed by a train during the night.

May Modify Their Demands.

Ray Of Hope Apparent In the Anthracite Situation

Original Demands of the Union Greater Than Expected to Get, and If Operators Meet the Men Half Way the Present Strike Will Soon Be a Thing of the Past--Mitchell Satisfied With Soft Coal Situation.

New York, April 5.—It was the general belief last night of those who are closely watching the situation about the anthracite miners' headquarters in this city that the miners definitely have decided to modify their demands and will present them to the operators probably to-day. Some of the members of the committee privately admitted before coming to New York for the present negotiations that the original demands of the union were greater than the miners really expected to get and that the leaders could afford to trim them down and still leave the workers enough to be satisfied. It is believed that if the operators will meet the men half way on some of the demands they have made such as a reconstruction of the conciliation board, an eight-hour day and an increase in pay for some classes of labor the miners would seriously consider the proposition of renewing the strike commission award for not more than one year. The miners all along have asserted they would not bind themselves to any agreement for three years.

Working Out Well.

Preparations for another meeting today between the sub-committee representing the anthracite operators and miners kept the Shamokin scale committe of the miners busy yesterday.

All the district leaders received reports from the anthracite fields during the day and evening and notwithstanding reports that more coal was mined yesterday than the day before or Monday they declare the situation entirely satisfactory to them.

President Mitchell, when asked last night how matters stood in the soft coal fields, said: "Matters in these sections are entirely satisfactory to me. Everything is turning out as I expected and I believe the situation in the west will soon be cleared up."

When informed that President Roosevelt had declined to interfere with the soft coal troubles, he showed great interest and plainly showed he was much gratified at the stand the President had taken.

A Good Omen.

A drop of 50 cents in the F. O. B prices of soft coal occurred in New York City yesterday. The dealers did not state the reasons for the decrease, but it was reported as due to the improvement in the bituminous strike situation and the releasing of the coal now in storage.

A Night of Terror.

Irwin, Pa., April 5.—Tuesday night was one of disorder and terror at Edna mine No. 2, of the Pennsylvania Gas Coal Co., where several hundred men are on strike for recognition of the union. The strikers kept up all night a continuous fusilade of firing. No one was injured.

There was a clash last night between the guards of the Pennsylvania Gas Coal Co., and a crowd of 150, and as a result Lieut. Rhodes of the guards was struck on the head with a stone. The coal company immediately had more guards sworn in.

The disorder of Tuesday night was yesterday attributed to the prevalence of liquor in the town and yesterday a close watch was kept to prevent the peddling of intoxicants.

No Coal to Run Trains.

Des Moines, Ia., April 5.—The Minneapolis and St. Louis and the Iowa Central Railroads yesterday announced the annulment of six local passenger trains for Sunday, because of coal shortage due to the coal strike.

LIVES 25 DAYS IN MINE.

Appearance of Another Survivor Results In Demonstration.

Lens, France, April 5.—Another living survivor of the mine disaster at Courrieres, March 10, was discovered yesterday morning and brought out of the pit. His name is Auguste Herton, and when found was in fairly good condition, and, according to his first statements, he suffered less than the preceding rescued men.

As the news spread through the region it caused extreme exasperation against the engineers who have been directing the salvage work. M. Leson, the state engineer, when he arrived at the pit, was surrounded by a crowd of people who cursed and swore at him, one woman going so far as to strike the engineer.

When the engineers came to the surface at noon, they were attacked by a crowd of women, crying "death to the murderers." They were rescued by a squadron of dragoons. The people are intensely excited. They believe that there are other men alive in the mine and serious disorders are threatened.

The Ministry of Justice has directed the public prosecutor of Douai, Department of the Nord, to investigate the methods followed by the salvage engineers at Courrieres, with the view of prosecuting them under the criminal code for negligence and manslaughter. The Ministry has ordered the prosecutor to make a rigid application of the laws without respect for the high position of the responsible persons, including the state and company engineers.

Death of John Bertram.

Hamilton, April 5.—The citizens generally heard with deep sorrow of the sudden death of Mr. John Bertram, the veteran manufacturer, and head of the great Bertram Works in Dundas. The sad event took place at his home there yesterday morning and was wholly unexpected. Mr. Bertram had not been at his office for a week, but no uneasiness was felt about him. He went upstairs after getting ready, and his daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Stirling thought she heard him fall. She ran up and found him dead. Mr. Bertram was a native of Eddlestone, Peebleshire, Scotland, born September 13, 1829.

Two Royal Deaths.

Vienna, April 5.—Prince William of Schaumburg-Lippe died early yesterday of heart failure at his castle at Nachod, Bohemia.

His daughter-in-law, Princess Louise, a daughter of the King of Denmark, died five hours later of meningitis, at the same castle.

Princess Louise was the eldest daughter of King Frederick VIII. of Denmark, and a niece of Queen Alexandra.

Chinese Have Smallpox.

Montreal, April 5.—Consternation was caused at the Windsor station yesterday morning, when it was discovered that smallpox had broken out amongst a party of 130 Chinamen who were being transported in bond by the C. P. R. One of the Celestials was immediately taken to the Isolation Hospital, while the 130 Chinese and a dozen or two other immigrants have been removed to an isolation camp.

The Coal Strike.

The situation in the anthracite coal mining district does not lack its amusing features, says the Montreal Gazette. The union called the men out on the eve of a conference which it is hoped will result in a peaceful adjustment of conditions. By doing this it brought out from the mines a lot of non-union men who, naturally, desiring to live in peace with the union men alongside of whom they work every day did not care to place themselves in an antagonistic position for the sake of a few days' pay. There was every reason to believe, in view of the situation, that the call to quit work would meet with a practically unanimous response. The strike—for technically that is what it is—was, from the union point of view, completely successful, for the union's representatives go into the conference with the whole body of miners, nominally at least, behind them. The fact that they have all the men out is the union's first, last and only advantage

On the other hand it is the operators' disadvantage. But they are not without compensating advantages. So long as the regulations are in progress no attempts will be made to interfere with their mines. They have a large supply of coal on hand and are consequently in a position, with the slack months of the year approaching, to sit down and wait. But the greatest advantage of all that they possess is that the men quit work with the expectation of returning in a few days. Strikes, accompanied by excitement, are easily kept going. It is only when they become dull, nothing to be done but wait, that they pall upon those engaged in them. This strike was born in a comatose condition, and it will require a good deal to wake it up. The operators will most likely be very careful not to assist in supplying this. A resumption of work would probably stir up things, and so it is not likely that work will be resumed. In the meantime the operators will have plenty of time to organize their forces, while the miners will be reducing their financial strength. When the collieries are reopened the non-union men should be ready to return and the union men should be tired. It is doubtful, however, if the strike will go as far as this. Public opinion, notably favorable towards the miners' cause in the last strike, is now hostile or indifferent. The commission laid down fair and equitable conditions of employment in its report. It especially condemned the demand of the union for its recognition, and by recognition in this case, is meant its widest application, and its denial of the right of any man not a member of the union to work in a coal mine. No settlement can be possible until the union withdraws this demand, and until it is withdrawn the onus for the strike must rest with the union. The demand for an eight-hour-day for such classes of labor employed above ground, is likewise impossible, for it cannot be justified in any other way than by assenting the union's right to insist upon the employment of more men than the conditions of labor justify. A settlement may not come this week, or this month, but it is not at all likely that the struggle will last as long as did that of three years ago.

Tower Falls to the Ground.

COLLAPSE OF TOWER ON DEPARTMENTAL BLOCK OF PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS — ESCAPE OF THOSE IN ITS VICINITY — DAMAGE ABOUT $10,000.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Ottawa, April 5.—The tower erected this past winter on the northern side of the departmental block to the west of the Parliament building fell just before noon to-day, with an awful crash, and now lies a heap of stone and cement. Fortunately signs of the coming collapse were noticed in time for everybody working in or near the tower to escape, and consequently no one was injured.

The cause of the collapse is not definitely known as yet, but it is credited to winter building and probably insufficient binding in the stone.

About sixty feet of tower fell, and the damage is estimated at about $10,000.

MASONS MAKE MERRY.

GRAND MASTER OF ONTARIO ENTERTAINED BY LOCAL LODGES —PLEASING FUNCTION — GOOD ADDRESSES—TUNEFUL MUSIC.

Members of the Masonic fraternity, not only in the city, but also from the surrounding country, last evening gathered in large numbers at the lodge room here. The occasion was memorable from the fact that Most Worshipful Bro. J. H. Burritt, of Pembroke, Grand Master for Ontario, was in attendance. Other distinguished members of the craft from Kingston, Napanee, Cobourg and other places were also present. In the early part of the evening the gathering was held in the lodge room, and a pleasing feature there was the presentation by the Grand Master of seven Past Master's jewels to brethren who had filled the Master's chair of Moira Lodge. These were Bros. Rev. D. F. Bogert, C. Ashley, W. S. Morden, F. Elvins, A. Matthews, L. W. Marsh and E. F. Milburn.

At the conclusion of the lodge meeting the brethren repaired to the banquetting hall. Here over 300 sat down to the bountiful spread which had been provided by Bro. J. Wallace.

The chair was ably filled by Right Worshipful Bro. A. McGinnis. After supper a toast list was carried out and it proved to be a most enjoyable affair. The addresses were all that could have been desired and the songs, which were interspersed, were appropriate. The toast list was as follows:

The King.—Proposed by R.W. Bro. A. McGinnis; God Save the King, by the company.

The Grand Master and the Grand Lodge of Canada—Proposed by R. W. Bro. W. N. Ponton, D.D.G.M., and responded to by M. W. Bro. J. H. Burritt, G.M.

Destroyed an Eye.

An elderly lady named Mrs. Minnie Vanwart, who resides on Foster Avenue, near the city limits, yesterday met with a distressing accident. She was feeding a yearling calf when the pail from which the animal was feeding upset. Mrs. Vanwart reached down to pick up the pail, and as she did so the calf raised its head in such a manner that one of the blunt horns pierced the right eye, lacerating it in a terrible manner and destroying the sight. Two physicians were called to attend to the injured woman.

Attempted Suicide Better.

In answer to an enquiry at the hospital to-day The Intelligencer was informed that the man who made an attempt at suicide yesterday is progressing favorably, but is not yet fit to leave that institution. He is still very nervous and is suffering from a severe attack of asthma, which was made more acute by being in the water. To the hospital authorities he gave his name as David Lalonde and said his home was in Quebec. When he is able to leave the hospital his case will be investigated.

Fell From Veranda.

Mr. Joseph Woodley, who resides on Sinclair street, was yesterday afternoon the victim of a painful accident which will confine him to the house for some time. He was engaged in making some improvements to the verandah in front of his residence, when he stepped upon a board which gave way under his weight. Mr. Woodley fell, and, although the distance was not great, the result was a fracture of his right leg just above the ankle. The unfortunate man was carried into the house and a physician was summoned to reduce the fracture.

THE LLOYD TRIAL.

rough. They found the glass broken which was on the top of the coffin. The glass had fallen down on the face of the corpse. Witness had seen Dr. Yeomans turn the body over in the coffin. The broken glass remained in the coffin till the jury came to look at the corpse. The body was moved three times, the broken glass being in the coffin all the time.

Re-examined — Witness could not undertake to say how the glass was broken, and had no knowledge of injury being done to the body by broken glass.

DR. YEOMANS.

Dr. Yeomans testified that he was a coroner, and, at the request of the County Attorney, had gone to Vantassel's cemetery to examine the body of Mrs. Hannah Lloyd. At Brickman's he had an interview with Adam Lloyd. Told Lloyd that he was there to investigate Mrs. Lloyd's death. The Doctor told Lloyd he had examined the body, and asked him for a statement. Brickman was there and interfered, so that witness had to warn him that, unless he desisted, he would have to be removed by County Constable Duffin. The Doctor then read the statement submitted by him to the Crown at the time. In technical terms, it gave such information as had already been imparted by certain witnesses in this case. Adam Lloyd gave Dr. Yeomans a statement of the tragedy. The statement alleges that Hannah Lloyd was not right in her mind, and, the night before the tragedy, got out of bed, saying she was looking for something. The story of the morning tragedy was the same as told by Adam Lloyd to other witnesses. Dr. Hudson had told Lloyd that an inquest would not be necessary. Nothing, the prisoner said, was disturbed about the stove. Mrs. Lloyd had been unwell for some time. Lloyd said. Doctors had said she had a weak heart. Questioned by the Crown Attorney, Dr. Yeomans said he had held an inquest and Adam Lloyd was a witness there. In his evidence he related practically the same story as outlined previously by many witnesses. Lloyd said he and his wife had never had any quarrels. His wife had gone, at times, to live with her daughter, Mrs. Brickman, but had come back owing to his being lonesome. His wife had tried to get up a couple of times in the night, saying she wanted to get something for him, but he had refused to let her get out of bed. The next morning his wife told him to go and do the chores and she would get breakfast. This was unusual, as generally she stayed in bed till breakfast was ready. The old man's story of the tragedy was the same as told to several witnesses. The windows were all nailed down, Lloyd said in his evidence. His wife looked natural when he found her. There was no injury done in his handling or carrying the body. He saw no marks but burning. Clothing of Mrs. Lloyd's was missing, which had not yet been found, among it a fur cap. The bread knife had been lost once, and found under a paper in a drawer. Lloyd said he believed his wife had caught fire when she put the missing clothing in the stove. Dr. Yeomans said Lloyd's first theory to him was accident. Later Lloyd said he believed his wife had poured coal oil on herself and then set fire to it. Lloyd said a quantity of coal oil was missing from the coal oil bottle. Dr. Boyce, of Belleville, and Dr. Mather, of Tweed, had made the post mortem, Dr. Yeomans said. He (Dr. Yeomans) had been practising 19 years. The first time he saw Mrs. Lloyd's body he looked for evidences of burning. The burns were very deep on the woman's body. There were no burns on the hands or forearms. As a doctor, the witness said he did not think it possible for the woman to be so severely burned in the time Lloyd said he was absent. He did not think it would be possible for anybody to suffer such burns as the dead woman did, while conscious, and not suffer burns on her hands. The pain would be intense. Speaking of the broken glass in the coffin, the witness said they found the glass had been cracked, and they had lifted it out in two pieces. It had done no harm whatever to the body. The witness remembered the wound on the dead woman's head, but had left the examination of it to the doctors who made the post mortem.

This ended the direct examination of Dr Yeomans, and the court adjourned at 6.50 till 9.30 Thursday morning.

Thursday Morning.

Several doctors were present in the Court room when proceedings opened this morning, and looked as though the forenoon would be devoted to medical testimony. Old Mr. Lloyd, stolid and impassive, was brought in about 9.25.

His Lordship announced that the jurymen who were on the second and third panels would now be relieved from further attendance at this court. They could wait on the Treasurer and get their pay. The jurymen in question filed out with joy expressed on their countenances.

DR. YEOMANS AGAIN.

To Mr. Meredith the Doctor said that, in his opinion, the cut on old Mrs. Lloyd's forehead had been received before death. The Crown Prosecutor then read from Adam Lloyd's evidence at the inquest, in which he told of missing coal oil from the bottle in the house, and finding a woollen cloth soaked with coal oil in the bedroom after his wife's death.

Cross-examined by Mr. Porter, Dr. Yeomans admitted the correctness of evidence given by him at the preliminary investigation. At that time the Doctor said he thought the burns on Mrs. Lloyd were sufficient to have caused her death, as she had a weak heart. It was possible the victim might have been unconscious when the burns were being inflicted, which might have accounted for the fact that her hands were not burned. The redness of the dead woman's hands might possibly have been caused by burns. In direct examination the witness said, where the burning took place before death, there would be a distinct red line of demarcation between the burns and the healthy tissue. This would not be visible when burning took place after death.

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT.

At this point the witness was ordered to stand aside, and the Grand Jury came in and made their presentment. They had visited the different public institutions and found them in good order. The system of heating and ventilation of the Court House was condemned and recommended to be made up-to-date.

HIS LORDSHIP'S REPLY.

In reply His Lordship thanked the Grand Jury for the way they had performed their duties, especially in finding a true bill against Mrs. Diamond. How the previous Grand Jury had justified themselves in finding no bill passed human comprehension. The evidence adduced at the trial showed that there must always be grave doubts if she should not have been convicted. However, she had been acquitted by a jury. His Lordship, in unsparing terms, condemned the antiquated methods of the Court House, and said that, only for his being assured that steps were being taken to better things, he fully intended to present a bill of indictment against the County on that account. His Lordship then thanked the Grand Jury and discharged them.

DR. YEOMANS CONTINUES.

Speaking from his medical experience, Dr. Yeomans said that a red line between the burnt and live skin would signify that the burns had been made before death. The witness said he had found no blisters on old Mrs Lloyd, but admitted that the red spots on the face may have been blisters originally. Blisters were a pretty strong indication that the burning was before death. Under certain conditions burns would cause a cracking of the skin, but the witness refused to give the opinion that the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's forehead might have been caused by a burn. It was possible that a wound made an hour or so after death might take on some of the characteristics of a wound made before death. Such a case, however, would be more the exception than the rule. Charring might take place before or after death. Mr. Porter quoted many authorities, with the conclusions of all of whom Dr. Yeomans did not entirely agree. An animated discussion took place between Mr. Porter and the witness in regard to a thin red line around the margin of the dead woman's tongue. Dr. Yeomans refused to admit that such a condition would indicate that the dead woman had inhaled flame. Old Mrs. Lloyd's hands were yellow and shrunken, but such a state of the hands, the witness said, could not, he thought, have been caused by burning.

REPORT OF POST MORTEM.

The Judge then directed that the report of the post mortem, which was conducted by Dr. Boyce, of Belleville, and Dr. Mather, of Tweed, be read. It told of finding the wound on old Mrs Lloyd's forehead, which was reddened, contused and bloodstained. On the opposite side of the head there was a bruise. The burns on the woman's body were described in technical terms. The hands and forearms were normal in appearance. The lungs were spongy in appearance. Some of the arteries of the heart were found filled with clotted blood. Stomach contained nothing but a quantity of yellow, thick mucous.

MORE QUESTIONS FOR DR. YEOMANS.

In answer to Mr. Porter, Dr. Yeomans said the sponginess of the lungs was consistent with the theory of the woman's having inhaled flame. There would have to be other conditions, however, to prove it.

Re-examined by Mr. Meredith, Dr. Yeomans said the red marks on old Mrs. Lloyd's hands did not indicate anything in particular. There was a total absence of evidence of burning on the dead woman's hands. Witness remembered pointing out to the Coroner's jury the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's forehead, and that it had every appearance of being an antemortem wound. If the woman had inhaled flame there would be several indications of it.

DR. MATHER.

Dr. William A. Mather, of Tweed, testified that he, in company with Dr. Boyce, had made a careful post mortem on the body of old Mrs. Lloyd. They found a wound above the left eye, with clotted blood in the wound. It was his opinion that the wound was made before death.

The bruise in connection with the wound went clear through to the bone. On the other side of the head they found, on removing the scalp, a bruise about the size of a cent. The wound over the left eye, the witness thought, was caused by a blunt instrument of some kind. The injury to the other side of the head, might have been caused by striking against something. There was nothing particularly wrong with old Mrs. Lloyd's heart, though it was somewhat weak. The wound on the forehead, he thought, would cause stunning for a time; it might, in exceptional cases, cause death. The old lady's body, from the chest to the navel, was badly burned on both sides. The witness said he did not think the mere combustion of the clothing worn by old Mrs. Lloyd would cause such burns as were found on her body. The red line on the old lady's tongue the witness said, did not indicate anything in particular. He could not give an opinion as to whether the burns were caused before or after death. There were no signs of burns on the dead woman's hands or forearms.

To the Judge and jury Dr. Mather explained certain medical terms used in the post mortem.

CROSS - EXAMINATION.

Cross-examined by, Mr. Porter, Dr. Mather said he did not think old Mrs. Lloyd's head had been washed clean, which accounted for the fact that the post mortem found clotted blood around the wound on the forehead. He did not think the possibility of putrefaction taking place would account for the clotted blood they had found inside the wound. Mr. Porter asked the witness if he would say whether the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's forehead was made before or after death. Dr. Mather said that wounds made almost directly after death had many of the characteristics of wounds made shortly before death. That answer applied to the wound on old Mrs. Lloyd's forehead. Dr. Boyce, in his evidence, had spoken of a red line of demarcation between the burnt and normal skin. Dr. Mather, asked about this, said such a line of demarcation was generally looked on as a sign that burning took place before death. It was not, however, an absolutely certain test. Such a red line might be caused if the burns were made very shortly after death. The wound on old Mrs. Lloyd's forehead went through the skin and the fatty tissue beneath. Any wound on the head bled quite profusely. He would not expect to find such a wound on the head, as that found on old Mrs. Lloyd's, without considerable show of of blood, if the wound were made before death. If the wound were made after death, however, he would not expect to find the clotting found in the wound on old Mrs. Lloyd. It was possible, the witness said to inflict such a wound as that found on old Mrs. Lloyd by pulling her out of the chair after she was dead and allowing her head to strike the arm of the chair. He could, however, account for the clotting found in the present case. If the wound were made directly after death there would be clotting, but less in extent than were the wound made during life. The wound on old Mrs. Lloyd's left eyebrow, the witness said, was, in his opinion, caused by a blow. The bruise on the right side of the head looked as though it were caused by a fall. He still believed that both the wound and the bruise were inflicted before death. He believed this the more when he considered the wound and bruise together. The shock of burning, the witness said, was sometimes sufficient to cause insensibility or death.

MR. PORTER ILLUSTRATES QUESTIONS.

Mr. Porter sat in the burnt rocking chair and illustrated certain questions he asked the witness.

The Doctor said the only way he could account for the woman's hands not being burned was that she must have been deeply unconscious or dead when the burning took place.

The witness and lawyer had a warm conversation about theories, and the witness was not any too ready to subscribe to certain ones advanced by Mr. Porter. Witness verified a former statement made by him, that, something over two years, the late Mrs. Lloyd was a little wild in her talk.

Re-examined—In answer to Mr. Meredith, the witness said that, taking the two wounds on Mrs. Lloyd's head together, he had no doubt they were made before death.

DR. BOYCE.

Dr. Boyce testified that he had made the post mortem with Dr. Mather. His description of the dead woman's injuries corresponded with that given by Dr. Mather. Some of the hairs of old Mrs. Lloyd's head, Dr. Boyce said, were matted with clotted blood, especially from the wound made over old Mrs. Lloyd's left eye. He came to the conclusion that the wounds on Mrs. Llyd's head were made before death, the conditions being such as always existed in ante-mortem wounds, such as everted edges, coagulated blood, bloodstained tissues, and other things. Dr. Boyce did not believe the burns could have been made, by the combustion of a dress, in the length of time stated by the prisoner. He thought some inflammable material, such as coal oil, had been poured over the clothes and set on fire. He did not believe it would be possible for any conscious person to have suffered the burns and not have had her hands burned. The use of coal oil, the witness said, would have caused the skin to become blackened, as had been spoken of by witnesses.

At this point, 12.25, the court adjourned till 1.30 p.m.

AN AGED TRAVELLER.

HE HAS RETURNED TO AUSTRALIA AFTER TEN YEARS' RESIDENCE IN THIS COUNTY.

Letters have recently come to hand announcing the safe arrival in Australia of Mr. Joseph Phelps, who, after some ten years' residence near this city, started last October on the long journey to the land in which he had spent the larger portion of his life. The following article, from a Manitoba paper, will be read with much interest by Mr. Phelps' many friends in this vicinity:

Mr. Joseph Phelps, of Melbourne, Australia, who has been living the last few years at Belleville, Ont., is staying off for a week to see a little of Manitoba, on the way back to his adopted country. Mr. Phelps, who is a hale old gentleman of 85 years, left Ontario between fifty and sixty years ago before ever a railway had been built there, and undertook the then long journey overseas, the water trip alone taking over three months About ten years ago he returned to Ontario thinking to probably spend the remainder of his life there, but the land of his adoption holds such a warm place in his heart that he is returning once more to Australia.

Mr. Phelps, who has a remarkably bright and active intellect for a man of his advanced years, can relate many interesting reminiscences of Canada's early days—the rebellion of '37 and the conditions that prevailed then, especially; no less interesting are his tales of the gold rush to Australia and adventures of the early mining days, the gradual opening up of the country and the vicissitudes of mining life.

Although having so interesting a past history, which is full of incident, he does not live in it, and manifests as keen an interest in present day affairs as any young man could do.

THE DATE FOR EASTER.

Thirty days hath September,
Every person can remember;
But to know when Easter's come
Puzzles even scholars some.

When March the twenty-first is past,
Just watch the silvery moon,
And when you see it full and round,
Know Easter'll be here soon.

After the moon has reached its full,
Then Easter will be here
The very Sunday after
In each and every year.

And if it hap on Sunday
The moon should reach its height,
The Sunday following this event
Will be the Easter bright.

Lord Minto has been making some plain statements to the Council in India. He declines to believe that Russia is no longer a factor to be reckoned with on the Indian frontier. The cost of the army, he says, is the premium for the insurance of India. He supports Lord Kitchener.

It has now been figured out that in 200,000 years nearly the whole Northern Hemisphere will be covered with ice which will fill all the valleys, and overtop all the mountains, but you needn't cheer up on the theory that this is going to scare the icemen enough to make him cut any rates this summer.

In the mileage of railways based on population, Canada leads the world, says The Engineering Journal of Canada. Canada has one mile of railway to every 290 people; the United States, one mile to 378 people; France one mile to 1,317 people; Germany, one mile to 1,850 people; Russia, one mile to 3,400 people.

A western paper refers to "the late Sir Richard Cartwright." The person meant is the economist of a dozen years ago, the lover of free trade as it is in England, the denouncer of protection and its works, the foe of jobbery, the fierce critic of nepotism, the "big policeman" who was to keep the Quebec Frenchmen's hands out of the "shreds and patches" of the Dominion where they should be. His pensioned spook may be seen now and again in the Senate in the attitude of a sleeping man.

Glandular Swellings.

Here is a remedy for goiter and glandular swellings: Glycerinated iodine lotion—iodide of potassium, two drams; distilled water, one pint; glycerin (pure), one ounce. Dissolve the iodide in the water, then add the glycerin. Apply with antiseptic gauze or fine linen.

On His Dignity.

Mr. Q. Ponze—No, sir; my daughter would starve if she married you. Mr. Nocoyne—Oh, well, if you're the sort of man that would let your own daughter starve I've no desire to become a relative of yours. I withdraw my request, sir.

Longing For a Soaker.

Old Parliamentary Fines.

It is costly to be a member of the British parliament, but some ancient expenses are spared the modern member. An order dated 1640 runs thus, "Those who go out of the house in a confused manner to forfeit 10 shillings." Others enact that "all the members that come after 8 (the house met at 8 o'clock in the morning then) to pay 1 shilling, and those who do not come the whole day to pay 5 shillings, those who do not come to prayers to pay 1 shilling, such members as come after 9 o'clock to pay 1 shilling to the poor," etc. Still more expensive was it for members to go out of town without permission. In 1664 a penalty of £10 was imposed upon every knight and of £5 upon every citizen who should make default in attending the house, and a penalty of £40 upon every member was shall desert the service of the house for the space of three days together (not having had leave granted him by the house), and he shall be sent for in custody and committed to the Tower." Week enders had a bad time in 1664.

Why Fruits Turn Red.

Fruits turn red when they ripen because of a wise provision of Mother Nature. It makes the fruit conspicuous to birds and other animals, and thus secures the dispersion of the seed. If the fruit were of the same color as the leaves it might easily be passed over. When the fruit or seed is inconspicuous, through either the want of color or the small size, dispersal is effected without the aid of animals, as in the case of the dandelion, whose seed is carried about by the wind, or of the balsam, the seed of which is ejected by a sort of spring. The colored fruits, such as the grape and the cherry, are furnished with succulent coats, which provide food to birds, who in their impatience often swallow the seeds or stones, which may pass through the animal's body without change. Seeds may thus be conveyed not only for considerable distances on land, but also from continents to oceanic islands, which may in this way acquire a new vegetation.

Some London Clubs.

London has many curious clubs, such as the Utopians, whose motto is "Serve God and be merry," and the Froth Blowers, whose members are said to be bound to curse and swear every time they enter the club. There are also many unregistered clubs which have no headquarters and take out no licenses, and there are also many clubs whose members are manifestly drawn together by some common bond of sympathy. Among these the London Daily Express enumerates the following:

The Boz club (admirers of Charles Dickens).

The '05 club (amicability and the arts).

The Royalists (guillotines and diamonds).

The Castaways' club (resigned naval officers).

The Lost Legion (for empire pioneers).

The Ways of Madeira.

The people of Madeira are as harmless as their country. The stranger meets with no snakes and need not fear mosquitoes; neither has he to take any precautions against being molested in the most out of the way parts. Everywhere civility, politeness and pleasant faces will greet him. The prices asked are grotesque, often five times what will be finally accepted. Some find the absence of fixed prices abroad a great nuisance, but the bargaining in Madeira is so good humored and can be made so amusing that the change of custom in this respect is rather refreshing.

A Picturesque Wedding.

An interesting wedding recently took place in England. The bridegroom was a fireman, and accordingly the members of the local fire brigade attended the wedding. They formed up outside the church and made an arch with their axes, under which the bride and bridegroom walked. Then the firemen drew the happy couple home in a carriage, blowing their whistles as they went through the streets.

German Silver.

One of the oddities of nomenclature is that the combination of metals known as German silver contains no silver in its composition and is of Chinese and not of German origin. It was introduced into Europe by the Germans, and for some time it was not generally known that they had simply borrowed it from the Chinese.

BRITISH PETROLEUM.

A Little Known Industry—60 to 80 Million Gallons Produced Yearly in Scotland—Paraffin Distillation.

The launch of the H. M. S. Dreadnought at Portsmouth by the King recently not only adds a fighting factor of extraordinary power to the navy, but marks a new departure in other respects. She will be the first turbine-driven battleship in the navy, and is provided with combination furnaces in which coal and shale oil or crue petroleum will be used in combination. A system of jets has been introduced so that the crude oil can be sprayed on to the live coal in the furnaces, thereby largely increasing the heat produced.

The shale oil or crude petroleum is of a dark greenish color of the consistency of treacle, and is used in its crude state on account of the large proportion of carbon it contains.

American and Russian oilfields loom so prominently in the public eyes, says Lloyd's Weekly, that few people are aware that from 60 to 80 millions of gallons are produced yearly in Scotland, constituting a home industry which would prove of inestimable value in any possible naval battles of the future.

Although paraffin was obtained by Laurent in 1830 by the distillation of bituminous shale, and in 1835 by Dumas from coal tar, the shale oil and associated industries owe their origin to Mr. James Young. Paraffin candles, wax matches, and all articles in which paraffin wax enters into the composition, own their existence indirectly to him.

Born in 1811 of humble parents, Mr. Young was apprenticed to his father, a cabinet maker, in Glasgow. A course of evening lectures on chemistry, under Prof. Graham, made him so proficient that he was soon appointed demonstrator and assistant to the professor. It was while he was acting as chemist at some chemical works in Manchester that Dr. Lyon Playfair attracted his attention to a small stream of oil which oozed from the roof of some collieries at Alfreton, Derbyshire, which belonged to Playfair's brother-in-law. Having failed to interest anyone else in his schemes, Young started in 1848 with an old fellow student named Meldrum to exploit this crude petroleum. But being alive to the fact that the floating supply might easily be exhausted, he experimented with a view to ascertaining its most prolific source. Various sorts of English coal were tried with varying results, but at last a liquid containing solid paraffin was obtained from Cannel coal. In 1850 Young was shown a piece of Boghead coal, and it proved to be so rich in mineral oil that every variety of Scotch coal obtainable was tried.

Having succeeded by artificial means in doing what nature had done—viz., obtain the oil from bituminous coals by the application of gentle heat, Young made it the ground of his celebrated patent for obtaining an oil containing paraffin from bituminous coals by slow distillation.

Shale came into prominence for this purpose in a curious way, but the discoverer of its properties, a miner, named Douglas, through some mistaken idea, preferred not to talk of his discovery. The peculiar nature of "scaly blaes," or shale, a mineral deposit generally found both above and beneath a seam of coal, attracted his attention, and filling a clay tobacco pipe with little pieces he stopped the bowl with clay and thrust it into a fire.

Soon gas was generated, and then a thick black fluid slowly dropped from the stem. This black "juice" contained paraffin, but little use was made of the knowledge until 1852. While prospecting for coal at Broxburn, in Scotland, in that year, such large quantities of shale were found that it was determined to put it to some use; experiments were made, with such success that the future use of shale in the petroleum industry was assured.

In 1887 borings at Broxburn brought to the surface a thick fluid oil from a depth of 600 feet, but as paraffin solidifies at a temperature of 61 deg. Farenheit it was not found practicable to continue pumping operations. Mining was resorted to, and the shale subjected to distillation. Generally speaking the shale is smashed by a "stamp" and placed in a retort, which is subjected to gentle heat; the result, crude shale oil, is then treated for the extraction of the paraffin wax—which substance was regarded as an encumberance in the early days of the industry—and the production of purified oil.

The despised wax has since found a ready market, becoming a valuable asset in various industries.

His Property In Scotland.

Montagu Brown was full of military ardor, and he was endeavoring to enlist in the London Scottish volunteers. Of course he was asked if he were a Scotchman, according to London Answers.

"No, not much," he replied.

"Parents Scotch?" asked the staff sergeant.

"No. Bethnal Green," said Montagu.

"Well, unless you have some connection with Scotland you can't join," he was told. And he pondered for a moment.

"I've got some property in Scotland."

"Ah, that will be all right," said the sergeant and proceeded to enlist him.

Before he left, however, the sergeant turned to him.

"Would you mind informing me in what part of Scotland your property is situated?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," said the recruit. "I've got a football jersey in the Perth dye works!"

Funny Blunders.

This is from The London Times: "There was a crowd of people on Slough station to greet Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman as he passed through the window of a railway carriage with a number of enthusiastic Liberals gathered there."

What the Oxford orator wished to say, was this: "The Liberals have come in on a flowing tide." Unfortunately, however, he mixed his vowels and told his hearers that "the Liberals have come in on a flying toad."

A reporter wrote of the accident as follows: "Through his horse being frightened by a passing motor car Mr. —— was thrown out of his trap and severely injured, the motorist rendering every assistance."

WHITE SAPPHIRES

By POMONA PENRIN

Copyright, 1905, by McClure, Phillips & Co.

I waited until Gabrielle's little left hand lay upon the hammock's edge, temptingly near, and then I slipped on the hoop of pearls. We had been engaged almost two months, but it had been a ringless engagement, because Gabrielle said that a ring was extravagant.

"John," she cried now, "why—oh, you shouldn't!"

"But I should," I persisted. "Besides, I doubt if betrothals are legal without rings."

"I love pearls," said Gabrielle, but there was a little pucker in her forehead that nature had set there to warn me—and other men, alas—when she was not quite pleased. I watched her in secret alarm. In spite of her protests, then, she would have preferred a diamond.

"No, I wouldn't," she said positively when I said so. "Really, I wouldn't. But I was wondering"—

"Wondering what?" demanded I, palpitating.

"Everybody will have to know now," the truth came. "Everybody will see it on my finger."

"Well," said I in relief, "that's what I want."

"Not right away—you know we said not right away," said Gabrielle hastily.

I looked away through the vines of the veranda and glowered at all the sunny world. Gabrielle's "not right away" was disquietingly elastic. She had been using that phrase for two months.

"I'll tell you," she solved the matter brightly, "when we go to places I won't wear it on this finger—for a little while, you know, John. I'll just wear it on this finger—for us."

Gabrielle was never so alluring, but I hardened my heart.

"So," I said, without looking at her, "the reason that you said a ring was an extravagance was because you did not want Mr. Algernon Phelps and the rest of them to know. I hadn't thought of that."

"Certainly it wasn't," flashed Gabrielle. "You are insanely suspicious, John. Algernon Phelps!" she finished. "He is quite old enough to be my father."

"He isn't old enough not to give you presents," said I, "which you have no right to accept."

Gabrielle looked at me in amazement. Well she might, for in those two months, despite the fact that I had bitterly resented the continual presence of big, devoted Mr. Algernon Phelps at their house, I had resolutely concealed it.

"John," she cried, "how ridiculous! He is mother's friend."

"And in love with you," I grimly supplemented.

Gabrielle laughed—a ringing, adorable little laugh that made me wish our engagement had never come between us. We were perfectly happy before we were engaged.

"That's very funny," said Gabrielle frankly. "He has given me presents since I was six. However, that isn't the point. I'll wear the ring on the right finger—I mean on the right left finger—really I will, dear. I'll wear it to the Holdons' tonight."

"Will you, sweetheart?" said I, pacified, "and will you want to, Gabrielle?"

"Of course I want to wear it with all my heart," she said simply.

She spread her two little hands on her blue muslin gown and looked at them, and then I caught sight of the other ring. She wore on her right hand a magnificently carved bit of gold, set with three exquisite white sapphires.

"Gabrielle!" I cried. "Where"—

She smiled at me serenely without moving her hands.

"Mr. Phelps bought it this morning," she said. "I've been waiting for you to notice it."

I sank to the depths of despair. It was not only that the ring was far more beautiful than the little circlet of pearls that I had selected, but it had been brought to her by that man—the great, devoted creature whom I liked in spite of his fondness for Gabrielle—on the very day that we had come into possession of our engagement ring.

"Isn't it beautiful?" Gabrielle appealed to me sweetly.

"It is," said I shortly.

Gabrielle looked first at one ring and then at the other, with charming partiality.

"Two new rings," she said musingly. "Won't the girls envy me! What a pity that I will have to wear gloves at the Holdons' tonight!"

"Gabrielle!" I cried. "Surely you will never wear both rings today of all days?"

"Why not?" Gabrielle wanted to know wonderingly. "Oh, don't be stupid!" she cried prettily. "Why, what can you care for his ring, John? You might as well object to my wearing my baby locket that he gave me when I was in pigtails. It's a beautiful ring—not nearly so beautiful as ours, but still beautiful, and I want to wear them both."

Really this was going too far. That "presents since I was six" matter could not much longer be tolerated. No man appears at a house morning, afternoon and evening, as Mr. Algernon Phelps appeared at the house of Gabrielle, in exactly the spirit in which he came bearing presents to her when she was six. And this final white sapphire indignity was not to be borne.

"Gabrielle," I said, in what I believed to be my sternest though most reasonable tone, "I cannot believe that you will be guilty of the—the bad taste of wearing both those rings tonight, and I particularly wish you not to do so."

Gabrielle thought for a moment, and then she laughed, and then her pretty lips set themselves in an unmistakable line, and her eyes met mine fairly.

"John," she said, "I won't let you be so stupid. Don't you see—you dear, silly thing?" She laughed most heartlessly. "I wouldn't wear anybody else's ring with yours—but his."

As if that was extenuation. Matters were now twice as bad. I rose, it being very nearly dinner time anyway. I looked down at Gabrielle.

"That is just it," said I, with formality. "He is the exception to everything. I am wretched over this man's continual presence here, Gabrielle, and I ask you not to wear his ring tonight with mine. Leave one or the other at home, please—whichever you prefer."

As I stalked down the veranda steps I carried with me a picture of Gabrielle's bewitching, petulant face looking up at me in hurt surprise.

"It's the dearest ring, John," she called penitently, "the pearl one. Ours. Thank you, dear."

Then as I turned ready to take her in my arms in the friendly screen of the vines she rose and came to the steps, her little flowery blue gown trailing.

"But I shall wear them both tonight, Mr. John Baden," she said, with pretty mischief. "And you shall apologize too."

"Never," said I, with dignity, and came almost face to face with Gabrielle's mother idling up from the garden, looking a picture in white.

"What big, long words he uses!" cried Gabrielle's mother gayly.

"Mrs. Jocelyn," said I, "if Gabrielle becomes unmanageable will you marry me?"

Mrs. Jocelyn has been a widow for years.

"What commendable thrift for a rainy day!" she said, smiling.

For some reason the question of the white sapphire took on a significance out of all proportion. As I drove to Gabrielle's that evening our love, our future, even her adorableness, which I was never tired of reviewing, were of less moment to me than whether or not she would disregard my wishes about the ring. It seemed to me "one of those straws which tell the wind which way to blow." But I remembered with comfort that Gabrielle had an enchanting habit of obstinacy up to the moment of withdrawal in other people's favor. So as I sat opposite her and her mother on the way to the Holdons' I became comfortably, even triumphantly, sure that there were no white sapphires in the carriage.

When we went down to supper at midnight Mr. Algernon Phelps joined us with his unbearable manner of being wanted where, to be sure, he was wanted by every one but me. Was he, I wondered savagely, after we were married to persist in these visits and presents on the strength of "when Gabrielle was six?" Then I watched Gabrielle feverishly while she drew off the fingers of her gloves and tucked them daintily and with pretty deliberation in her long, loose glove wrists.

The left hand first, and there was my modest band of pearls suiting her delicate little hand to perfection. Then the right hand, and there blazed the white sapphires.

I looked away miserably—somewhere, anywhere. When I came to analyze it I did not care a continental about Mr. Algernon Phelps' white sapphires. I cared only that Gabrielle had not cared to please me.

"And the third one," Gabrielle was saying, "is going to be that new poppy figure. I've seen the favors for that. They are—why, John, what is it?"

"Nothing," said I miserably. She had not even done it to tease me purposely! There would have been some balm of bittersweet in that. My wishes had been simply neglected and forgotten. She did not even trouble to triumph in having carried out her threat.

"Aren't you having a good time?" murmured Gabrielle anxiously.

Really, this was almost obtuse. For answer I stole one glance down at that little right hand and then buried my glances furiously in my salad.

"Oh!" Gabrielle had a fascinating habit of starting a little laugh and then thinking better of it. She did this now and stopped to say in the softest little voice:

"You think that I don't love you?"

"You know it," said I, morbidly.

"I do"—still more softly. This would have been heaven had it not been for that stupid ring.

"I love you so much," she went one, "that it hurts me to have a secret from you. But I have had to—until tonight."

"With Mr. Phelps?" I wanted to know, grimly. He was talking with Mrs. Jocelyn and heard nothing.

"Yes," said Gabrielle, "and with some one else."

Not until I followed her glance did my eye fall upon the glittering little hand of Gabrielle's mother. And on the third finger of her left hand was an exquisite ring of white sapphires and diamonds.

Gabrielle was watching me.

"You dear," she murmured, "haven't you guessed? Mr. Phelps brought her the ring today, and he gave me mine as a peace offering."

"They—you—they?" I wanted to know.

"They didn't want both engagements announced at once," said Gabrielle. "That is why I didn't want to wear the pearls. But I don't care really, John."

I looked over at pretty little Mrs. Jocelyn sitting contentedly beside Mr. Algernon Phelps and then down at Gabrielle, who was laughing at me.

"Neither do I care," I said rapturously.

THE STANDARD YARD.

That In Use In Great Britain and the United States.

The yard is the British and American standard of length. Down to 1824 the original standard of Britain, from which ours was copied, was a rod, which had been deposited in the court of exchequer, London, in the time of Queen Elizabeth. In those days all measures intended for general use were taken to the court of exchequer to be examined by the proper officer. That official took the proposed measure and placed it parallel with the standard and if found correct placed certain marks of identification upon it. By an act of parliament in 1824 the old Elizabethan standard was superseded by another, which had been constructed under the directions of the Royal society sixty-four years previous. This act provided that "the straight line of distance between the centers of two points in the gold studs in the brass rod now in the custody of the clerk of the house of commons shall be the genuine standard of the yard measure in Great Britain." The act further provided that the measurements of the rod must be made when the temperature of the brass was at 62 degrees F.

The standard was destroyed by fire in 1834, and the commission appointed to replace it made the yard measure now in use. The new standard was deposited in the house of parliament in 1855, and authenticated copies of it are in the possession of our government officials at Washington.

THE DEAD SEA.

Work of the Salt Divers In This Desolate Waste.

The awful desolation of the Dead sea, which lies nearly 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, is broken here and there by the salt divers, whose work is probably as ancient as the human race itself.

From remotest antiquity the salt of the Dead sea has been collected and taken to the Jerusalem market, where it is used for curing hides and for domestic purposes. Dead sea water contains over 25 per cent of solid substances, of which 7 per cent is chloride of sodium, or common salt.

The Dead sea contains no living creature. Sea fish put into its waters speedily die. Not a single boat navigates its strange waters, nor is there any sign of life, save the isolated parties of salt divers, who scrape and slowly amass their glistening heaps of crystal near the mouth of the Jordan.

When a sufficient cargo is made ready a long string of camels crosses the desert, and the salt is loaded up into panniers, or "shwerries," and taken into Jerusalem, where it finds a ready market.

Salt, as is well known, has been used as currency from time immemorial, just as bricks of tea are used today in central Asia, especially in the borderland of China and Siberia.

ARTIFICIAL BALDNESS.

The Ancient and Strange Custom of Shaving the Head.

A historical inquiry into the origin of the custom of shaving the head, which is practiced in several countries, would be interesting.

It was not until the fifth century that in Europe priests began to shave their crowns. The Roman clergy then adopted the circular method and shaved that small round spot on the top of the head which is known as the tonsure. In Scotland, however, the monks shaved the whole of the fore part of the head from ear to ear.

In the Andaman islands every man shaves his head, or, rather, gets his wife to shave it for him. Many other orientals also get baldheaded.

As for the Chinaman, his method of shaving is exactly opposed to that of the Roman monk. He shaves all but a round patch, the hair of which grows long and forms the pigtail.

When the difficulty of shaving the head is borne in mind the true strangeness of the custom becomes doubly apparent. It is hard to see the advantage of it, yet in one form or another and at one time or other it has been practiced in nearly every country.

Cruel Elephant Hunters.

A correspondent of the London Times writes of elephant hunting in Africa: "The most deadly method of killing elephants, and that most frequently employed by the natives of east Africa, is the pit, sufficiently deep—roughly twenty feet—long and wide to engulf and hold an elephant. After a period of frantic struggling, hunger and exhaustion the wretched animal is done to death by native spears. If the size and powers of the animal are remembered it is difficult to imagine a more revolting, brutal picture of torture, but this is the common practice of the natives of the country and is being enacted daily throughout British territory.

Unlucky.

There is an ancient jest in Paris which originated with a waiter. A guest had ordered a dozen oysters.

"Only one dozen?" asked the waiter.

"Yes, that will be enough."

"You are not superstitious, then," said the waiter with a curious smile.

"Why?"

"Because you are not afraid of being thirteen at table."

FERROL

This is a successful combination of the well known valuable remedies, Cod Liver Oil, Iron and Phosphorous. The formula is no secret and our analysis showed the presence and amount of constituents as described. The preparation is a good one and of distinct therapeutic value. The association of an easily assimilable oil, in a fine state of division with a phosphatic salt of iron which does not disturb the digestive functions and which is easily tolerated, determines its success as a food and tonic in wasting diseases. —Copied from London Lancet.

What the London Lancet recommends as a food and a tonic in all wasting diseases must have a very special quality.

No higher endorsation is possible. The results following the use of FERROL for the past ten years have proved that this endorsation is well deserved.

Cheap Courting.

There lived in the town of Epping, N. H., an old man who was noted for his penuriousness. One winter the schoolteacher boarded at his house, and she had a beau who came once a week to spend the evening with her. This, of course, necessitated heating and lighting the parlor.

Nothing was said about this item of expense at the end of the term when the teacher paid her board bill, but the next day, happening to meet the young man on the street, the old man accosted him and, after a few preliminaries about the weather, remarked: "You know we've been to some little extra expense this winter running that fire in the parlor for you and teacher. I didn't say anything to her, but I thought perhaps you'd be willing to make it right."

"Why, yes," replied the young man. "I am willing to pay anything reasonable, of course. How much do you think you ought to have?"

"Waal," drawled out Mr. B., "I guess 'bout 10 cents will do."

Uniforms to Scare the Enemy.

Red uniforms were first adopted by the Emperor Valerius Maximus in order that the Roman soldiers might not be frightened by the sight of their own blood. To this day the children of England are told that this is the reason why French troops wear red trousers, and French children are taught the same notion respecting the red coats of the British. The legionaries of ancient Rome wore the skins of bears on the field of battle to make them look fierce. For the same reason they put figures of frightful beasts on their shields and helmets. From this old custom spring modern crests and armorial bearings. The idea of scaring the enemy by such devices has been perpetuated up to quite recent times. Tall bearskin hats were originally adopted to make them look taller by the French cuirassiers, each of whom carried a handful of grenades for scattering among the ranks of their foe.

Monkeys and Cocoanuts.

"The old story about monkeys climbing up cocoanut trees and firing nuts down on people that pass under them, as related in the old fashioned story books, is exploded by the facts," remarked a man who has been in South America. "The fact is that cocoanuts are never plucked off the trees. They are fastened on by a fiber that would require the strength of a Hercules to break, and no monkey was ever born in the world that could pluck one of them. I have read many stories about monkeys climbing these trees, but after five years' experience as a resident of Porto Cortes, Honduras, during which time my business has taken me out in the forests, I have never seen a monkey attempt to climb a cocoanut tree. They have no limbs, only a small bunch of foliage on the top, and each tree bears from eight to ten nuts."

A Peculiar City.

A traveler's tale has it that Nanghanu, a Siamese city, home of the royal family, is a sort of municipal harem. Its population is composed of women and children alone. It is in the center of Bangkok, has high walls around it, and in its population of 9,000 there is not a single man, though the king occasionally pays a visit. There are shops, markets, temples, theaters, streets and avenues, parks, lakes, trees and flower gardens, a hall of justice, judges, executioner, police, generals and soldiers, all the positions, official and otherwise, being filled by women. The only man in all Siam who can enter this city is the king.

The First Sapphire.

There is an Indian legend that Brahma, the creator, once committed a sin that he might know the torments of remorse and thus be able to sympathize with mortals. But the moment he had committed it he began repeating the mantras, or prayers of purification, and in his grief dropped on the earth a tear, the hottest that ever fell from an eye, and from it was formed the first sapphire.

Wondrous Evolution.

"In the slow evolution of the race," mused the elephant, looking with languid interest at the throng of curious gazers that stood on the outside of the ropes and fed him with cakes, peanuts and candy, "how many millions of years it must require to evolve from the shapeless and rudimentary projection on the face of the creature called man the full and perfect proboscis!"

The Dardanelles.

The Dardanelles is celebrated in ancient history on account of Xerxes and Alexander having crossed it, the former in 480 B. C. to enter Europe and the latter in 334 B. C. to enter Asia. At the point where Alexander crossed young Leander nightly swam the Hellespont to visit Hero—a feat performed in modern times by Lord Byron.

Making It Worse.

"What silly verses that woman is reciting!"

"I wrote them, sir!"

"Ah—oh, yes—to be sure—clever lines, but horribly delivered, don't you know. Woman must be a fool to bungle 'em so. Who is she?"

"My wife, sir!"

Got What He Wanted.

Auctioneer—Going! Going! Gone! Here, sir, it's yours. Great bargain, sir. The frame alone is worth the price. Connoisseur (ripping out the picture)—The frame is what I wanted.

You cannot find an instance of any man who is permitted to lay out his own time contriving not to have tedious hours.—Johnson.

The Water Pitcher.

The following simple method of keeping ice water in a common pitcher is worth knowing: Put a layer of cotton batting between two sheets of wrapping paper three inches higher than the pitcher. Fasten the ends of the paper and batting together, forming a circle. Paste a cover over one end of the batting and paper. This cover, when over a pitcher, must come close to the stand and so exclude the air, and ice will keep a long time. This paper cover will be found of great service in a sickroom for both milk and water pitchers.

A MERE COWBOY

By HONORE WILLSIE

Copyright, 1905, by Beatrix Reade

To Edith's eastern eyes the ranch was a most fascinating place. The wide, rolling stretches of plain, flat and brown under the autumn skies; the lean cottonwoods, whose scant shade was a mere joke, and the ranch house itself, roomy, low and ugly, were all beautiful in her eyes.

If you had told Edith that this strange fascination was due to the undeniable charms of a certain tall cowboy who had recently been made foreman of her brother's ranch she would have tossed her pretty head at you and denied your insinuations scornfully.

"What," she had exclaimed when her sister-in-law had slyly remarked on the regularity of Edith's morning rides under the foreman's tutelage—"what! I have more than an ordinary interest, founded on curiosity, for a cowboy! Why, Alice, you forget where I was born and bred."

At this pretty Mrs. Alcott had laughed merrily.

"'Born and bred,'" she had repeated. "My dear child, when you come west you must forget that you were born and bred. I did so five years ago. The fact that you are a college girl won't help you half so much as the fact that you are unlearning your eastern method of saddle riding. These westerners don't give a rap concerning your parents or your grandparents. Their interests are all in the present, not the past. As Jimmy says, 'One man is as good as another here and a heap better.' So leave off your condescending airs with Harry Esterly. They are quite lost on him, I assure you."

Edith listened in silence to Mrs. Alcott and watched her as she moved quietly about the living room of the ranch house, which was as cozy and homelike as the exterior was dreary; then she picked up her riding whip, pulled the latch of her sombrero under her chin and with a disdainful little sniff walked out toward the corral, where Harry Esterly awaited her.

Harry watched her keenly as she strolled slowly toward him.

"Gad," he said to himself, "she's well put up!"

And she was—erect and lithe as a young Indian, with hair that shone bronze in the sun, with skin that glowed with health after the morning tub, and with an uptilt to her beautiful head that would well give a thrill of pride to any man on whom she bestowed her friendship.

"Is that Josephine?" she called to Harry as she drew within hailing distance.

"Yes, that's Josephine," answered Harry, patting the smaller horse. "Isn't she a beauty?"

"She is indeed," said the girl, smoothing the soft nose of the pretty mare. "Are you sure she isn't part broncho? Brother Jim says that if a horse has ever so little a drop of broncho blood in him, ever so far back, he's bound to buck at least once in his life. And I don't want to be the one to discover that one drop!"

Harry shook his head. "Well, of course," he said, "it's hard to pick up a horse around here that you can vouch for. But really, Miss Alcott, I think Josephine is as safe as a cradle."

Edith hung her whip on the saddle pommel and, motioning away Harry's offered hand, swung herself into the saddle.

"This morning," he said, "I'm going to take you to my particular pet spot. It's only half an hour's ride from here."

Out they raced across the dusty plain, the horses taking the barbed wire fences as lightly as birds. They drew rein on a lonely little hillock, the only break in the level of the plain for miles around.

"Look," said Harry. "See how one side is scooped out. Some Indian made himself a shelter here some time from a dust storm. And now stand here on top for a moment and you will see why I like this place."

Edith looked. The slight eminence gave a surprising sweep of view—the far ranch house, with the distant grazing herds, the blue line of haze that marked the mountains and, farther still, the brown of the plain, merging into the blue of the desert. Toward the desert Harry looked apprehensively.

"Miss Edith," he said, "I believe that we'll have a dust storm here in an hour or so. The air felt like it this morning, with this scorching wind, and now I can see it gathering out there on the desert. I wonder if you would be willing to ride in to the ranch alone while I ride out to speak to Mr. Alcott?"

Edith blushed a little. "Why, yes, of course I'll go, but—but I wish you would let me ride your horse back, Mr. Esterly. I'm so afraid Josephine will buck."

"Why, she's as safe as a church. And Billy here used to buck like a jack rabbit. Of course, he's all right now, though."

"Please!" pleaded the girl.

Harry jumped from his horse and helped Edith from the saddle.

"Let me change saddles quickly," he said. "We've no time to waste." And in a few minutes Edith was cantering swiftly toward the ranch house, while Harry rode out toward the distant herd.

Half an hour after Edith reached the house the dust storm was upon them. Whirlpools of dust were hurled upon the house by a howling wind that shook the very rafters.

Hour after hour of intense dry heat, combined with the screeching of the wind, rasped the nerves almost to the breaking point. Edith strolled restlessly from room to room, watching the dust sift in through the closed window and under the doors. Finally she approached Mr. Alcott, who had come in just after the storm broke.

"Has Mr. Esterly come in?" she asked. "Would you mind looking, Jimmy?"

Mr. Alcott sighed patiently and went out into the storm. In a few minutes he returned, looking a little anxious.

"He's not there," he said. "He told me he'd reach here by the time the storm broke. It's letting up a little, and I'll send some of the men out soon, though nothing could have happened to an old timer like Harry."

Edith said nothing, but as the wind lessened she stole softly from the room and out toward the stables. Dusk was just beginning to deepen as she rode swiftly out toward the stopping place of the morning.

"If he got caught he made for that little shelter, I know," she said to herself. "But I know that that Josephine has done something, even if he is a cowboy, and it's all my fault."

She drew rein by the hillock. Back in its shadows sat Harry, pale, but calmly smoking, until he saw the startled eyes of the girl. Edith gave him no time for questions.

"Oh," she moaned, "I knew Josephine would do something!"

Harry glanced in an embarrassed way at his ankle, about which he had awkwardly tied a handkerchief.

"All my own carelessness," he said. "I stood in the saddle to look for the herd and if the blamed little imp didn't buck without a word of warning and threw me. I'll never hear the end of this at the ranch. First horse that's thrown me in five years. They'll find us in a little while. They know this place."

But Edith could not see the humor of the situation.

"I was a selfish, cruel thing," she moaned. "Oh, you poor, poor boy!"

Harry looked at her closely. Then he leaned forward and quietly took possession of her hand.

"Edith," he said softly, "Edith, do you care?"

Edith looked out into the dusk. "A cowboy," she thought, "just a plain cowboy! What would they say?" Then with a deep blush she looked into his face. "Yes," she half whispered, "I'm afraid I do. You see, I always said I'd never marry any but a college man."

"Is that so?" chuckled Harry. "Well, you're keeping your vow. I have a sheepskin kicking around in my stuff somewhere."

"And you never told me!" Edith exclaimed.

Harry looked up in surprise. "Gee," he said, "I'd forgotten all about it."

And he sighed in absolute content as he felt Edith's face against his coat sleeve.

Storms on the Sun.

The velocity with which solar storms move is very great, and they sometimes extend over a space several times as large as the whole of the earth's surface. In common parlance they are called "sun spots," but as they are known to have a rotary motion exactly similar to terrestrial cyclones they may be regarded as true solar storms. It has been computed by eminent astronomers that these sun storms move with the astonishing velocity of 120 miles per second, and we can best form an adequate conception of what the force of such a storm must be by comparing it to an earth storm moving at 100 miles an hour, which is indeed a terrible hurricane. Carlington and Hodgson, the English astronomers, described a sun storm which traveled 35,000 miles in five minutes, and in 1871 Professor Young of Cincinnati witnessed one that traveled 166 miles per second for forty-five minutes and constantly threw sheets of flame and fiery matter to a height of not less than 200,000 miles above the sun's disturbed surface!

The Dress of the Highlanders.

The highland dress, without a rival in picturesqueness, unique in its longevity and remarkable for the manner in which it has been employed to distinguish the different families or clans of one race, appears to be a survival of the ordinary Roman dress and a relic of Caesar's invasion of Britain. From the time when it was first adopted and while fashion has been busy with changes in other parts of the world the costume seems to have undergone little modification. That this dress should have been selected and adhered to as the national garb is due to its undeniable utility. Wrapped in his plaid, the highlander was indifferent alike to soaking mist and violent storm; he was prepared to pass the night in defiance of the most inclement weather, while the loose undergarment would have been difficult to improve upon when wading mountain torrents or climbing the steep sides of ravine and glen.

Lincoln and Hay.

From a somewhat careful study of the literary characteristics of Abraham Lincoln and John Hay, as well as of their respective natural dispositions, Leslie's Weekly is led to remark the likeness between these two celebrated men. They were both humorously inclined, Lincoln in his somewhat homely way, Hay in his more cultured style. Each was able to clothe his ideas—always notably permeated with charity—in clear, simple, logical English. On special occasions each rose to heights of classical expression in voicing great thoughts. One may almost conclude that Hay was the perfected type of Lincoln's cruder personality and that as a disciple of his great leader, with whom he was so closely associated in his younger formative days, he had consciously or unconsciously imbibed not only his master's style, but his spirit as well.

His Magic Housekeeper

By BELLE MANIATES

Copyright, 1905, by K. G. Whitehead

A week from the day on which the bells in the old church tower tolled the death of the parents of John Lester his spacious farmhouse burned to the ground. He built a temporary home out of sight of the charred ruins of the old home. In the heart of the woods near the bank of the river that ran swift and deep in boundary to his farm he took up his abode. He kept his hearth in hermit fashion, but he was not as proficient in housekeeping duties as in the tilling of his soil, and it was now the season of planting time.

Stories most distressing to the kindly country folk were told of his making a clean sweep occasionally through his house, the accumulations landing on the back door step or vanishing through cracks of the floor; also of a weekly washing of dishes and a pork and potato diet.

They hospitably opened their doors and their services to the sole survivor of the Lester household, but he had a way of drawing about himself the magic circle which no one ventured to cross.

He was too busy through the day and too tired at night to feel lonely. There was a supreme reason why John preferred his solitary life.

One night when he came home from the fields he paused on his threshold and stared in amazement at the transformation wrought. His camping out place had become a cozy little home. Everything, from the sanded floor to the tinware on the pine table, was as spotlessly clean and white as soap and water could make it. At the windows were dainty muslin curtains. The table, spread with a snowy white cloth, was set for his supper. A loaf of homemade bread and a flower stamped pat of golden butter added their touch of domesticity.

In a haze of wonder John mechanically filled the kettle, lighted the fire and prepared his evening meal. Then he went into the adjoining room. This, too, had been touched with a magic wand and arranged in as orderly a fashion as a hospital ward—the windows curtained in muslin, the bed covered with a spread and a little silk lined workbasket adorned the table.

When he sat down to supper he was scarcely conscious of what he ate. In kaleidoscopic procession there passed through his recollection his mother's friends and neighbors; but, though the house cleaning and the bread and butter might suggest the buxom matrons of his acquaintance, it was some way borne in upon his slow working brain that the other things were the handiwork of a maiden. Even if the white curtains could be possibly charged up to one of the simple farm wives, there was still that workbasket lined in delicate blue to refute the theory. No! The workbasket would have convinced any jury, as it did John, that a young woman—one with a dormant shade of coquetry—had entered his home that day.

The white curtains and the blue lined basket would adjust themselves to but one person, and that one he feared it could not have been. Buried in his memory was the love of one woman, who had said him nay.

He roused himself from his speculations.

"Whoever it is," he thought grimly, "will soon be disclosed. The folks about here are not the kind that hide their light under a bushel."

He looked dubiously at the supper table. It seemed to him that he was under obligations to restore things to the order in which he had found them. Clumsily he washed the dishes and set the room to rights, half angry with himself for doing so.

"They'll be leaving me a kitchen apron and a dish towel next," he thought sheepishly.

In the vapory veil of smoke that floated upward from his evening pipe he saw a vision of a hearth and home presided over by a goddess, young and fair. But his pipe went out, and he awoke from his dreams.

The early dawn, with the sounds of choring, found John sturdy and practical again; yet as he went up and down through the furrows all the gray, sunless day his thoughts eagerly turned to his home going and what the evening would bring forth.

He felt his heartbeats as he lifted the latch. The same order prevailed; the cloth laid for supper and in the center of the little round table was a glass filled with flowers, not the sweet smelling garden flowers nor the stiff blooms of house plants so popular in country homes, but a handful of flowers of the wood.

The week went by, each day spent in hard, eager labor, his thoughts and hopes concentrated on the evening hour. Always he found his little home well kept, the table set with some delicacy, and everywhere was the invisible, invincible touch of a woman's hand.

He might easily have come home unexpectedly by day or lingered in some concealed place to watch for his magic housekeeper, but his chivalry withheld him from seeking to discover the identity of the one who wished to do her good deeds in secret.

Suddenly a bright idea occurred to John. The next morning after breakfast he reset the table for his evening meal, taking pains to make it look as it had each night of the preceding week, even to the flowers, except that two covers were laid and two chairs set at opposite sides of the table. Would she—if it were she—accept the unspoken invitation and all it implied?

When he came home in the late afternoon, a queer little spasm of pain tugged at his heart. Supposing it were not she, after all!

He opened the door. The room was empty, and the table set as he had left it, but there were the same traces of housekeeping. Suddenly he looked at the table and started. By the side of the plate he had set for her was a flower, a wood violet. He had given her a bunch of those blossoms once and shyly told her they were the color of her eyes. This was her answer! All the room—the poor, plain, empty little room—seemed filled with the radiance of the message of the violets.

When the sun had slipped into a gold and crimson setting John made his way through the woods and came out into a meadow. He followed the path that led him into a shaded lane, then through an orchard until he came to the little brown farmhouse—all sweet, homely familiar sights to the man who had been shut out from them for two weary years.

The door stood open, and he went into a long, low room. In the dusky shadows he discerned a slender young figure.

"Jessie!"

Her eyes were quickly raised, and in the blue haze of wistfulness was an expression of appeal. Her lips quivered.

"John!"

"I found your flower, Jessie."

There was no answer.

"Jessie, did you keep my house for me just because you felt sorry for me?"

"N-no."

He came nearer.

"Was it because you care—now? I must know, Jessie."

"I always cared, John, but I didn't know it until I heard how ill kept your house was, and I could not bear that you should be so uncomfortable. I slipped down there every morning through the woods and did the work. They were beautiful days—when I was working for you."

"I'll start out house building tomorrow, dear. We'll have a big one up on the hill. Will you come to it?"

"John!"

After a happy silence she said shyly: "John, is my place still at your table?"

"It is; it always will be now, Jessie."

"Then, John, need we wait? May I come to you in the dear little house where I have been so happy? We can watch the building of the new one together."

Voodoo Worship.

A writer in Chambers' Journal states that the belief in obi, or, as the followers of this fetichism call themselves, obeah, is as rife among the negroes of the West Indies as ever. Though the negro in the Antilles is removed many generations from the original African, it seems that obeah cannot be eradicated. In former days there was such a constant use of poison by those who were of the obeah that the English government in Jamaica did its best to suppress it, but its practices were not discontinued, only concealed. Obeah is pure fetichism, and the rites are at their revolting climax in Dahomey. In Sierra Leone all the old customs and superstitions, despite English influence, hold the natives fast. Voodoo worship, still existing among the Louisiana natives, is the obeah, only with another name, and even the white man will put faith in an absurd rabbit foot. There is with negro conservatism dread of the man or woman who can work obeah. When the colored race has been left to itself, as in Haiti, voodoo worship flourishes. It is by no means a harmless belief, because the obeah hag is skilled in the making of poisons and lives by the sale of them. If the poison administered to a victim causes death it is not murder, according to the negro, but only the influence of a magical spell.

Timepieces.

The earliest contrivance for keeping time was the hourglass, which, of uncertain antiquity, was still employed at the beginning of the present century and indeed is now in use on some reading desks in the English churches. On the pulpit of the queen's chapel at Windsor there is a twenty minute glass, which time the orator for the Sunday is advised not to exceed. The clepsydra, or water clock of the Romans, was invented by Scipio Nasica 158 B. C., and toothed wheels were introduced into these pieces of mechanism by Ctesibius about 140 B. C. The earliest complete clock of which there is certain record was made by a Saracen mechanic in the thirteenth century. The most celebrated clock in the world is that of the cathedral at Strassburg, which tells not only the hour, but the day of the week, the month, the day of the month and the year. It contains a large number of automatons, figures of angels, saints and animals, which appear at regular intervals, and a crowd always assembles at the hour of noon to witness the procession of automatons at that time.

A Cemetery Serenade.

Sounds of music coming from the cemetery in the middle of the night terrified the inhabitants of the Swiss village of Bregenz, near the Austrian frontier. Two gendarmes hid themselves one night behind a tombstone in order to investigate. They saw a young tradesman climb over the cemetery wall, pull a violin from under his coat and, standing over a newly made grave, begin to play the "Bohemian Girl." They listened to the end and then went up to the man, who said he had been playing over the tomb of his bride, who had died the week before. "It was the piece she liked best," he said to the gendarmes, who led him away.

Fraudulent Sweetbreads.

"A true sweetbread is perhaps the most healthy meat that can be eaten," said a doctor, "but you are never able to get it. The sweetbread proper is the pancreas, which is one of the most effective agents in promoting digestion, but the sweetbread of trade is usually obtained from the throats of cattle and is what is called the thyroid gland. This gland rests against the windpipe, and, while its texture is similar to that of the real sweetbread, it has not the same beneficial qualities. But some butchers, in order to make money, pass off the salivary gland, that which furnishes the saliva, located in the cheeks for a sweetbread. This is the most inferior substitute of all. The pancreas, or real sweetbread, is a most dainty morsel. It is of triangular form, while the sweetbreads obtained from the throat are of an oval form. But what is the use of making people dissatisfied? They have been eating thyroid and salivary glands for sweetbreads for years and have been satisfied. But then they have never tasted the real thing."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Money Value of St. Louis.

When Louis IX., the saint, surrendered with his whole forces to the Saracens at Mansura on the 5th of April, 1250, 1,000,000 golden bezants—equal to half that number of the livres of the day—were demanded for his freedom. But the Moslems came down to 800,000 bezants, and in the end by surrendering Damietta Louis got off for 100,000 marks—equal, roughly, to over £1,000,000 of today. These golden bezants contained about 30 shillings' worth of our gold, but to go to market with would buy then as much probably as 7½ sovereigns now would. Were the scorner allowed to break forth here he would probably tell how this high priced and saintly carcass was treated by his people when Louis died at the siege of Tunis, twenty years later. Being hard up for embalmers, they had, according to the journal of Aubery, to quarter and boil him down in separate caldrons and so sent but his whited skeleton to France.—London Chronicle.

PLANTS AS FURNITURE.

They Go Wonderful Lengths Toward Furnishing a House.

If one excepts the open grate fire there is no one thing that adds more to the homy aspect of a room, either in winter or summer, than a thrifty, growing plant, and, of course, if one plant be good a whole shelf full is even better. Plants go wonderful lengths toward furnishing a house. In homes where the furniture has grown old and shabby these and other shortcomings will not be nearly as noticeable if there are pleasant green things growing in the windows.

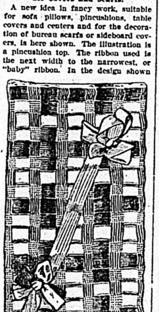
Besides serving as furniture plants have two distinct missions. They are good for the mothers, and they are good for the mothers' children. During the long winter when the mother, particularly the nervous mother, is weary of everything else, a few moments spent among the house plants will prove wonderfully restful. Whether it is the contact with the earth, whether it is the restfulness of green foliage to the eyes or whether it is the complete change of occupation I do not know. At any rate those quiet moments spent among the plants are distinctly beneficial. It is certain, too, that this little daily playtime does much toward shortening the longest winter and, as harbingers of spring, almost all plants can be depended on, for they show unfailingly, by their increased vigor, when the days are beginning to lengthen.

Almost all children can be interested in the various forms of indoor gardening. Where it is at all possible each child should own his or her own plants. It matters little what the plants are. Even an ordinary bean, planted in a tin can, proves thrillingly important when it is one's very own, especially if it is, moreover, climbing right out of its can before one's very eyes. These early attempts at gardening, besides furnishing occupation for the moment, are apt to prove of benefit in later life because of the useful knowledge gained.—Mothers' Magazine.

NEW IDEA IN FANCY WORK.

Pretty Scheme For Pincushions, Table Covers and Scarfs.

A new idea in fancy work, suitable for sofa pillows, pincushions, table covers and centers and for the decoration of bureau scarfs or sideboard covers, is here shown. The illustration is a pincushion top. The ribbon used is the next width to the narrowest, or "baby" ribbon. In the design shown heavy cream canvas was used for a foundation. Beginning about seven threads from the edge, seven threads are pulled out, seven are left in, and so on alternately all through the length of the canvas. Then the work is turned around, and threads are pulled in exactly the same way, the width of the work. This leaves the canvas made up of holes, solid squares and squares with the threads running but one way two shades of which were used in this illustration, a pale green and a pink. In the first the ribbon goes over the holes and under the single thread squares. In the third it goes the same way, the solid squares making the second row. The ribbon is threaded in alternate rows all the way across and then the same way the length of the material. In threading the length the ribbons go under the ribbons of the preceding rows and over the squares of single threads.—Brooklyn Eagle.



FANCY WORK PINCUSHION.

Boiled Fish Sandwiches.

You may find it hard to believe that sandwiches made from boiled fish are good, but if when you have a bit of boiled halibut left from dinner you make a few for luncheon or tea you will find them very good. The fish should of course have the flavor that comes from boiling it in salted water with a bouquet of vegetables—say a slice of onion, a stalk of celery or a sprig of parsley and half a dozen peppercorns. Break up the fish with a fork; then take a wooden spoon and rub it as fine as possible. Make it into a seasoned paste by adding a fourth of a pint of sweet cream, a teaspoonful of salt, a saltspoonful of white pepper or paprika and at the very last and gradually a tablespoonful of lemon juice. This amount of seasoning is for one and a half pounds of fish. Cut your bread very thin, spread the slices with a little butter and then with the fish. Lay between the slices before putting the two together a small, tender lettuce leaf.—New York Post.

GROVER'S GLOVE

By COLIN S. COLLINS

Copyright, 1905, by Beatrix Reade

It was all because Grover, in a sudden fit of sentimentality, had annexed Miss Lenhart's glove. On the football field, in the woods, in the hunting season or at polo Grover was afraid of nothing, but there was something about the five foot daintiness of Laura Lenhart that made Lloyd Grover blush and stammer like the rawest schoolboy in the maddest stages of his first love affair.

He never would have dared to annex the glove had he not been certain that Miss Lenhart was unaware of her loss, and he stuffed it in his deepest pocket, trembling from head to foot lest some one suddenly appear and demand that he restore the souvenir to its owner.

Later on he participated in the general hunt for the glove, and none was more eager than he in the search. Even after Miss Lenhart laughingly declared that it did not matter he kept up the pretense and made that the excuse for reporting at her side as often as her partners left her alone for a moment.

Dropping in at his club on the way home, Grover could not resist the temptation to draw the glove from his pocket and gloat over his boldness. He even pressed it to his lips, after making sure that no one was looking, but he crushed it hurriedly in his hand at Jack Turner's approach, and as he did so for the first time he realized that there was something inside the glove.

With the perspiration standing cold upon his forehead, he realized that it must be a ring, and his active imagination at once busied itself with plans for returning the jewel undetected. He could never bring himself to confess the theft of the glove. He could not pretend to have found the ring without being forced to explain why he had not returned it at once, and a thousand and one suggestions, all equally impossible, rushed through his mind.

All the time he was keeping up a conversation with Turner, and he much surprised that young man by answering, "By registered mail," when asked how he was going home.

TURNED TO CONFRONT A BURLY RUFFIAN WITH A REVOLVER.

"I was going to walk," laughed Turner, "and suggest that I keep you company as far as your door, but if you are going by registered mail I think I will pass."

"Registered mail won't do," was the absent reply. "You see, I'll have to give my address to the postal clerk."

"You'll be giving your address and other details to the desk sergeant," laughed Turner, "if you try to get home in this state." And he left the smoking room fully convinced that for the first time he had seen Lloyd Grover intoxicated.

For an hour Grover sat and pondered the situation, and at last, without having arrived at a satisfactory solution, he went out in the hope that the fresh air might stimulate his faculties to some plan of escape.

So engrossed was he with his thoughts that he did not realize how far he had walked until, with a start, he found himself several miles from home and in a most unsavory quarter of the city. He turned to retrace his steps, and in an endeavor to reach a car quickly he took a short cut through an alley.

Halfway down the block he heard footsteps behind him and turned to confront a burly ruffian with a leveled revolver in his hand. With a spring that had gained many a five yards on the gridiron, Grover sprang on him, and in a moment they were on the wet pavement struggling to gain the advantage over the other. The footpad landed several telling blows, but in the end Grover's skill told against the other's weight, and Grover was just rising from his opponent's prostrate form when, with a rush, the police were on them. The fight had been observed, and the patrolman had summoned help.

In spite of his denials Grover was dragged to the station house and charged with assault and battery, and when he was searched the glove with its ring was brought to light.

"One of those Raffles chaps," was the grinning comment of his captor. "I'll bet that sparkler is worth $500."

One of the wardmen stepped forward. "That is the ring Miss Lenhart lost," he declared eagerly. "Her father telephoned headquarters an hour ago, and an alarm was sent out. They think one of the waiters at the Colwell ball stole it."

"This chap looks like a waiter," suggested the policeman, surveying Grover's battered face. "Guess we'll hold him."

They laughed at his request that various influential persons be sent for. It was then 4 o'clock in the morning, and the sergeant would not call any one out of bed to come to the relief of a waiter who had been found fighting in "Bloody alley," so they confiscated the ring and thrust him into a cell with scant ceremony.

For the rest of the night Grover paced the narrow limits of the cell or sat on the edge of the iron bunk and thought. He had heard of men who had gone to prison and had concealed that fact. It would be a good idea in his case. It would be better to pass three months in jail and give it out that he had gone abroad than to face the jeers of the fellows, and when in the morning Laura came to the station house to identify her property before Grover was taken to court he stood silent while she sought to identify him as one of the waiters.

With his blackened eyes and cut lips it was difficult to tell what he looked like, and she turned away with a shake of her head. Grover's heart leaped as he realized that so far his scheme had worked successfully. Now all he would have to do would be to plead guilty and take his three months' sentence. But his hopes were dashed by Laura's next remark.

"Will the man get a long sentence?"

"Not very long," was the careless reply of the wardman. "As far as we can make out, it's his first offense, and he'll get off with five or six years."

It was too much. Grover started forward. "Laura," he called. The girl turned in astonishment, while her father made a step forward as if to resent the familiarity. "Don't you recognize me?" he pleaded. "Don't mention my name, but for heaven's sake let me see you for a moment in private!"

"Where?" she asked uncertainly.

"There's the captain's room, miss," suggested the detective. "If you need help I'm right here. Just call."

As the door closed on them the girl turned. "Lloyd," she asked curiously, "what does this mean?"

"I didn't steal your ring," he said desperately. "I did steal your glove. The ring stuck in one of the fingers, and I never found it out till I got to the club. I was wandering around trying to find some way of getting it back to you when some rough tried to hold me up. Only thinking of the ring, I went for him and just had him beaten when they arrested me. Then they found the ring, and you know the rest."

"But what on earth did you want of the glove?" she asked. "If you wanted one I would have given it to you."

"I couldn't ask," he stammered. "Don't you know? Don't you understand? I mean—well, when a fellow loves a girl he doesn't dare do a lot of things. I've coveted that glove ever since you wore it at the Gordons' ball last winter. That was the first time I knew that I loved you. My love made me a coward. I could no more ask for the glove than I could have asked for your heart."

"Yet you might have had both for the asking," she said tenderly.

Watering Carlyle.

A lady was one day approaching the modest home of the Carlyles in Cheyne Walk. Poor, long suffering Jeannie Welsh Carlyle, up in the balcony, looked down at her. "Oh, do," she called out, "come in! Mary Ann and I are so tired of watering Carlyle!" The lady entered and was escorted to the little garden at the back of the house. There—it was a hot day—sat the great man in a pool of water. For hours the two devoted women had been taking turns in deluging the flagstones around him by means of a large watering pot. He was very particular that not a drop should touch his sacred person, which no doubt doubled the difficulty of the operation. The same authority relates that Mrs. Carlyle had a dog which she loved. But it would come in with dirty feet, and the splenetic philosopher objected. No one was willing to wash the creature, yet he had to be cleaned somehow. Finally there was an arrangement made with a local laundress, and she washed him every week, sending him home in a basket with the clean clothes.

How Tea Chest Lining Is Made.

One of the many industries in connection with the tea trade is the collection of the lead with which tea chests are lined. China has been noted for many centuries for the purity of its lead, and this tea chest lead, as it is called, is regarded as the finest in existence. There are many uses for it. It is found very valuable in making the best kinds of solder. Machinery is not usually employed in the production of this sheet lead, every sheet being generally made by hand in the most primitive fashion. A large brick is provided the size of the sheet of lead to be made and is covered with two or three sheets of paper. On these the molten lead is poured, and another brick is placed on top, which flattens the lead out to the required size and thickness. The sheets are then soldered together to the size of the interior of the tea chest, the tea is packed in, and the top sheet is fashioned in place. The workmen are very expert, and they turn out an immense number of sheets in the course of the day.

A THRIFTLESS GENIUS.

The Hand to Mouth Existence Th Was Led by Leigh Hunt.

Leigh Hunt had no sense either time or of money, a grave fault, pe haps an unpardonable vice, in a m who had a wife and children dependi upon him. As long as he lived he w thriftless and needy, a lender and borrower, so generous that he cou never afford to be just, bringing up those whom he loved sincerely a co stant burden of debt and care. Ho reprehensible this was he seems nev to have felt, though he blames hims freely and light-heartedly, and if t reader of his autobiography is dispos to feel sorry for Mrs. Hunt it is n because her husband sets him the e ample. This was Leigh Hunt's one vic never amended or actively repented o Yet he had had his warning. It is pa thetic to compare with each other t two following passages and to see ho clearly Leigh Hunt foresaw his dange and how incapable he proved of escap ing it:

"I have seen," he writes in 1808, " much of the irritabilities, or, rathe the miseries, accruing from want of suitable income, and the best woma of her time was so worried and final worn out with the early negligence others in this respect that if ever was determined in anything it is to perfectly clear of the world and read to meet the exigencies of a married lif before I do marry, for I will not se wife who loves me and is the comfor of my existence afraid to speak to m of money matters. She shall neve tremble to hear a knock at the door o to meet a quarter day."

And in 1832:

"I never hear a knock at the door bu I think somebody is coming to take m away from my family. Last Friday was sitting down to dinner when I wa called away by a man who brought a execution into my house for 40 shillings."—London Spectator.

ODDITIES OF ENGLISH.

Interesting Origin of Some Commor English Words.

"Tariff" has an interesting origin. I is derived from the Arabic ta rifa meaning an inventory of fees payabl on demand, and is said to have becom current in the following manner: "A Moorish general, by name Tarifa, seize in the year 710 upon a small seapor some twenty miles from what is now Gibraltar, and the southernmost town in Europe. Here he founded a station for levying toll on all craft trading in the neighborhood and bestowed his name upon the place, after the manner of Constantine, Alexander and others. The word came eventually to signify a schedule of charges and passed into the French, Italian and English.

"For centuries we have tried to get the word that expresses the relation of the man to the maid he intends to marry," says a writer in The London Chronicle. "'Intended' has been tried and found wanting. 'My bloke,' 'my young man,' these combinations are not heard in the best circles. 'My betrothed'—a phrase used in Germany—has not taken root in England. 'My sweetheart' is pretty enough, but it lacks the official sound. One might suggest to the blushing girl who has to allude to the man of her acceptance 'my future.' French maidens speak of 'mon futur'—and it sounds comprehensive."

One of the oddities of nomenclature is that the combination of metals known as German silver contains no silver in its composition and is of Chinese and not of German origin. It was introduced into Europe by the Germans and for some time it was not generally known that they had simply borrowed it from the Chinese.

Love's Ingenuity.

Members of Parliament with more letters to post than pennies to spare will sympathize with the strategy practiced by an impecunious barmaid in the pre-penny post days. It was Sir Rowland Hill who told the story in order to melt the hearts of legislators, themselves at that time revelling in the luxury of unlimited "franking." Coleridge as a young poet was roaming the Lake District. He came to a village inn in time to see the post-messenger hand a letter over the counter to the girl behind the bar. She gazed at it earnestly, reluctantly handed it back, and sighed deeply as she said she was too poor to pay the necessary shilling. The tender-hearted poet, in spite of the girl's eager remonstrance, paid the money. When the postman had gone the barmaid confessed that she had arranged a system of hieroglyphics with her brother — signs on the envelope which she could understand, and that told her all she wanted to know.—London Chronicle.

The Important Comma.

A certain business man thinks he has an exceedingly bright office boy, and nothing pleases him better than to tell how he acquired the young man's services. A short time ago he posted in his shop window a notice which read as follows: "Boy wanted about fourteen years." A lad of that age, with little that was prepossessing in his appearance, came into the office and stated that he had read the notice. "Well, do you think you would like to have the place, my boy?" asked the merchant, gazing patronizingly over the rims of his spectacles at the youth. "Yes," came the prompt answer; "I want the job, but I don't know that I can promise to keep it for the full fourteen years." Then the merchant remembered that he had left out a comma on his sign, but he told the boy he might have the place.—London King.

A Line of Light For 184 Miles.

Splendid as the illumination of Rangun was, nothing in all the Prince of Wales' tour approached the magnificent conception which was carried out by the railway authorities. Both sides of the line to Mandalay were decorated with a string of lamps burning in transparent petal-like cups of tinted paper. Between every other pair a native stood with a great double torch, and this illumination was continued along the line without intermission until daylight shone upon the royal train. The distance thus covered by the double line was 184 miles, and it may be added, to show the enormous preparation involved, that each Burman stood twenty yards only from his neighbor.—London Mail.

EVIDENCE IN LLOYD TRIAL

Neighbors Tell of the Tragedy--Doctors Tell of the Post Mortem and of the Inquest--Grand Jury Makes Presentment--County Buildings Receive Some Hard Criticism--Many Jurors Dismissed.

To-day's proceedings of the Lloyd murder trial were remarkable for the large amount of medical testimony given. Doctors for the prosecution swore that, in their opinion, the wounds on old Mrs. Lloyd's head were inflicted before death. They could not understand how any person, in her senses, could have suffered the burns found on old Mrs. Lloyd and not have suffered burns on the hands. From present appearances, it looks as though the case may last all to-day and possibly part of to-morrow.

The Grand Jury was discharged this morning, and the Chief Justice took occasion to thank them for bringing in a true bill against Mrs. Susan Diamond, and, the wisdom of her acquittal after trial, His Lordship said, was open to grave doubt.

Wednesday Afternoon.

When the court re-convened at 1.30 Mrs. Wright again entered the witness box.

She said Lloyd had told her that he found his wife in a rocking chair, burning. He took her out of the rocking chair, took the burning clothes off her, and put her on the bed. He said he threw the burning clothes out of doors. Witness had seen some clothes smouldering outside the door when she arrived. She and others had washed the dead woman. There were no burns on the woman's body below the waistband. Mrs. Lloyd had been on a visit to the Brickmans, and had returned home shortly after Christmas. Witness saw Mrs. Lloyd after she came back. Mrs. Lloyd's legs were warm when they washed her, but her body was cold. The hands were cold. She had also washed the old man's face. His hands were black-looking. He went to wash them. Miss Annie Kincaid went to the Lloyd house with her.

Cross-examined — Had lived next to the Lloyds for five years, and had known them between 15 and 18 years. Had seen a good deal of them, as they often visited witness' place. Old Mr. Lloyd always spoke well of his wife, and always seemed to be kind to her. They always spoke well of each other. The old lady was somewhat worried about her property, but not in regard to the prisoner. The prisoner, witness said, seemed to feel very badly when he told her, in the morning, about his wife's death. Everything the prisoner had told her, in the morning, about his wife's death. Witness said, she had found to be perfectly true. There was no blood around the dead woman's face when the witness helped to wash her. The cut over the eye was not very deep. It was a slight thing, and she thought it was a result of the burn. The tragedy took place on Monday, Jan. 23rd, 1905. The late Mrs. Lloyd was a large woman. Witness had noticed spots on the dead woman's hands, which remained after the hands were washed. The worst burn was on the right side, under the arm. The dead woman had no clothing, other than her stockings on when witness first saw her that morning. The dead woman sometimes talked as though she were not quite right in her mind. Witness had heard Mrs. Lloyd say that "she wished the Lord would take her away." Had heard her say that more than once. Witness saw no signs of a scuffle when she entered the Lloyd house that morning. Saw nothing that aroused her suspicious. Had not smelled the odor of coal oil. Did not remember seeing old Mr. Lloyd cry the morning of the tragedy, though he seemed to feel bad. Old Mr. Lloyd said once to witness, "Poor old soul, she don't seem to know what she wants." This was on one occasion when he was on an errand for his wife. Witness did not know that old Mrs. Lloyd was a smoker. The witness was overcome as she told of crying on the morning of the tragedy. She saw the body the day of the funeral. It looked the same then as when she saw it on the day of the tragedy.

Re-examined — Witness said she had not suspected foul play at the time, and had not told William Ferguson or anybody else so. Old Mrs. Lloyd, when she talked to witness, repeated herself a good deal; that was why witness thought she was light-headed. She worried a good deal about her property, and said she was sorry she had deeded it to Brickman. Witness said she had not called anyone's attention to the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's head when she discovered it. The witness had said that Lloyd seemed worried on the morning of the tragedy. She could not recall anything he said to indicate that he was worried.

"How could you tell he was worried, then?" said the Crown Attorney.

"Well, by the way he was sitting," said the witness.

The spot on the dead woman's hands, the witness said, looked like a bruise about as big as a five-cent piece. The dead woman's hair was scorched all over. There was blood on the back of the dead woman's head when witness raised her head from the pillow.

MISS ANNIE KINCAID.

She was a neighbor of the Lloyds. The witness told of Mrs. Wright coming for her on the morning of the tragedy and getting her (witness) to go to the Lloyd house with her. Miss Kincaid corroborated the story told by Mrs. Wright. The body of old Mrs. Lloyd was lying on the bed when witness and Mrs. Wright arrived. The witness identified the chair produced in court as the one she had seen in the Lloyd house that morning. She had not noticed anything wrong with the stovepipes in the Lloyd house, and had heard nothing said about them. Old Mr. Lloyd had told witness the same story Mrs. Wright heard, about being at the barn, smelling smoke, going in to the house and finding his wife in the chair: all he could see when he entered the room was "a figure in the smoke." Witness had swept up the floor that morning. The floor looked as though burnt fragments had been gathered up from it. Witness saw the smoking clothing at the door when she entered the Lloyd house. Did not notice any odor till she opened the door. The odor was like burning cloth and flesh. Witness did not take any part in the "laying out" of Mrs. Lloyd. She heard Mr. Lloyd talking to Mr. Burleigh about the tragedy. Witness was there when Mrs. Wright washed Lloyd's face. She said "She thought she'd clean him up a bit." Did not see Lloyd's hands.

Cross-examined—Witness acknowledged saying, at the police court, that Lloyd told her he had "pulled" his wife out of the chair. The Lloyds, the witness said, had always seemed to her to live on good terms together.

WILLIAM FERGUSON.

William Ferguson, a neighbor of the Lloyd's, had known the prisoner for 13 or 14 years. Went to the Lloyd house on the evening of the tragedy. Saw Mrs. Lloyd's body. Helped to put it in the coffin. Noticed some burns on the body and marks on the face. Remembered cut over dead woman's left eye. Afterwards asked Lloyd if he knew how the cut came over his wife's eye. He said no, unless it came when he "drug" her out of the chair. Lloyd told witness the same story of the tragedy as he had told the other witnesses. He also told him that the old lady had passed a very restless night, and several times wanted to get up, but he (Lloyd) persuaded her to remain in bed. The story of his going to the barn, smelling smoke and afterwards finding his wife burnt, was told. Witness said he had told Lloyd it was strange that the woman should be burnt to death and have no burns on her hands. Lloyd said it was a mystery: he did not know. Lloyd, the witness said, had shown supposed burns on his hands to some people in the house. He (witness) did not see them. Had not seen any coal oil that morning, or heard of any.

Cross-examined—Had been a neighbor of the Lloyd's for 13 or 14 years. So far as he knew they always got along well. They always spoke well of each other. Anything Mr. Lloyd had told him that morning, the witness said, he had afterwards found to be true. The witness said he did not notice any spots on the dead woman's hands. Lloyd had told him that, when he found her, his wife's hands were folded peacefully in her lap. She was sitting a little leaned to one side. Heard Lloyd say he had burned his hands in pulling the burning clothing off his wife. Lloyd had dinner at his (Ferguson's) place one Sunday, and Lloyd told witness that "it was hell upon earth at his (Lloyd's) place since his daughter had got married to Brickman." Lloyd had always spoken well of his wife in the hearing of the witness.

Re-examined — Witness said Lloyd had told him something about trouble he had had with his wife about turning the property over to Brickman. The old lady, Lloyd said, thought there was nobody like Brickman.

MISS TILLIE BOWERS.

Miss Tillie Bowers lived about five miles from the Lloyd place. On the morning of the tragedy she was at the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. William Kincaid. Witness went over to the Lloyd place, and found Mrs. Wright and Miss Kincaid there. Lloyd was getting something to eat at the time. The story of the other witnesses, in regard to the condition of the dead woman's body, was corroborated by Miss Bowers. The mark over the dead woman's eye looked like a burn from which the skin had been rubbed off. Her whole body was burned. Witness identified the burnt chair, which she glanced at in a reminiscent way. Thomas Kincaid, the witness said, was sent for Mr. Brickman on the morning of the tragedy. They started to lay out the body at a little after 10 o'clock. Mrs. Wright took the robe off the body. There was a flannel cloth around the body under the buffalo robe. It seemed to be pinned on. They did not disturb that. The flannel cloth extended from the chest to about half-way down the thigh. The witness said Mrs. Lloyd's body was warm when they washed her, but could not tell about her hands. John Kincaid, John Carlton and Mrs. Wright helped move the body into the next room. Witness thought the dead woman was lying on the quilts on top of the bed.

Cross-examined—Witness said she did not notice, very closely, the flannel cloth pinned round the dead woman's body. She thought the wound over Mrs. Lloyd's eye was caused by dragging her out of the chair. There was no appearance of blood about any of the wounds on Mrs. Lloyd.

Re-examined — Witness said Mrs. Wright would have the same opportunity of seeing the cut as she (witness) had.

In answer to Mr. Porter the witness said she had noticed little burnt spots on the floor near the chair. So far as she knew the spots might have been there for years.

JOHN CARLTON.

John Carlton lived about a mile from the Lloyd place. Got there about 10 o'clock on the day of the tragedy. Saw Mrs. Lloyd's body on the bed. Helped carry the body into the other room. The body was warm at the time. Did not notice the dead woman's hands. Saw the burns on her body and a cut over her left eye. Spoke about the cut at the time. It seemed to be about skin deep. John Kincaid and he both looked into the cut. The witness said Lloyd told him the story of the tragedy, which was the same as told by other witnesses. Witness had not seen any coal oil in the Lloyd house, nor smelled any. Lloyd told him the chair in which the dead woman was sitting was about seven or eight feet from the stove. The odor was very strong. Witness said he had never smelled anything like it. Witness heard nothing said about the property that morning. Lloyd had spoken to him about the property some time before. Lloyd said Brickman would not let his wife come to take care of the old lady unless he (Brickman) was given a deed of the place. Lloyd next told witness that he and the old lady had a life lease of the place. On the Saturday before the tragedy witness was at the Lloyd place, and the old lady said she was in awful trouble about her property. Brickman had been there the night before. He was after a load of wood. Mrs. Lloyd said Brickman had given her an awful sight of trouble. Old man Lloyd told her not to worry, but to live as long as she could, and Brickman would have to take care of them both.

JOHN KINCAID.

John Kincaid was at the Lloyd place on the day of the tragedy. Breakfast was being prepared when witness arrived. Saw Lloyd's hands after breakfast. There was a little burn about the size of a pea on Lloyd's hand. That was all the burn witness saw. Witness then related the story of the tragedy, as told by Lloyd. It was substantially the same as told by other witnesses. Witness said he told Lloyd he must have had a hard time putting his wife on the bed. Lloyd said he did, but managed to do it. Witness said he took the wound over Mrs. Lloyd's eye to be a cut. Did not see any blood. Saw some coal oil in a gallon glass bottle in the bedroom. It was about half-full. Saw none on the floor. Could not say whether there was a cork in the coal oil bottle or not. Did not hear Lloyd express any opinion as to how his wife met her death.

Cross-examined – Witness said it would take all the strength old Mr. Lloyd had to lift his wife's body on to the bed. The witness said he had seen some slight burns on the floor around the rocking chair. Did not see the palms of old Mr. Lloyd's hands when he was showing his burns. The cut on old Mrs. Lloyd's head was only just through the skin. He did not see any signs of bleeding from it.

Re-examined—Did not go to the funeral. Lloyd told him his wife had been up in the night, hunting round the cupboard. Witness said, "Where you not afraid?" Lloyd said, "Yes, Johnny, I was afraid; my hair stood right up on my head."

"His hair stood up because his wife got out of bed," said the Crown Council.

"Yes," said the witness.

Witness said he had taken some things out of the stove on Tuesday, the day after the tragedy. There was a match box, a file and a chain bit. Lloyd had told the witness his wife had taken some things off the top of the cupboard and he thought perhaps she had put them in the stove. The witness said a butcher knife was missing, also five dollars, and he was looking for them. The witness had given the things, found in the stove, to Mr. Porter. He did not know that a hammer was also missing.

THOMAS SMITH.

The witness, who suffered from a nervous affection, was given a chair. He was the brother of the late Hannah Lloyd. He heard that his sister was burned, and drove to Moira, to Mrs. Brickman's, to see her, where he saw her in the coffin. Lloyd was there, and told witness the story of the tragedy, which did not differ from the tales of the other witnesses. Lloyd told him that, after he had put his wife's body on the bed, he saw the tea kettle in the same place on the stove, and it looked as though nothing had been disturbed. Lloyd said there was a mystery about the matter, he thought, which would never be cleared up. Lloyd said to witness, the night before the funeral, "Well, the place is mine now, and I can do as I like with it." Lloyd had told him that a butcher knife was missing from the house. His sister, he thought, was 66 years of age. The last time witness saw her, in 1904, she seemed quite well. Her property rented for $60 a year.

Cross-examined—Witness said he was present when the agreement between his sister and Brickman was drawn up in Mr. Morden's office. Mr. Porter here handed in, as an exhibit, the deed of the property from Mrs. Lloyd to Jas. L. Brickman. On the same day an agreement was entered into by J. L. Brickman and his wife, agreeing to support Adam and Hannah Lloyd for life. The witness (Smith) said he and Lloyd had never talked over matters in connection with the property, but he knew that the understanding was that, if the old couple were not satisfied with the living given them by Brickman, they were to go back on the place again. In answer to Mr. Porter, Mr. Smith said he did not, at the time, think there was anything strange about the remark Lloyd made, "The property is mine now, and I can do as I like with it."

JOHN BURLEIGH.

John Burleigh lived half a mile from the prisoner's house, which he visited on the day of the tragedy, about 9 o'clock. Saw old Mrs. Lloyd's body on the bed. Lloyd had told him the story of the tragedy, which the witness related. Lloyd said his wife, when he found her, was sitting in the chair with her arms folded. He lifted her out of the chair and put her on the bed. Lloyd told witness that on Friday before the tragedy Brickman had come to the house and abused them "ridiculous." Since then the old woman had been clean wild. Lloyd then said, "Never mind, he has got me to deal with now." Witness said Brickman said he was tired supporting the old couple; he could not afford to keep two families. Lloyd said his son-in-law was a scoundrel, and talked as though he was very sorry that Brickman ever got the place. Witness had noticed wounds on Mrs. Lloyd's face and a cut over her left eye.

Cross-examined — The prisoner's complaint to him, the witness said, was all against Brickman. So far as he knew, there was no trouble between Lloyd and his wife. Witness admitted there had been a little trouble between himself and Brickman.

MRS. BURLEIGH.

Mrs. Adelaide Burleigh was the wife of John Burleigh. She told of going to the Lloyd house on the morning of the tragedy. Mrs. Lloyd's face was dark with smoke. There was a wound over the left eye, at the bottom of the wound there was a faint trace of blood. When the dead woman's face was washed it seemed natural. Heard Lloyd tell the story of the tragedy. Lloyd said something about the coal oil being moved. He said it was not in just the same place as when he left it. Did not smell any odor until she got inside the house; not outside.

Cross-examined—Blood seemed to be at the bottom of the cut. It was not a deep cut, but she would call it a cut, nevertheless.

SAMUEL KETCHESON.

Samuel Ketcheson was caretaker of Vantassel's cemetery in January, 1905. Remembered Mrs. Lloyd's funeral. He received the body and put it in the vault. Thought plate on coffin said she was 68. Dr. Yeomans came and examined Mrs. Lloyd's body, about two weeks after the body arrived. Dr. Yeomans came twice. The second time he came twelve men were with him, and held an inquest. Afterwards Drs. Mather and Boyce came and held a post mortem on the body of old Mrs. Lloyd.

Cross-examined—The roads were in a very bad condition at the time.

Re-examined — The witness said Brickman had brought him a certificate of burial from an undertaker.

Cross-examined — Witness said it was about a mile from Brickman's to the cemetery. The roads were very

McINTOSH BROS.

ALL ON ONE SIDE.

Debate In House on Preserving Intact Original Representation of the Provinces in Parliament.

Ottawa, April 5.—An interesting debate, if it can be called a debate where every one speaks on the same side of the question, sprung up in support of a resolution by Mr. Hughes (King's) moving: "That an humble address be presented to His Majesty King Edward VII, praying that he may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Imperial Parliament, for the purpose of amending the British North America Act, so that no province of the Dominion shall at any time have fewer representatives in Parliament than it was given when it entered Confederation."

The legal questions involved were settled by the Imperial Privy Council against Prince Edward Island upon the redistribution of 1903.

The speakers of yesterday, as a rule, were inclined to admit that the law was against them; indeed, the very purpose of this resolution is to have the constitution amended by an act of the Imperial Parliament; yet many contended that the B. N. A. Act of 1867, if correctly construed, should be read in their favor.

The Prince Edward Island delegation all spoke for the resolution, and it was evident that the Nova Scotia and New Brunswick members were thoroughly in accord with them.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that several members who were not present yesterday desired to be heard on the subject. He gave no intimation as to his own views.

The debate will be continued on Monday next.

Private Bills.

The evening hour was spent in committee on private bills.

Mr. Fitzpatrick introduced his bill restoring traveling allowances to certain county court judges, and Mr. Rivet (Hochelaga) enquired at considerable length, about the Montreal harbor commissioners.

It is understood, by the way, that the commission will soon be abolished.

Rural Postmasters Ask More.

Ottawa, April 5.—Two hundred rural postmasters from various parts of Ontario are in Ottawa to ask the Postmaster-General to increase the minimum allowance to postmasters from $25 a year to $50 a year. They will also ask an increase in the one per cent. commission allowed to stamp vendors.

CABINET WILL DECIDE.

Whether Grand Trunk Pacific Will Be Given Contract Over Lowest Tenderers — Commissioners Disagree.

Ottawa, April 5.—Not until Saturday will the Cabinet decide upon the award of the contract for the sections of the National Transcontinental Railway between Winnipeg and Quebec, and it will be left to the Government to decide, for the commissioners report that they have been unable to agree upon an award.

It appears that W. B. McArthur was the lowest tenderer for the section between Winnipeg and Superior Junction, and Hogan and Macdonald the lowest on the section between Quebec and La Toque.

According to report, Commissioners McIsaac and Reid held out for recommending acceptance of the lowest tender in each case, but Barnet and Young maintained that the estimate of Hogan and Macdonald was so far below the estimate of the Government that the "public interest" demanded it should be given to the Grand Trunk Pacific Co. itself, whose offer most nearly approximated the estimate of the Government engineers.

The whole situation bears out the prediction freely made by well-posted contractors, that the matter would be so arranged as to give the entire work to the Grand Trunk Pacific Co., who will sub-let to favorite contractors.

JAPS' EYES ON PHILIPPINES.

Russian General Says Preparations Are Under Way For Campaign.

Moscow, April 5.—Gen. Von Mack, the Russian representative of the Red Cross, has just returned from Japan. He declares that the Japanese are actively engaged in war preparations, and he adds, the enemy in view is America, and operations are being planned against the Philippines.

The Open Door Soon.

Tokio, April 5.—The long expected announcement of the open door in Manchuria, is confidently believed to be in the very near future.

The delay has been prompted solely on the part of the Japanese Government by a fear of complications arising while the transmission of troops was vigorously going on.

VALET TO GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

Henry Cody Ends His Life In New York Apartment.

New York, April 5.—Henry Cody, who said that he was a stepbrother of Marie Corelli, the novelist, committed suicide yesterday in a basement apartment in West Thirty-Sixth street, where he had been living.

He swallowed morphine and turned on the gas. Cody had been successively a cigar manufacturer, restaurant keeper and proprietor of a laundry in this city, and was formerly reputed to be wealthy.

He had said that he left England 35 years ago as a valet of a former Governor-General of Canada. Of late he suffered business reverses. He was 59 years of age.

Robert Loudon Was Drowned.

Toronto, April 5.—The body of Robert Loudon, postman, was recovered from the bay yesterday after being nearly four months in the water. He disappeared late on the night of Nov. 18. He was 45 years of age. His wife died three years ago, and he could not seem to recover from the loss.

Flour Mills Burned.

Grand Valley, April 5.—At an early hour yesterday morning the Grand Valley Flour Mills were entirely destroyed by fire. The Methodist Church, which is a quarter of a mile distant, caught fire, and the flames were with difficulty extinguished.

THE BENCH'S PLAIN TALK

Magistrate Denison's Drastic Comments on Phillips.

Mr. Jones Waives Committal, In Order to Get Before High Court—Accuses Crown of Unfairness and of Meting Out Less Than British Justice to Phillips in Holding Him Without Bail—Payments to E. J. Burt.

Toronto, April 5.—The Phillips' investigation in the Police Court yesterday morning was enlivened by a three-cornered tilt taking place between Magistrate Denison, Crown Attorney Curry and Mr. Jones, as the result of an unsuccessful attempt on Mr. Jones' part to put an end to the proceedings by having Phillips sent on for trial.

As soon as one witness had been examined for the space of a few minutes, Mr. Jones arose and made his objection. In part the following dialogue took place:

Not British Justice.

"I wish to protest against this investigation proceeding any further," said Mr. Jones. "If there is enough evidence to warrant your Worship holding this prisoner without bail, there is enough to formulate a definite charge against him. The effect of your Worship's interpretation of the complaint has been to allow Mr. Curry to wander all over creation looking for things. Without the charges being specified any cross-examination is futile. It is not British justice to this man to be holding him without bail. Why should you allow this to go on from day to day?"

Mr. Curry—We will be through long before the court sits.

Secret Method of Fraud.

The Court—There has never been such a secret, complicated method of perpetrating fraud that has ever come before me. I think there should be a full investigation. There is no object for me to do it, save to get at the facts.

Mr. Jones—Your duty is, I submit, to commit him for trial. The general opinion of the community is that you are trying the man.

The Court—I am not trying the man. I am trying to make a full investigation.

Mr. Jones—"What does your Worship think of the propriety of holding this man without bail?"

The Court—"The evidence so far is all pointing in the same direction."

Mr. Jones said that some individual instance such as the alleged misappropriation of the $10,000 cheque should be incorporated in the complaint against Phillips.

Mr. Curry—"A technicality to let him go."

To Wreck York Loan.

The Court—"So far as I can see, from some time in September there has been a deliberate scheme laid out and planned by the Toronto Life and the Liszt Piano Co. and others to squeeze the York Loan for the benefit of a few people that were going to make all the money out of it. It was evident the York Loan was going to be wrecked. The York Loan was paying the expense of the Toronto Life, which was owned by Phillips and a few of his supporters."

Mr. Jones—"I do not know what a jury will have to try."

The Court—"The jury will have to try whether this man manoeuvred and by fraud and deceit and other methods took the profits out of that company for his own benefit and that would be combination with others to defraud the public."

The controversy ended with Mr. Curry continuing the case.

E. J. Burt Again.

E. J. Burt was called to give evidence in regard to a number of cheques paid to him, but he was unable to give much account of what became of them. As many as 65 cheques paid to the witness were put in.

George Crawford, manager of the Bank of Montreal branch, Queen and Yonge street, produced the cheques drawn by Phillips on the Liszt Piano Co.'s account in the bank. The balance was now $50.72—all these cheques had been cashed by the York County Loan.

Commissions $15,000; Salary $45.

The examination showed that Burt had received commissions from Toronto Life amounting in all to about $15,000. He was drawing $20 a week as an officer of the company and also $25 a week as an officer of the York Loan. Witness, in answer to Mr. Curry, said he did not remember what he did with the money.

Mr. Jones protested against this question as to what the witness did with his own money.

Crown Attorney Curry contended it was not the witness' own money.

Magistrate Denison said that if this gentleman had been an agent of Mr. Phillips for the purpose of defrauding, they should be told what had been done with this money.

Witness went on to say that he had $7,620 in the Toronto Life. The stock belonged to him, though not all in his own name. Then he furnished particulars as to persons who held his stock, mentioning that his wife held 75, which she sold to Phillips.

Miss Millard of the York Loan Co. gave evidence concerning a loan to Phillips.

Burt, in answer to Col. Denison, said that policyholders would not be able to withdraw, say $24 until after the expiration of three years and a half and then 30 per cent. were paid as interest.

To-day, Jos. and Mrs. Barrett of the Northern Light & Power Co. will be asked to give evidence.

Five Insurance Bills Pass.

Albany, N. Y., April 5.—The bills proposed by the joint special legislative committee to meet the conditions disclosed in the recent investigation of life insurance are all special orders in the Senate committee of the whole to-day. Any of them advanced by that committee to the order of third reading can be finally passed if not amended to-day. Five passed the Assembly yesterday without amendment.

$2,000 Damages.

Guelph, April 5.—The Assizes jury yesterday awarded Forbes Moir of West Garafraxa $2,000 damages against the C. P. R. for the death of his son.

ANTI-TREATING BILL.

Premier Whitney Gives Mr. McNaught's Attempt Its Quietus—Law and Farmers—Budget Thursday.

Toronto, April 5.—Mr. McNaught's anti-treating bill was thrown out by the Legislature yesterday. The coup de grace was given by the Premier, who showed sympathy with the intent of the bill, while convinced that the measure was ahead of public sentiment.

Law Reform.

Hon. Mr. Foy replied to a question of Mr. MacKay that the Government had no intention of passing law reform legislation this session, or to appoint a committee or commission to make an inquiry.

"The question has not yet been considered by the Government," was the Premier's reply to Mr. MacKay's query whether legislation dealing with the licensing and regulation of hotels or public houses in municipalities where liquor licenses wouldn't be granted.

The House applauded facetiously the second reading of the bill of Mr. Smith (Peel) to give widows and spinsters qualified to vote in municipal elections the right to vote in Parliamentary contests.

The Premier suggested that the subject be seriously debated on Friday.

Law and Farmers.

Mr. Lucas asked for a second reading of his bill respecting conditional sales of chattels.

Hon. Mr. Foy objected to the bill in its present form. It provided that men should not be bound by a contract into which they had entered. In regard to the place of trial it was exceptional legislation. The bill might be changed to give the court the option of changing the revenue so as not to incur excessive costs.

Mr. Preston of Brant thought it would give farmers room to evade their contracts, and entail unnecessary hardships on the honest manufacturer.

Mr. Gamey said it was not fair to drag a farmer from the Manitoulin Island to Toronto to the trial of an action arising out of a sale of agricultural implements on Manitoulin Island.

Mr. McGarry remarked that many of the judges moved in the same social circles as the manufacturers against whom the action was taken, and it was a hardship on the farmer to bring him from the other end of the province to Toronto or Hamilton to a trial of his action. The bill was referred to a legal committee.

Mr. Duff had a bill of the same title, which was also referred to the legal committee.

To Mr. Ross the Premier said the adjourned debate on the budget would be continued on Thursday, and the House would go into committee on Mr. Hendrie's railway bill.

License Holders Deputation.

The license holders deputation, yesterday, about 600 strong, from all sections of the province, filed into the main corridor of the Assembly building with President Hartnett of the License Holders' Protective Association; James Haverson, K. C., solicitor, and E. Dickie, secretary, at their head. Without undue delay the Premier, with Hon. Messrs. Hanna, Monteith, Matheson and Reaume, appeared, and President Hartnett introduced the advocate of the association in the person of Mr. Haverson, who laid their claims before the members of the Government.

The Provincial Secretary in his reply gave no sign that the license bill now before the House would be changed in any of its essential particulars. He defended the high license fee on the ground that a monopoly had been created and the licenses were worth more to the holders. It was the intention to stand by the clause giving protection to witnesses, but there would be a modification of the bill, so that every offence might not result in the cancellation of a license. The Government would restrict the tied-house evil, and an emphatic "no" was given to the request that the hour of closing on week days be extended to 12 o'clock. Mr. Hanna made it plain that the law would be strictly enforced, and he warned the hotelkeepers that it would be in their interest to assist.

Premier Whitney declared the Government believed the new license measure was approved of by the majority of the people of the province. The temperance people had strongly attacked the Government on the measure, the liquor men were to-day recounting objections. It was the duty of the Government to hold the balance evenly between the two. They did not expect to please the extremists on either side, and that was another evidence, he thought, of the wisdom of the course they were pursuing.

Want Farmers Included.

Provincial Secretary Hanna met a large delegation from the grocers' section of the Retail Merchants' Association yesterday.

The grocers asked that the committee of the House include farmers, and others who grow the produce they sell, in the operation of the peddlers' bill at present before the Legislature.

Mr. Hanna intimated that certain clauses of the bill would be withdrawn and the provisions that the delegation wished would receive his careful consideration.

"THIS MAN BECK."

Mr. Wright Charges Him With Inciting Public Against Companies.

Toronto, April 5.—"It is very unfair and dishonorable to have a Minister of the Crown traveling around the country as this man Mr. Beck is doing, addressing Boards of Trade and municipalities, and trying to prejudice the minds of the people against corporations doing legitimate business."

Such was the comment of Mr. J. J. Wright, general manager of the Toronto Electric Light Co., in discussing the report of the Municipal Power Commission yesterday.

Sir Arthur's Reward.

London, April 5.—Sir Arthur Nicolson, the chief representative of the British mission at the Moroccan conference, will receive the Knight Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George for his services at Algeciras.

For Starving Japs.

Montreal, April 5.—The Board of Trade reports the Japanese famine fund as having reached $12,000 yesterday.

CRUISER TO ENFORCE LAWS.

Newfoundland's Action to Protect Fisheries Against All Comers.

St John's, Nfld., April 6.—Premier Bond, in the Colonial Assembly last night, replying to questions anent the Government's attitude towards the alleged illegal trawling of American, Canadian and colonial fishermen within the three-mile limit along the western shore, stated that the colonial cruiser Fiona has been despatched to the scene with proper officials on board to enforce the local fishery laws against all offenders.

Who Misplaced the Switch?

St. Catharines, April 6.—The following verdict was given by the coroner's jury in the death of Fireman John Barry at Port Robinson Tuesday:

"That John Barry came to his death as the result of an accident due to a misplaced switch, but who was responsible for the misplaced switch, the evidence does not show. We recommend that the Grand Trunk maintain a switchman at Port Robinson in addition to the operator."

Edward Maycock, the engineer who was so seriously injured, was resting somewhat easier last night, though the chances of his recovery are very poor.

Thanks to Dr. Goldwin Smith.

Toronto, April 6.—The members of the University Commission have concluded their labors and the report is now in possession of the Government. Prior to dissolution a vote of thanks was moved by Sir William Meredith and seconded by B. E. Walker, to Prof. Goldwin Smith for having placed "the Grange at their disposal, thus enabling the commission to conduct its inquiry and deliberations with the privacy that was essential to the work upon which it was engaged."

Jilted, He Suicides.

Frank, Alta., April 6.—Corpl. E. W. Kimberly, in charge of "F" Barracks at this station, committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself in the mouth with a revolver. The act was committed while he was seated on the edge of his bed in the barracks. He had been jilted.

McCraw to Be Hanged.

Three Rivers, Que., April 6.—Wallace McCraw was sentenced yesterday to hang on Friday, June 29 next, in the jail yard here, for the murder of Percy Howard Sclater.

Mr. Burt's Commission, Which He Says He Intends to Keep.

Notwithstanding Statement of Crown Attorney Curry That He Ought to Give it Over to York Loan—President of the Toronto Life Co. Makes Some Admissions Concerning Inner Workings of the Double Barrelled Agency System.

Toronto, April 6.—Greater public interest than ever in the Phillips' investigation yesterday was evidenced by the large audience at the Police Court, especially in the afternoon.

President E. J. Burt of the Toronto Life was in the witness box nearly all the time, seeming little dismayed by the searching questions, even by the plain assertions that his statements were not believed. The chief feature of the day were his confession that from January, 1904, up to March of this year he had received a total commission of $17,209.63 from Toronto Life funds.

"What has that to do with Phillips," asked the ever-protesting J. E. Jones.

Two Reasons Given.

"If this man were holding anything for Phillips we ought to know it," observed Col. Denison.

"If this man obtained the money as a result of conspiracy with Phillips he is not entitled to it, and we want to get it," put in Mr. Curry.

"This only proves," said Mr. Jones, "that it is impossible to get a fair trial in this court."

Crown Attorney Curry said he had had a denial that a cheque for $1,350 went to Phillips. Phillips' deposit account, however, showed that he had got it, despite one young lady's denial. Mr. Curry had the voucher from the Bank of Montreal.

Burt said he had paid out $7,627.50 on Toronto Life stock. He had forgotten to include the note for $2,365 he held, payable by Phillips.

Toronto Life Affairs.

Crown Attorney Curry questioned witness concerning the transactions in Toronto Life stock. The latter said that Mrs. Barrett signed three blank applications for Toronto Life stock, and that these were filled in by Phillips, Mrs. Hassard and Miss Robb. Witness denied that he burnt any books of the York County Loan. He did not know how much stock Phillips got through Mrs. Barrett.

Mr. Curry produced the book showing that Joan McCann had been given the shares from Mrs. Barrett, but there was no record of any to a Mrs. Hassard, though witness had declared he witnessed the transfer.

"Do I understand you to say," asked the crown attorney on the resumption of the case in the afternoon, "that the amount received from Phillips on the transfer of the stock here in the books under the name of Joan McCann was $4,875?"

"Yes," witness replied. The amount received on July 5, 1905, from Mrs. Barrett was $1,750. He did not know anything about the cash blotters.

Continuing, witness said he did not know anything about Joan McCann. He was not aware that Phillips had a daughter who was married to a man named McCann.

Curry Getting Close.

Mr. Curry referred to a cheque dated July 13, 1905, for $1,000, remarking to witness: "We are getting close up to the amount, proving the stock pretty closely to be that of Mr. Phillips'."

The witness made no reply.

Crown Attorney Curry produced a cheque for $5,000, payable to Joseph Phillips, and dated Dec. 30, 1904. That put in as an exhibit, had originally been drawn on the Liszt, but apparently got into the hands of the Toronto Life.

Others cheques paid in by Phillips were put in.

Burt could not swear to the signature on the cheque payable to Georgina Hudson for $15,000 (paid in as against her stock), as being that of Phillips'.

Witness had no interest in the Liszt Piano Co. He did not remember having had cheques payable to himself. He admitted that he had got three cheques from The National Monthly. They were sums, partly repayments for the loan of $1,000 he had advanced to Phillips, and partly in respect of life assurance Phillips owed.

Curry Warns Witness.

"Now I am going to ask you to be very careful in answering this question," said Mr. Curry. "Look at cheque No. 94. Tell me whether that has any reference to the $3,337.25 which you received on Jan. 15, 1904, for the Toronto Life?"

"None whatever."

"Not one-third?"

"Not one-quarter has anything to do with it whatever."

"Where did you get the money you loaned Mr. Phillips?"

"I could not say. It may have been from the insurance premiums."

"Where did you put the money you got out of the cheque? Here is another case of cashing a cheque and not depositing it."

"I may be able to find out," replied the witness, who added that a cheque for $67.36 was the balance due on an insurance premium for $5,000.

Burt was unable to give the name of the parties applying for incorporation. He admitted that the Toronto Life started business on a deposit of $25,000. He did not know who the shareholders of the Toronto Life were.

All York Loan Agents.

Crown Attorney Curry then subjected the witness to severe questioning concerning the personnel of the shareholders of the Toronto Life. Were they not all agents and servants of the York Loan.

"Yes," replied Burt.

The witness admitted that the York Loan paid the salaries of the inspectors and agents working for the Toronto Life.

"They spent their time in writing business for the Toronto Life," said Mr. Curry.

"Not all of it," replied Burt.

"Well," said Mr. Curry, "they wrote three millions of business in two years. Did they not get the York County Loan salary at the same time. You must answer the question?"

"They got the commission for the business." Witness admitted it was an advantage to the Toronto Life to have the agents of the York County Loan, because they knew the subscribers and could go round and get the business for those shareholders who were willing to take the insurance.

"What benefit did the shareholders of the York Loan get?" asked Magistrate Denison.

Witness went on to admit with great reluctance that the Toronto Life had sent out circulars to the agents of the York County Loan. He had done better business than Mr. Curry.

A Great Combination.

"Possibly," the lawyer cheerfully admitted. "As supervisor of agents of the York County Loan, you sent out to their agents circulars for the getting of business for the Toronto Life. The insurance that was written was written by agents of the York Loan for the Toronto Life."

"Some of them."

"Some of them," echoed Mr. Curry, sternly. "Will you pledge your oath that it was not the majority of them?"

T. P. BROWN,

Daily Intelligencer.

Mr. Ross' Taunt.

If the Whitney Government wished for an excuse to turn out the license inspectors and other "offensive partisans" of the old regime, says the London Free Press, it was given them by ex-Premier Ross in the Legislature on Tuesday night.

One of the most galling things which Conservatives have had to meet since the change of Government, our contemporary continues, has been the leer of triumph on the part of officials who know well they ought to have been sent packing, who fully expected to be dismissed, but who found as the months proceeded, that they were kept on the pay list. With no sense of gratitude for the leniency shown them, believing that the new Government was mildly disposed, and probably in the conceit that their services could not be so well done by others, these men have put on an air of defiance. They smile at those Conservatives who have worked in their party fights for a whole generation against what they were told, and believed, were false dealings on public account, as much as to say, "You fellows now see how you have been deceived all this time. You were told the whole system was rotten, and that a change was called for. Well, the Government has changed, but we are here still. It shows that the Grits were maligned. Your leaders find we do things honestly, and dare not put us out."

Little wonder if, mocked and derided thus, Conservative workers have felt that the new Government has been somewhat over-indulgent toward the gang that for over thirty years ran the province as if it belonged to them.

The attitude of the old official, thinking and talking as above, was insolently upheld in the Legislature on Tuesday by Mr. Ross himself. He contended that the license law was well enforced by the old inspectors. "The proof was," Mr. Ross said, "that they were allowed to remain in office for eight months. The Government acknowledged that the inspectors were good men when they allowed the inspectors to stay." In other words, your not disturbing these officials was the best testimony to our good rule as a Government! No credit allowed to Mr. Whitney for a disinclination to treat the official patronage as party spoil. No thanks for the grace allowed to old hands trained to the narrow guage, in hope they might reform. But on the contrary the direct taunt of inability to find any valid ground of change.

Hon. Mr. Hanna very promptly replied to Mr. Ross that the reason the inspectors were allowed to stay was "because we made a mistake." They made the mistake of supposing that the old officials would change their ways with the change of rulers. They found that the license department was going on in the same old way under these inspectors, and they realized, rather late in the day, that they had to be responsible for the old ways and not their own ways, if they kept these officials in power. It was a mistake to be lenient.

TIMELY TOPICS.

"Calamity City" is what a Hamilton paper calls Belleville. Well, we're had our own share of the limelight lately, sure, but will our critics please remember that most of the matters investigated have properly belonged to other places.

* * *

The evidence in the case of Phillips the president of the York County Society, says the Montreal Gazette, discloses a condition of affairs that calls for a sharp lesson. And it will be given.

* * *

This is the time of year when the model husband proves his claim to be regarded as a shining example by taking housecleaning philosophically, just like the man on the next block does.

* * *

A big deputation of country postmasters has just waited upon the Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, and, among their requests is that the minimum pay in country offices be $50 and not $25, as at present. Surely this is a reasonable request. If there is one class of public servants always at it late and early, faithfully ministering to the daily needs of a great many queer people in this world, it is the rural postmaster.

Public documents, issued by any department at Ottawa or Toronto, for publication in the press, and the general information of the people, should be privileged and it is gratifying to learn that Hon. A. G. MacKay will introduce a bill in the Ontario House to amend the Act respecting actions of libel or slander. Suit For Damages.

The following case was this morning commenced before the High Court.

Millard vs. Burgoyne — An action for compensation for alleged injuries received by the plaintiff by being run over by a vehicle driven by the defendant. The plaintiff, Frederick Millard, is a clerk in the city and the defendant, Adolphus Burgoyne, is a hackman. The plaintiff claims that on November 22nd, 1904, he was crossing from one side of Front St. to the other when the defendant, driving at an alleged immoderate rate of speed, knocked the plaintiff down. The plaintiff was injured about the face, his body was bruised and one finger was split. In consequence of the injuries received he was under medical care for some time and also had to be at the expense of having a dentist fix his teeth. For these injuries he seeks compensation. The case is being tried by a jury. Porter & Carnew for plaintiff; F. E. O'Flynn for the defendant.

THE LLOYD TRIAL.

Cross-examined — The old lady had talked quite friendly to him the Friday before the tragedy. Her mind was all right, too, when she gave witness the deed of her property.

That's the defence," said Mr. Porter, and the court adjourned at 5.55 p.m. to 7.45 p.m.

Thursday Evening.

When the court reassembled, Mr. Porter at once began his address to the jury.

MR. PORTER'S ADDRESS.

It was hard to determine just at what point of this case he should begin, he said. The Crown case was one not of fact, but of theory. There was not one fact established that would show that the prisoner at the bar was guilty. It was all a matter of theory, and the theory was not proved. It had been pointed out by His Lordship a few days ago that a case depending upon circumstantial evidence must be proven by a continuous chain. But the chain must be connected. Three elements must be established by the Crown: Motive, means and opportunity. It could not be said that the theory of the Crown fitted in with the evidence adduced. The theory, as he understood it, was that the prisoner killed his wife and then set fire to the body to hide evidence of his crime. They had tried to prove that the wound on the head was inflicted before death and the burns after death. The only facts proven in this case have been proven by the prisoner himself. Look at it calmly. Has one statement made by the prisoner been proven by the Crown to be untrue? Not one. He said he wanted everything cleared up, and gave all the information he could towards clearing it up. Theorizing was all right, but it was dangerous when paid detectives or experts tried to establish circumstances to fit a theory. The Crown said they would prove ill-will between the prisoner and his wife. Had they proved it? No. Mrs. Wright, the Crown's star witness, said she never knew of a single thing between them. He was always trying to please her. Was such a man liable to murder his wife? The Kincaids, Bowers' and others said the same—always good-will between the prisoner and his wife. As to property differences, what had the prisoner to gain by the death of his wife? Nothing. They could see that by the deeds. So much for the alleged motive. Now as to the means. Could there be, in any trial, a greater failure to prove a theory than was evident in this case? If the prisoner had struck his wife a blow on the head, killing her, and then had tried to burn her up, to hide his crime, would he not have tried to destroy first of all the evidence of his crime? In this case the burning was upon that part of the body which did not bear a wound at all. It was all purely and simply a matter of theory, and the evidence was more against it than in favor of it. Has the Crown proven that the wound was inflicted before death? No. All the doctors said it was possible that the wound on the head was inflicted just after the woman had been burned to death, thus proving the prisoner's statement to be true. The Crown tried to prove that the burns took place after death. The doctors, none of them, would swear that the burning took place after death. The doctors were compelled to admit that Lloyd's story was a quite natural one, and that the wounds might have been caused when he pulled his wife's body from the chair. Mr. Porter showed the jury the piece of board and asked them if it were not possible that Mrs. Lloyd's head had struck on the knot in the piece of board. That was only a theory, but it was as good as the Crown's. Then again, the wound might have been caused when he placed her on the bed. He could not say it was, but could the jury, or anybody else, say it wasn't? It was reasonable, all the doctors admitted that. It was just as consistent as the theory advanced by the Crown. The Crown said the burning took place after death. The consensus of opinion was that the burning took place before death, and the only way the Crown tried to reason out that it didn't was because the woman's hands were not burned. The experts said the shock of burning might have caused sudden death, and in that case they would not have expected to find the hands in any other condition than that they were found in. There was no evidence to prove that the woman was conscious when she was burning. The Crown had imported Toronto doctors, who were no better than the doctors we had here in the city. Against their evidence, given at great expense, we had the evidence of two reputable doctors in this city, who came, without charge, to give evidence which contradicted that of the expensive experts. None of the doctors could swear positively whether the burns were made before or after death. Unless the jury could say more than the doctors they would be unable to satisfy themselves that the wounds were made after death, and unless they could do that they could not find the prisoner at the bar guilty. Adam Lloyd had always treated his wife well. He was proven by reputable witnesses to be a man against whom no one could bring a single thing. For 25 years he had lived with the dead woman, and the Crown could not prove that in all that time he had ever ill-treated or abused his wife. The onus was upon the Crown to fasten guilt upon the prisoner. How had they tried to do so? By hiring expensive experts, who, for large fees, would swear that their theory was a plausible one. The doctors for the defence, who got no fees, said it was not a likely one. Adam Lloyd, an old man over 70 years of age, who had lived happily with his wife, and had been a loving husband, could not expect to be many more years in this world. Would they send him to the gallows upon such testimony as they heard? He left the case in the jury's hands, confidently believing they would do justice to and acquit his client.

THE CROWN'S SIDE.

Mr. Meredith claimed that Mr. Porter had accused the Crown of theorizing, and then had done little but theorize himself. The Crown was not anxious for a conviction unless the case was proven beyond reasonable doubt. The speaker said he was surprised that Mr. Porter had made such insinuations against the reputable doctors who had come to give evidence in the case. The Crown simply brought those men because by their learning and ability they were qualified to give evidence which could be relied on. Then why this clap-trap of Mr. Porter's! Here was the case: There were an old couple living in a house. Nobody there but them. The woman was found dead, horribly burned, with no burns on her hands, and a wound on her head, which five doctors believed was inflicted before death. What could they think of this? Remember, they were to determine this case upon their solemn oaths! The Crown Prosecutor grew very dramatic, and people sat up with excitement as his voice rose and fell. He pointed to the burned chair. Could they believe it came into that state by the means spoken of by the defence? Their common sense would tell them such could not be the case. Every doctor the Crown had asked said the chair could not have been burned in that way on the defence's theory. Their common sense would tell them that some inflammable material had been used to burn the old woman. Who put it there? It must have been the prisoner. No one else was there. No doctors would believe that the woman could have committed suicide under the circumstances described. The defence lawyer had kept away from the coal oil theory, but the jury could not get away from it. If coal oil was used, and reputable doctors said it was used, then the prisoner put the coal oil on his dead wife. If he put the coal oil on her then he gave her the blow. As to motive, they had one in the fact that, were the old lady dead, the property would revert to the old man. The prisoner that morning, probably, had upbraided his wife for deeding the property to Brickman and away from him. They may have quarrelled and then he gave her a blow. It was possible that a hellish plot was hatched that Friday when Brickman was at the Lloyd house. Brickman's evidence was most unsatisfactory. That was the fact. What did they think of it? There may have been a plot. Things smelled badly. Crime must be put down. The interests of society demanded that, otherwise the land would not be safe to live in. The defence spoke of "the loving husband." This loving husband! The man who, twenty minutes after his wife was burned to death, had got the frying pan and cooked himself a hot breakfast! It was said there was no blood. Somebody might have washed up the blood. Who put the sheet around Mrs. Lloyd? Adam Lloyd. He was cool and calm enough to do that. The defence, the Crown Prosecutor said, had said nothing about that sheet, but the jury must take that into consideration. The Crown Counsel said he would now leave the case with them. They had sworn to decide it fairly and honestly. Remember, it was a matter between them and their God.

The Crown Prosecutor's address, a very powerful one, was concluded at 10 minutes past 9, and His Lordship said he would not deliver his charge to the jury till the morning. Court then adjourned till 10 o'clock Friday morning.

Friday Morning.

The jury looked grave and thoughtful this morning, as they sat waiting for the Chief Justice to appear. They realized that the important case was now nearly "up to them." The gruesome relics were all piled up together in the middle of the space reserved for the lawyers, and everybody sat waiting for the curtain to go up on the last act in the Lloyd drama. Adam Lloyd came in, and sat nervously twitching his fingers, as had been his practice all through the trial. The Judge entered and at once began his charge.

THE JUDGE'S CHARGE.

The prosecution, His Lordship said, charged the prisoner with the wilful murder of his wife. The prisoner had been defended with great force and skill. The Chief Justice said he was sorry that the counsel for the defence had seen fit to express the suggestion that there had been a conspiracy on the part of the Crown to convict Lloyd. The Crown represents the people, the Government of Ontario was charged with the administration of justice in this province, they were placed in power by the people and the jury was simply a committee for them. He hoped the jury would not believe that a detective, whose reputation stood very high, would take part in a conspiracy, or that well-known and skilled physicians would give their professional opinions against the prisoner, whether those opinions were right or wrong. The Crown counsel and experts were simply there to present facts — to try and find out the truth. As to the actual facts, there was very little in dispute. They must consider the facts in the light of common sense. There were, the Judge said, three theories—accident, suicide and murder. Could it possibly be accident or suicide? If not, then the third theory became the proper conclusion, and the only conclusion. If murder had been committed, it could have been done by only one person. The Chief Justice put a supposititious case case to the jury: Suppose two men were in a room. One came out with a sword or dagger in his hand, dripping with blood; the other man is found stabbed to death. In that case they need not look for a motive. The Crown says they need not prove a motive in the Lloyd case. Large motives are not always needed, said His Lordship, "for the heart of man is deceitful and desperately wicked," and men are often found who, for trivial causes are capable of great crimes. There was some feeling on the prisoner's part about property, though witnesses said he had a kindly feeling for his wife. The witness Burleigh said Lloyd told him "his heart was scalded by women," which would indicate that there had been some differences between the prisoner and his wife. Deeding the property to Brickman, the Judge said, was a stupid and improvident arrangement. Such cases were always fraught with trouble. It was proven that there was dissatisfaction in regard to this arrangement. One witness said that, after the tragedy, Lloyd told him the property was his now, and he could do as he liked with it. Brickman was at the Lloyd house the Friday before the tragedy, after a load of wood. It was not unreasonable to suppose that Lloyd did not like his taking the wood. They could judge, by Brickman's evidence in the box, that he would not be a nice person to deal with. He had said he had no differences with the dead woman, still he afterward acknowledged that "she gave him a couple of digs," one of which was that his own wife's mother had to get food from neighbors. The case, His Lordship said, came closely to the prisoner. If they could feel reasonably sure that he committed the crime they need not look for motive. As to opportunity, the prisoner had it. The instrument which inflicted the wound might be found in any farm kitchen. The contest among the professional witnesses centred round the question as to whether it was or was not inflicted before death. In connection with this point a violent attack upon the professional witnesses for the Crown had been made by the defence. Drs. Johnson and McDonald, of Toronto, were men of large experience, and gave their evidence in a strong way. The question was, were the jury convinced by that evidence? All the medical men agreed that a wound inflicted before death might point to the theory advanced by the Crown. Drs. Johnson and McDonald were strongly of the opinion that the wound was inflicted before death. Dr Gibson, a defence witness, said it was either inflicted before or shortly after death. As to the question of bleeding, they must remember that Mrs. Wright had found blood at the back of Mrs. Lloyd's head. As to the wounds on the head being caused accidentally, the prisoner said, in his evidence at the inquest, that he had laid the body carefully on the floor, and that he had in no way inflicted any injury upon it. As to the burns, the Crown were not compelled to prove that they were made after death. It made no difference at all to the Crown's theory when they were made. As to the point raised by the defence, that the wound inflicted on the woman's head had not been sought to be destroyed by the fire, His Lordship said it was a fact that every criminal brought to justice always leaves something undone. No one knows what injuries were inflicted on the charred trunk of that old woman. There was no good evidence to show that the prisoner's hands were burned at all, though one witness said he saw a burn about the size of a pea on his wrist. The Judge again told the jury they must draw their own inferences as to whether it was accident, suicide or murder. Lloyd had told one witness that it was a mystery which he believed would never be cleared up. Later he had said that he believed his wife's clothing had caught fire while she was putting certain missing clothing in the stove. Was it possible to believe that the woman, if her clothing had caught fire from the stove, could have gone back to the chair, folded her arms peacefully and allowed the fire to consume her body? As to the idea of suicide. Brickman had insisted, when in the witness box, of speaking about old Mrs. Lloyd's alleged attempt at suicide, though warned not to say anything about it. He was not present when that alleged attempt happened. Could the jury bring themselves to believe that the old woman had put coal oil on her clothes and then burned herself to death? The burns on the chair showed there had been a fierce fire, and a person sitting in the midst of it must have suffered mortal agony. Professional men had told them that people suffering that agony found it impossible to keep still. They ran wild and tried to fight it. How, then, could they account for the woman's hands not being burned? Then there was the theory of death from shock, but that supposition did not help the prisoner at all. There was the case; they could adopt any course they wished. If the logic of the facts led them to think that Lloyd had committed the deed, they had only one duty. The prisoner's age had nothing to do with the case. The Crown Prosecutor, in opening the case, had said something about a verdict of manslaughter being possible. If the jury found that the old woman was killed in a sudden quarrel it would be lawful for them to bring in a verdict of manslaughter, but would it be logical? The law says every unlawful killing is presumed to be murder. The onus was on the defence to prove any mitigating circumstances. As to the responsibility which rested on the jury, the Judge reminded them that certain responsibilities rested on all connected with the court. Their responsibility was limited to bringing in a verdict in accordance with the evidence. As long as they rendered an honest verdict they need have no pangs of conscience. The Judge's responsibility was to see that the prisoner had a fair trial; the counsel were supposed to present the case fairly and honestly; the responsibility for the verdict rested on the jury alone. In conclusion His Lordship spoke of the testimonials to the prisoner's previous good character. Such evidence, he said, might not go far in some serious crimes, but in the present case he thought it was entitled to a certain amount of weight.

His Lordship spoke for an hour, and his charge was a masterpiece of logic, being eagerly and intently followed by all present.

The jury retired at 11 o'clock, taking the burnt chair and other exhibits in with them to the jury room.

A VERDICT REACHED.

At 12.15 the jury returned to the court room, and, in answer to the usual question, announced a verdict of "Not guilty."

"Not guilty of any offence whatever?" queried the Chief Justice, with the rising inflection.

"Not guilty," was the only answer.

"Adam Lloyd," said His Lordship, "the jury say you are not guilty, so you are discharged."

And old Adam Lloyd was once more a free man.

Old Mr. Lloyd's son, who is a resident of Detroit, Mich., has attended all through the present trial. It is said that he will take his father back to Detroit with him, and care for him in future.

ASTONISHING RESULTS

Follow Each New Discovery of Science.

The great strides that medical science has made in the last few years is due to the germ theory. When the germ of a disease has been discovered, the doctors have not been slow in finding a drug to kill it. In a few years, it will be rare to find a bald-headed man or woman. The falling out of hair is due to a dandruff germ; and now it has been discovered how to kill this germ. The remedy used is called Newbro's Herpicide. Its success has been marvellous. Not a failure has been so far reported. It is also a delightful hair dressing free from oil or sticky substances. Try it and be convinced of its actual merit. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

ROD AND GUN FOR APRIL.

The April number of "Rod and Gun in Canada," published by W. J. Taylor, at Woodstock, Ont., opens very appropriately with an exploration paper. Mr. James Dickson, of Fenelon Falls, tells of a four months' trip to Abitibi Lake and River and beyond taken at the instance of the Ontario Government. A fascinating and beautifully illustrated story is that dealing with the Wild Rice Harvest of the Mississagas, a peculiarity of Rice Lake, Ont., which every one interested in outdoor life should read. No sportsman should miss "The Best Old Dog in the Land!" told in touching verse by the Rev. C. F. Yates, and finely illustrated. New Brunswick is strongly represented in this number. Right across the continent to British Columbia the reader is taken, and told of a caribou shooting excursion which must make every sportsman wish he were able to duplicate that experience in his own person. Varied views of American sportsmen in Canada are given a place. The Automobile and Boating Departments are strengthened and many interesting particulars will be found in both; while there is a complete record of trap shooting in Canada for the previous month. Wide and comprehensive as is the programme set before themselves by the conductors of this Magazine this brief review will show how well they are attempting to carry it out, and how successful they are in maintaining the position of "Rod and Gun in Canada" as the leader in its special field.

A CHINESE EXPLANATION OF THE RECENT BOYCOTT.

No doubt the boycott was solely due to the stringency of the exclusion law; but the paramount object of the movement is to raise the Chinese people to an equal footing with any other people in relation with the United States, and not for securing the actual economic advantage of exporting laborers to America. It is for national right and dignity rather than for anything else. There are, however, more important points regarding this question that should be carefully examined: that is—first, the boycott has never been authorized by the Government; second, the boycott has never been carried out with any forcible or violent means. The Government has done nothing toward promoting the boycott. On the contrary, the Peking authorities have tried hard to advise the merchants to modify their disposition. But no Government in the world, however absolute it may be, has power to compel its subjects to buy goods from a certain country unless they are willing to do so. No doubt this disagreeable movement has been started by those who had personally suffered maltreatment under the exclusion law, or, rather, under the regulations of the Chinese Immigration Service Office. But there has been not the least sign of violence or force, as the boycott has spread through several provinces. It is purely a voluntary action of individuals. So long as there is no disturbance of peace, "boycott" is considered a legitimate movement by any civilized country of the world. It is a commercial design, and not a warlike scheme. It is an individual action, and not a national policy. There is, therefore, no good ground upon which the recent alarming news could be supposed to have been based.—From a "Chinaman, on the Chinese Situation," by T. Y. Chang, in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for April.

SAFETY.

Never in all the history of transportation has travel been safer than it is to-day. Seated in perfect comfort in any of the mile-a-minute trains of the Lake Shore Railway you are in less danger by far than was your grandfather in the lumbering six-mile-an-hour stage of a half or three-quarters of a century ago. Trains over this line are protected and guarded in a way that is but little short of marvellous. Every device that skill or money can provide is used without regard to the expense and in spite of the high speed—the fastest in the world—you are as safe here as in your own home. Combined with safety and high speed are luxurious comfort and punctuality, all combined to make a service unequaled the world over. See that your ticket reads "via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for full information to J. W. Daly, Chief Ass't G. P. A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G. P. A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. A Friend Told Me About
Bu-Ju
THE GENTLE KIDNEY CURE

Hundreds of people, who have been cured of Kidney Trouble by Bu-Ju, were first induced to try this wonderful remedy by friends who had themselves been cured. The sales of Bu-Ju are daily increasing, because everyone who takes them is benefitted—and these in turn, tell others. So the good news is spread.

Here is what a Picton man says about Bu-Ju:—

"I have used Bu-Ju with great benefit to myself, and cheerfully recommend to all who, I think, are suffering from Kidney Troubles and Rheumatism.

"I think Bu-Ju the best remedy made."

A LITTLE SONG FOR BED-TIME.

(Boston Courier.)

A little song for bed-time,
  When, robed in gowns of white,
All sleepy little children
  Set sail across the night
For that pleasant, pleasant country
  Where the pretty dream-flowers blow,
'Twixt the sunset and the sunrise—
  For the Slumber Islands, ho!

When the little ones get drowsy
  And the heavy lids droop down
To hide blue eyes and black eyes,
  Grey eyes and eyes of brown,
A thousand boats for Dreamland
  Are waiting in a row,
And the ferrymen are calling,
  "For the Slumber Islands, ho!"

Then the sleepy little children
  Fill the boats along the shore,
And go sailing off for Dreamland;
  And the dipping of the oar
In the sea of sleep makes music
  That the children only know
When they answer to the boatman's
  "For the Slumber Islands, ho!"

O, take a kiss my darlings,
  Ere you sail away from me
In the boat of dreams that's waiting
  To bear you o'er the sea;
Take a kiss and give me one,
  And then away you go
A-sailing into Dreamland—
  For the Slumber Islands, ho!

That pain in the Back is Kidney Trouble

GIN PILLS WILL CURE IT

A strain or severe cold, or a dozen other causes may have started it—but the Kidneys are at the bottom of it. Backache (especially in the "small" of the back) means Kidney Disease. Plasters and liniments give some relief, but they never cure. Lots of people, with swollen hands and feet, are treating themselves for rheumatism, when, in fact, their sick kidneys are causing the pain and swelling. GIN PILLS cure that pain in the Back every time, because they cure the Kidneys.

OTTAWA, March 17th, 1905.

I had the honor of being appointed assistant artist to the chief artist of London "Black and White" to accompany him three years ago to China to help him get pictures of the Boxer Uprising. That is a hard country on the kidneys. I came back very much troubled, and have been so ever since. My attention was called to Gin Pills, I have taken two boxes, and can positively say that I have never felt better in my life.

H. MANLEY.

If you have tried plasters, liniments and doctors, save your money and try GIN PILLS FREE. Write us your name and address, and in what paper you saw this offer, and we will send you a free sample box of GIN PILLS. These famous Pills for Sick Kidneys are sold by all druggists at 50c a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50.

CLASH AT LETHBRIDGE.

Non-Union Miner and Constable Fitzgerald Probably Fatally Hurt.

Lethbridge, Alta., April 6.—Yesterday some of the strikers came within the police pickets to persuade non-strikers to quit work. The police ordered them out, but the strikers refused to go, and when the police attempted to arrest them, 200 or 300 strikers came running down to aid their friends. As no officer was on hand to read the Riot Act, the police could not use their guns and a free fight followed. Several men were hurt. L. Albert, a non-striker, was struck with a stone thrown from the crowd, and it is feared he is fatally injured.

Finally the strikers were driven back, and two leaders arrested.

Wednesday night Constable Fitzgerald was probably fatally wounded when the houses of Joseph Oros and Steve Ungary, both non-union miners, were dynamited.

Cars Stoned At Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, April 6.—Trouble broke out again in Winnipeg last night, when, for the first time since the strike started, the company tried to run cars after dark. The first cars out after 8 o'clock were stoned, and motormen and conductors chased. The next two cars along Main street were stopped opposite the Strathcona Hotel. One car had two women in it, but the crowd gallantly left it alone and attacked the other fiercely, badly wrecking it. The company withdrew its few cars at 9 o'clock. One car was stalled near the C. P. R. station after being stoned by a mob, and it would have been burned if the police had not guarded it for several hours.

The mediation of clergy and city council has apparently failed and to all appearances the company is preparing for a long fight.

Propose Arbitration.

New York, April 6.—Arbitration is proposed by the anthracite miners, whose general scale committee held another session with the representatives of the operators in New York yesterday. The operators will answer on Monday.

Strikers Attack Factories.

Abbeville, France, April 6.—The striking locksmiths of Fressenville Wednesday sacked the residences of employers and foremen, set fire to the furniture, prevented the firemen from extinguishing the flames, and smashed the machinery and the factory windows. Reinforcements have been ordered to Fressenville.

In Darkest Africa.

A weird tale of witchcraft comes from the interior of Africa. A recent trial at the Lilongwe court proved that a native woman killed by a lion had been partly eaten by another native who was accused of impersonating the lion. The prisoner confessed freely that he had eaten of the woman's dead body, the excuse being that he had purchased from a "witch doctor" a medicine which enabled him to turn into a lion at will—in other words, to indulge in cannibalism in its lowest form as the mood took him.

A Waterspout.

A scientist says of a waterspout that passed over a certain district in France: "Its passage was accompanied with a sound which is described as resembling that of a battery of artillery drawn on the gallop over a paved street. At the base of an extended nimbus hung the reversed cone characteristic of phenomena of this kind. A strong wind was then blowing from the south-southwest. The waterspout was preceded by a storm and followed by a shower.".

AN ARCHDEACON'S VISIONS.

Strange Statements By an Anglican Church Dignitary—The Story of Sir George Colley.

Archdeacon Colley, rector of Stockton, Warwickshire, who has occasionally attracted public attention to his views and statements on the subject of spiritualism, which he unsuccessfully desired to expound before the last Church Congress, sends to The London Daily Mail a letter on "The psychical events that preceded, happened on, and followed" the death of His Excellency Gen. Sir George Colley at Majuba on this date, Feb. 27, 1881.

These circumstances, the Archdeacon writes, are of the most weird and wonderful sort. At the time of the tragedy he himself was in Natal and chaplain to Sir George Colley, who was the Governor of the colony.

Sir George and Praying Wheel.

In conversation with Sir George, before he started to meet the Boer invasion, the archdeacon mentioned some fear he had reason to entertain for his safety. Sir George, however, making light of the matter, playfully took up a Burmese curio—a praying wheel—and purposely turned it the wrong way, so that in Burmese and Chinese superstition the prayer, actuated backwards, might work a curse instead of supplicating a blessing.

"Early on the then fatal Sunday morning of Feb. 27, 1881, I, at the Deanery, Pietermaritzburg, awoke with a feeling of something dreadful about to happen, which feeling increased as the day wore on, to culminate in the sorrowful confirmation of my fears later when, leaving the cathedral pulpit at the close of the evening service to dismiss the congregation with the benediction, a hurried message came to me from Government House, saying Sir George Colley had that morning been killed at Majuba.

"The youth shot the Governor of Natal from close behind, the bullet smashing out through the forehead, causing Sir George Colley to leap high in the air with hands outstretched and arms uplifted, and fall the mangled corpse of what a moment before was a courteous, brave, chivalrous gentleman truly religious and righteous."

Scotch Woman's "Second Sight."

"At what was probably the very moment of this upleap and death spasm Sir George in psychic, materialized, instantaneous form, was physically, or with her Scotch gift of 'second sight,' subjectively, seen by a domestic, a native of Aberdeen, whose outcry thrilled with dismay and fear the household running to her help, foreboding the sad news which the evening of that same day was brought down from the front.

"The testimony, however, of this Scotchwoman of Aberdeen is so utterly impossible of putting into words without explanations recondite and of Yogi-philosophic teaching, that I must suppress it.

"But Sir George Colley's various appearances to me, and my son, and others, are less perplexing, as they have for the most part been on the lines of what is usual in spiritualism relative to clairvoyance, and subjective with those who are gifted with the 'discerning of spirits' and have what the Scotch call 'second sight.'

"It is, therefore, almost always in the way of 'a military man in high command having a hole in his forehead' that Sir George Colley comes thus to give proof of his identity.

Also Visited His Son.

"When this was the experience of my son he did not at first know who 'the military man with a hole in his forehead' was until I told him in detail of the far-reaching effects, physical and psychical, of the circumstances that concrete to history with the bare mention now of Majuba.

"He, however, now knows what it is that comes and gives proof of his identity. Yet to others, until I say who it is that comes to them. . . Sir George Colley (though an utter stranger to them at first) is still the 'military man, evidently killed in battle—having a hole in his forehead.'

"Hence last September, in a shop at Birmingham, into which I had casually gone to buy something that attracted my attention in the shop window, a stranger diffidently accosted me and whispered that there was standing with me at the counter 'a military man having a hole in his forehead, appearing to have been killed in battle.'

A "Seer" of Birmingham.

"In haste to catch a train to Leamington I could not then stay to question my informant, evidently a 'seer,' but found when next in Birmingham that he was a working spectacle maker and a poor relation of the people of the shop.

"Moreover, only last Tuesday, Feb. 20, while at breakfast with two friends at Leamington—both clairvoyants and knowing nothing of what I have written—one of them was suddenly 'controlled' by the late Governor of Natal, who sent a most important message to my son, now quartered at Jubbulpore, the truth of which, when I have answer from India, I may some time speak."

Jerome K. Jerome on Marriage.

"No man," said Jerome K. Jerome, "should marry unless he is by nature a 'good provider'—unless without a twinge he can hand forth money right and left. Some men can in a sunny, cheerful way spend $10 or $15 on a dinner in a fashionable restaurant, while they become morose, sour and fearful for the future when they are obliged to give their wives a dollar or two for the day's meat. These men should remain single. Otherwise they will make such husbands and fathers as my old friend Crust. Crust's daughter said one afternoon in a tone of unutterable surprise, 'Papa went away quite gay and cheerful this morning.' Mrs. Crust made an exclamation of annoyance. 'That reminds me,' she said, 'I forgot to ask him for any money.'"

For Tired Eyes.

Take a cup brimful of water. Add sufficient salt to be just perceptible to the taste. Hold your eyes to the water so that your lashes touch it, then wink once, and the eyes will be suffused. Do not wipe them. This so refreshes the eyes that they feel like a new pair. Do not forget the good old rule. As soon as you "feel your eyes" stop using them. By following this treatment very little time will be wasted waiting for tired eyes.

HIS AUNT HANNAH

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

Aunt Hannah Burt was rich, and she was also called eccentric. She was so called perhaps because she had never married and permitted her husband to squander the fortune that came to her from her father. There was nothing eccentric about her adopting Ray Wheeler when he was fifteen years old, because he was one of her nephews.

At the age of nineteen he entered college, and three years later he graduated as a lawyer. He was taking a rest and looking around previous to setting up for himself when Aunt Hannah discovered something that made her shiver in horror. She had heard no complaints of the young man's conduct while he was at college, and no policeman had ever appeared at the house to warn her that Ray was whooping it up when away from her motherly influence.

The young man had a caller one evening in the person of an old classmate. They smoked and talked. They talked about straight jabs, upper cuts, right hand swings and other things belonging to the Greek language. The door of the room was open, and Aunt Hannah heard them. Later they ascended to the garret. She crept part way up the narrow stairs and saw and heard. She saw them don boxing gloves and punch each other around the big room in fiercest fashion and also make use of terms she had never heard before, not even in connection with state prisons and ward caucuses.

When the visitor had departed Ray was summoned to the frozen presence of Aunt Hannah, who began:

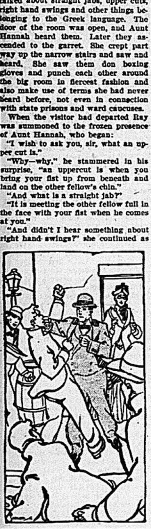
"I wish to ask you, sir, what an upper cut is."

"Why—why," he stammered in his surprise, "an uppercut is when you bring your fist up from beneath and land on the other fellow's chin."

"And what is a straight jab?"

"It is meeting the other fellow full in the face with your fist when he comes at you."

"And didn't I hear something about right hand swings?" she continued as she sat in judgment like a member of the supreme court.



BEGAN KNOCKING THE LOAFERS INTO THE GUTTER.

"You swing with your right, this way, and sometimes knock the other fellow's head off."

"And what were you and that young man doing up in the garret?"

"We had the mitts on for a few rounds, to keep in practice."

"Mitts? Mitts?"

"Boxing gloves, you know."

"Ah! You learned this at college, did you? While I supposed you were putting in all your time at your studies you were hard at work learning to be a prize fighter, eh? Instead of graduating a lawyer, I have, it seems, added to the number of loafers who pound each other about for money."

"Come, now, aunt," protested the young man, "but boxing is a part of the gymnasium work at every college."

"If I had known that they trained young men to be prize fighters you would never have gone to college. Never invite that or any other young man here again. I want those boxing gloves burned up this very evening."

"But, aunt"—

"Not a word, sir! If any one had told me that you were a thief I could not feel worse. This prize fighting business must stop right here. If there is any more of it I shall alter my will in favor of those nephews who are gentlemen, even if they don't know any too much."

The gloves were handed over to her and sent downstairs to be cremated in the furnace, and the visitor did not call again. What did happen was that Ray Wheeler attended the nearest gymnasium instead. It was an almost daily thing with him to keep up his boxing practice, and Aunt Hannah would have been none the wiser but for a talebearer. Her coachman wandered into the place one day and saw Ray hard at work, and an hour later the spinster was in possession of the fact. She felt that she had been defied and her wishes passed by, and she was very sober and serious as she faced the young man.

"Didn't I tell you how horrified I was?" she demanded.

"Yes, but"—

"And that I wanted no prize fighters in my family?"

"Yes, but you see"—

"And that if there was any more of it I should change my will? If you learned that at college you must have learned other objectionable things. I haven't heard you swear, and I don't know whether you chew and drink or not, but I am ready to believe you do. I had built up great hopes around you, and to have them shattered in a moment is something hard to bear."

"But, aunty, if only you would let me explain," replied the young man. "One needn't be a prize fighter or a tough because he knows how to box. It is taught one so that he can defend himself if need be. You see"—

"A gentleman always carries a cane to defend himself with."

"But a cane may be forgotten. Suppose I was going down the street and was accosted by two or three"—

"I can't possibly suppose any such thing. A loafer recognizes a gentleman when he sees one and lets him alone. Ray, you may go to a hotel for two or three days. I want time to think things over. When I have come to a decision I will send you word. No matter what else I decide on, you will get enough ready money to set you up in a saloon and as a prize fighter. I shall expect to see in the papers some morning that the Yale Kid has knocked some other fighter senseless and won a purse."

Ray Wheeler went without making further protest. He had been at the hotel for two days, when he took a walk through a tough part of the city. He was dodging children here and besotted men and women there and keeping as clear of pushcarts as he could, when he came upon a broken down carriage in the street.

He recognized the driver as the man who drove for his Aunt Hannah, and a moment later saw the woman herself standing in a doorway. She was on one of her charity rounds. Half a dozen loafers had taken advantage of the accident to hem her in and menace her. She had given up her purse, but they wanted more. They were referring to her as "old gal" and almost tearing the gloves off her hands when there came an interruption. The adopted son put up his dukes and began knocking the loafers into the gutter. He cleared a path to Aunt Hannah and bid her be of good cheer, and then a pretty little play occurred. Three or four of the gang came back for more and got it. There were three of them sleeping on their backs when a policeman finally pushed his way through the crowd and exclaimed:

"Bully f'r you, young man! I'd be willing to give up a hundred bones if I could handle my dukes like that."

Aunt Hannah was escorted to the repaired carriage, and she motioned to Ray to get in beside her. She hadn't a word to say until she reached home and had her bonnet off. Then she turned and asked:

"Ray, did you upper cut them?"

"Yes, aunt."

"And give them straight jabs?"

"For sure!"

"And deliver right hand swings?"

"A few of them."

"I—I guess you'd better stay home, now that you are here, and if you want the use of the garret I shan't have any objections, provided you don't make too much noise."

A Lesson In Patience.

There are two women in the waiting room at the railway station. One of them is tall and thin and of the appearance which is sometimes described as nervous, yet she sits with folded hands, placidly gazing at nothing. The other woman is plump and pretty. By every evidence of feature and build she should be joyous and contented, yet she is fidgeting around. She cannot sit in one place more than two minutes. She gets up and walks to the door and then to the windows. She keeps looking about incessantly, and from time to time she sighs anxiously.

"May I ask," inquired the tall, thin woman, "if there is any worry on your mind?"

"Yes, there is," responds the plump, pretty woman. "I am waiting for my husband."

"But that should not worry you. How long have you been waiting?"

"It's—let me see—what time is it? It's forty minutes now."

"Forty minutes? My dear woman, I've been waiting for my husband for forty years, yet you see I am not one-thousandth as nervous as you."—Memphis News-Scimitar.

Professional Women Thieves.

The ingenuity displayed by professional women thieves in concealing stolen jewels on their persons makes it imperative that the women searchers employed in police stations be alert and intelligent. An important duty of a searcher is to examine the mouth of a prisoner. The other day, after this had been done and the thief even made to raise her tongue, a valuable ring was seen to drop from her lips while she was asleep. Women who wear pompadours frequently use them as hiding places for jewelry, while the lining of jackets and shoes is a popular place for concealment. Needless to say, the position of searcher is not an altogether agreeable one, and perhaps the duty she dislikes most, owing to its monotony, is that of sitting up with prisoners whom it is deemed expedient to watch. Women prisoners when once inside the station are said to be rarely violent. For instance, the genuine professional pickpocket seldom gives the slightest trouble. She knows she is caught and makes the best of a bad job. "But," observed one searcher, "a drop of drink do change some of 'em wonderful."—New York Tribune.

CARE OF THE FACE.

How It May Be Improved In Texture and Complexion.

If more faces were really clean a great improvement both in texture and color of complexions would be noticed. Even the woman who does not patronize the beauty doctor can make use of up to date methods of cleansing her skin. After a day spent in grime and smoke the skin is in a condition that is beyond the reach of water, and unless one is careful as to soap and softeners it may do more harm than good. A good cleansing cream is a necessity, and it should be applied after a day spent in the open air and after leaving it on a little time washed off with a soft rag. After the cleansing cream a good astringent lotion may be sprayed in, as this completes the cleansing process and freshens one more than would be believed. The comfort of a clean face quite apart from its looks is altogether delightful, and, as one patron of the beauty parlor declares, "It makes me feel rested and refreshed and in a good temper."

When the pores are filled with a black accumulation of long standing steaming is necessary, and this is also something that one can do without professional help. Rub in the cleansing cream, and after it has been on for a little while lay a towel over the face that has been dipped in water as hot as you can possibly bear, holding it first over one part of the face and then the other.

The face especially is in need of treatment of this kind after exposure to strong winds, which dry and crack the skin and put in many a wrinkle. Many a bad complexion is from neglecting the proper cleansing processes, and the improvement both in color and firmness that results from keeping up the habit of cleansing it properly almost is past belief.—Exchange.

CRYSTAL WEDDINGS.

An Appropriate Way to Celebrate These Anniversaries.

The "crystal wedding" commemorates the fifteenth anniversary. Write your invitations with a very pointed stick wet with mucilage, then sprinkle "diamond powder," which is pulverized mica, over the paper and let it stand until the mucilage is dry. Dust it off carefully, and you will find that the "diamond powder" has stuck to the letters. Have as much glass on your table as possible. Very pretty dishes of pressed glass can be bought for a small amount. Make a horseshoe of white glass beads and hang it over the table and run long strings of white glass beads from the chandelier to the edge of the dining table. Buy small white paper heart shaped boxes and fill them with candy. On the lid of each box write your husband's and your initials and the year of your wedding—1890 and 1906—and sprinkle this over with the pulverized mica, says the Philadelphia Press. You could give one of these boxes to each of your guests as souvenirs of the occasion.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

A little turpentine added to the bath water is said to be good for rheumatism.

A pinch of salt in a glass of warm water is good for bathing weak or tired eyes.

To treat a cut finger brush across the cut with collodion and keep the lips of the cut together till the collodion dries.

Underdone beef and mutton are not unwholesome, but underdone veal or pork is very unwholesome indeed and often causes illness.

It is well to remember that a fresh cold in the head may sometimes be broken up immediately if treated early by snuffing warm salt water up the nose from the palm of the hand.

A good poultice for a boil is made as follows: Two tablespoonfuls of flaxseed flour, a lump of lard as large as a walnut and one white onion. Mix with sweet milk, stew until the onion is soft and apply warm.

How She Conquered.

Miss Josie Wanous, the only woman pharmacist who runs her own drug store in Minneapolis, has made a little fortune out of a shampoo bag of her own invention. She has refused $25,000 for the patent. She was the daughter of a Bohemian farmer, and the first money she earned was $2 a week at the stationery counter of a village drug store. She studied pharmacy and got her license and then encountered the obstacle which rises before most young women endeavoring to enter the professions. No pharmacist would employ her as clerk. She worked at other things until she acquired the capital to start a tiny store of her own and now has a handsome and commodious store, in which she employs twelve assistants, in one of the best sections of Minneapolis.

The Girls' Den.

To girls who work or who are trying to improve themselves in any way a den is a necessity. This is a place where work may be left about without fear of its being spirited away by a tidy maid, where every sort of industry may be carried on whole heartedly and without fear of interruption. The mother of the family should consider the den as the property of her daughters and only visit it at their urgent invitation. It is well for the different members of a family to keep some place to themselves, for the mother's boudoir to be a sacred place to which the husband and children feel it an honor to be admitted, for the daughter's room to be a sweet, homely place where the whole family, if the girl wishes it, may assemble when the day's work is done.

"OLD R. AND R."

By M. J. PHILLIPS

Copyright, 1905, by E. A. Whitehead

The Continental Express company is a great institution. It does business in every state between the seaboards, and its employees, who are messengers on trains, local agents, route agents, office men and drivers, number thousands. The Continental continues to be great and to pay dividends because it takes a particular interest in the goings in and comings out of each of its employees. It demands services of them and loads responsibilities upon them at which bank presidents would shudder. The company's motto, if a thing so thoroughly useless were ever an appendage of an enterprise so utilitarian, would be, "The Continental expects every man to do his duty."

The corporation comes nearer to representing abstract justice than the supreme court. Good men are advanced in precisely the degree they deserve advancement. Bad men are punished.

"THROW DOWN THAT SACK!" HE COMMANDED HOARSELY.

The Continental stands ready to spend $5,000 in convicting the man who steals a hundred. Employees who have given the best years of their life to its service are pensioned. The only touch of human nature about it is the present of a five dollar bill which, with a formal and frosty little letter, is sent each Christmas to every employee who has worked for the Continental a year or more.

The spirit and essence of the Continental is its book of "Rules and Regulations." The tome is a ponderous mass of bound circulars a foot thick. Every fortnight or so another printed yellow folder is issued, bringing the express world up to date, and this is duly read by agent or messenger and fastened into the covers.

Somewhere in the musty depths of the "Rules and Regulations" are instructions covering every possible contingency, from handling Egyptian mummies to the feeding of live stock in transit. No matter how absurd an employee's procedure in an emergency, when viewed in the light of common sense he has only to quote "Rules and Regulations" correctly. He is sure of forgiveness. And the man who is versed in "Old R. and R.," as the book is called, is held by his colleagues in much the same half envious regard with which ministers look upon a brother who knows his Bible exceedingly well.

Booth, money clerk at Morgantown, had a special name for the canvas covered volume—"The Book of Revelation." The agent, Hornbeck, who had grown gray in the Continental's service, chided him one day for his flippancy.

"I tell you, Bill," he said seriously, "'Old R. and R.' can't take you far astray any turn of the road. You could use it as a guide and be a pretty good Christian. Doesn't it tell you to be strictly honest, to be temperate and keep good hours, to affiliate yourself with some church and attend divine services on Sunday, to dress neatly and as well as your income will permit, to treat everybody with politeness, 'for we must depend on rich and poor, white and black, for our business?'"

"That's true, all right," replied Bill, impressed. "I never looked at it that way before."

"And," chimed in Bobby Taylor, the driver, "'Old R. and R.' makes you insure your life before you can work for the company. That isn't all of it either. Away back in Series D, No. 439, dated June 1, 1893, I found a paragraph advising employees to marry."

"Funny you'd stumble on to that, hey, Bobby?" queried Booth, with a grin and a wink at Hornbeck, whereupon Bobby, blushing like a schoolgirl, hastened back to his wagon.

Bobby was the best driver the Morgantown office had. He did oceans of work every day, collecting parcels and making deliveries. Besides, there were four round trips between the office and Morgan Junction, a mile away. The railroads got no nearer town than the Junction. He did all this and hankered for more, anxious for promotion, for promotion meant more money, and more money spelled matrimony. Bobby and Marion Hackett had it all arranged. When his salary touched $60 a month—a driver gets $45—or when he had $300 saved, then they would adventure down life's stream together.

"For, you see, Marion, $45 a month isn't much, although it would buy coal and something to eat," Bobby would explain. "But, darling, I don't want you regretting having married me right at the start. I'm going to have enough so we'll be comfortable."

And Marion, with fond belief in Bobby's financial acumen, would lay her curly head on his shoulder and agree, satisfied this was right, for hadn't Bobby said so?

Bobby was thinking up ways and means one winter's night as he turned his horse's head homeward with the load of freight from the eastbound train. The first quarter mile of the journey, between solid rows of lumber piles and lighted by a single arc light, was lonesome. Bobby often thought that if a holdup for the valuable money packages he carried were ever attempted it would be on this stretch of narrow, deserted street.

The possibility of such an occurrence was always present. Tonight it became a reality. A man, a dark cloth tied over his face, suddenly sprang out of the shadow and seized plodding old Dick by the bit. Something glittered in the hand which he pointed at Bobby. "Throw down that sack!" he commanded hoarsely. "The red way bill stuff," as the valuable packages are called, was in a sack swung over the driver's shoulder.

Bobby's reply was to reach for the Colt's thirty-eight, which drivers of the Continental carry. The stranger fired, and Bobby felt the crease as of a hot iron right above his right ear. The bullet had barely missed him. The holdup man went down next instead, a bullet from the Colt's in his shoulder. He lay helpless on the soggy snow until the police came and took him away.

A route agent came to Morgantown next morning, talked with Hornbeck and went away. Route agents are a power, and Bobby was impressed and flattered when this particular member of the guild shook hands and jokingly called him "Deadwood Dick."

A week later the sequel of the attempted holdup was written. A red way bill package, containing five $100 bills, came for Bobby from Continental headquarters. A commendatory letter which accompanied it quoted a certain ancient circular far back in "Old R. and R.," which provides that the Continental employee who captures uninjured the criminal that attempts robbery shall receive $100; the sum shall be $500 if the thief is wounded and captured.

Hornbeck says that letter, which Mr. and Mrs. Taylor prize most highly, is the first ever sent out from headquarters consciously or unconsciously humorous. "Old R. and R." makes no allowance for humor, but the epistle advised Bobby, among other things, to get married. And Bobby was planning the honeymoon while he read it.

English Towns.

That there are many instances in England of two or more towns enjoying the same name is a fact that nobody can well help knowing, but probably few people are aware of the very wide extent to which this duplication of names prevails. Newton seems to hold the same rank among places as Smith among individuals, no fewer than seventy-two towns and villages in England alone bearing this name. By including the Newtowns, obviously the same name with a slight difference in spelling, the total is raised to little short of ninety. As every town must have been a "new town" at some time or other it shows a great lack of inventive genius among our ancestors who had the naming of the towns. There are sixty-eight places named Sutton. Our ancestors seem to have found the four points of the compass of great service in the nomenclature of their towns, for besides the Suttons there are fifty-one Westons, forty-nine Nortons and seventeen Eastons. To these last should be added thirty-eight Astons, another form of the name very common in the west of England.—London Chronicle.

A Domestic Treasure.

Sir Squire Bancroft in proposing the health of the bishop of London told a story in his inimitable way. A charming young damsel came to London to visit an aunt, who probably came originally from Scotland, for when the young lady was leaving in a cab for an evening party she said: "Now, mind; don't you pay him more than 1 shilling. It's his legal fare." Arrived at her destination, the young lady sprang out, handed cabby a shilling and bounded up the steps of the house.

"'Ere, I say, miss!" called cabby. "Kin I ask you a question?"

"Yes, you may."

"Well, are you married?"

"No," she cried, indignant. "I'm not!"

"Well—well, somebody's a-goin' to git a treasure, for I never seen a gal as could make a bob go further or do more 'ard work nor you, miss!"—London Mail.

The Right Doctor.

In Haverhill, Mass., according to the Boston Herald, there used to live two doctors of the same surname. Dr. Benjamin E. Sawyer was a physician with a large practice. Dr. Nathan Sawyer was a veterinarian. A man named Jones, after a week or more of imbibing, was very sick, and his wife, becoming alarmed, sent the hired man for Dr. Sawyer. The hired man brought the wrong Sawyer—the veterinary. Dr. Nathan explained to the wife that he was skilled only in the diseases of horses, cattle and other animals. "I guess you can prescribe all right in this case," replied Mrs. Jones. "Jones is a jackass."

OBEDIENT EGGS.

You Can Make Them Stand Just How and Where You Please.

Let us tell you how you may have a little fun. Puncture the shell of a raw egg with a pin, and through the hole thus made extract the contents. When the shell has become thoroughly dry pour fine sand through the pin hole until the egg is about one-fourth filled. Then seal up the hole with white wax, and your imitation egg will be as natural in appearance as a real one.

The next time boiled eggs are served at breakfast, substitute your sand egg for the one that you take from the dish, and tell your companions that you are going to make the egg obey your slightest wish. You may make it stand on the edge of a knife or on the rim of a glass, no matter whether you put it sideways or endways.

POSING THE EGGS.

The only precaution necessary is to tap the egg gently every time you desire to place it in any position, so as to make the sand settle at the bottom, and the weight of the sand will keep it as you wish it to be. This is called the obedient egg.

Now let us tell you how to make the disobedient egg, with which you may have even more fun than with the obedient one. Make the hole in the shell large enough to allow you to introduce half an ounce of fine shot, together with a little powdered sealing wax.

This done, seal up the hole neatly with white wax and then warm the egg gently over the fire. This will give you a fixed center of gravity in the egg, and no matter how you may pretend to place it the weight of the shot, held in a mass by the sealing wax, will drag it away from its position just as soon as you release it.

FUNNY PEOPLE.

They Tattoo Their Bodies and Walk on High Stilts.

The first travelers who visited the Marquesas islands (in the Pacific ocean) found them peopled with a magnificent race of athletes. Their clothes lasted until death, for their costume was the skin with which their Creator covered their bodies. These islanders beautifully decorated themselves with tattooing, from the crowns of their heads to the tips of their toes. As they are an enormous race this was no small undertaking. Their chiefs were chosen on account of their size, and several of them have measured six feet ten inches in height.

These people are the greatest stilt walkers in the world. This seems strange, for they are big enough without the aid of stilts. On stilts they execute performances which would drive the stilt walking clown at the New York Hippodrome out of his mind with envy. On them they run races, jump, dance, and a great mark of politeness in the islands is for one stilt walking savage to trip another one up—one should say down, for the tripped person usually comes down with a vengeance.

The stilts the Marquesans use are a little different from those of our boys. In place of straps the block of the Marquesas stilt curves over so as to hold the foot more securely.

Can You See Air?

If air cannot be seen, what is it that we see quivering above a field on a hot summer day, or even above a hot stove in the house? That question has puzzled many a head, both old and young. The answer usually given is that it is heat, but heat cannot be seen, and therefore it is not heat.

The explanation of the phenomenon is really quite simple, like all such things, when we hear it. As a matter of fact, it is air that we see quivering, but heat makes invisible. The quivering is caused by the upward passage, close by each other, of small currents of air of different temperatures, in which the rays of light are irregularly refracted, and this makes the currents visible.

Conundrums.

Why is the port of Plymouth like a very wonderful phenomenon in acoustics? Because it includes a part of the sea called the sound, and that is the only sound that you can see.

Why are bakers very self denying people? Because they sell what they knead (need) themselves.

Penny Sad and Penny Glad.

When a little penny's dingy
  And a dull and ugly brown
From the fingers of the butcher boy
  And every one in town,
I feel sorry for the penny,
  And I say it is too bad—
Don't you think the little penny must be sad?

Then I rub it on the carpet
  With all my main and might
Till it gets all warm and shiny
  And so pretty and so bright
That I'm sure it has forgotten
  All the troubles that it had—
Don't you think the little penny must be glad?

—Stella George Stern in St. Nicholas.

FINE NECKWEAR.

Laundering Hint For the Girl With a Limited Income.

The girl with a limited income must spend some of her after work hours in fixing up her little wardrobe and in washing and ironing all the neck pieces and the like which do not need the professional laundress' strenuous treatment. And there's many a woman, too, who prefers to do up all those extra little fine pieces, which she would not care to trust to the laundress.

A certain woman in the latter class has her washing day just like the Monday's programme in the kitchen, but hers is conducted on a much smaller scale. She has a tiny washboard, a doll's clotheshorse, a little bottle of bluing and a basin with running water, where she may fix up her soapsuds (she uses soap jelly) and warm water. Like the experienced laundress, she sorts her pieces, doing the most delicate and the least soiled first and changing the water frequently. The ordinary method of wringing is too much of a strain for these fine materials, so she has her own way of doing it that saves her pieces greatly. She rolls a piece into a tiny ball and presses it firmly between her palms until all the water runs out. When they are all washed she rinses them again in cool water.

The ironing board is then brought out, covered with a bit of flannel and an outside piece of muslin. The iron is heated with a little alcohol lamp in a moment. Of course she does not use much starch.

THE BUXOM WOMAN.

How She Should Dress to Improve Her Appearance.

Everything in the shape of high throat jewelry, such as dog collars, should be avoided. In fact, the less jewelry worn in the shape of necklets the better. It may perhaps be accepted as one of the compensations of the stout that they are mostly blessed with good necks and shoulders, albeit their throats are inevitably short.

An appreciable share of the work toward suppressing or disguising the size is effected by properly cut petticoats, shaped to fit around the base of the corsets and held in that position by a long waisted hook in front. The flow from the hem must commence quickly, otherwise there will be a tendency to define the figure below the waist too prominently.

The greatest assistance is offered to a short, podgy foot, than which nothing is less addicted to grace, by a well cut boot with a prominent toe, the heel only moderately high. It is high heels and a rounded toe that make for smallness.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

Always quarter and core apples for cooking purposes, never slice them.

Uncooked figs are aperient, but during the cooking process lose this property.

If you have a tendency to biliousness or gout, or if your liver is too inactive, eat freely of carrots.

Celery contains sulphur and is excellent either steamed or raw for sufferers from rheumatism.

Very acid beverages and acid fruits are in general best avoided or taken only in moderation by those whose skins give them trouble, but of fresh vegetables and good ripe fruit they can hardly have too much.

People with weak digestion often complain that stewed fruit does not agree with them. This is very often the result of eating bread with the fruit—a thing never to be recommended even for people with healthy digestions.

Passing of Platters.

Fish and game platters have almost become obsolete. The magnificent fish and game plates, decorated with signed paintings by the foremost artists of Europe, are no longer sold in sets, accompanied by a platter, but are sold by the dozen.

"Why is that?"

"Oh," said the dealer, "because it is not customary now to carve on the table at a dinner of any importance. Nearly everything is served a la Russe, meats, etc., being carved by the butler. There is, therefore, no place for a platter."

This effects a modest saving of several hundred dollars in many cases, as this specially signed china costs scarcely less than solid gold.—Philadelphia Press.

A Wet Pack.

To make a wet pack strip all bed coverings from the mattress or overlay. Now spread upon this a counterpane, over this two blankets, and upon these a sheet that has been dipped into cold water and lightly wrung. Let the patient be quite unclad. He must lie down on the wet sheet, and have this tightly folded about him, leaving only head and face uncovered. The other wraps are now folded around him one by one. Over all more blankets may be placed. The patient may be kept in the wet pack for any period between twenty minutes and two hours. Many doctors recommend that on being freed from the wraps the patient have a cold bath. The wet pack is very useful in feverish and inflammatory states.

Water Hard and Soft.

All waters drawn from the earth contain salts. When these reach a certain percentage the waters are styled "hard." Below this they are termed "soft." Opinions differ as to the benefit or harm derived from drinking hard waters, but two facts are beyond all dispute—the softer the water the better is it for domestic cleansing, whether house or person, and that hard waters injure the skin.

On the Fence

By DONALD ALLEN

Copyright, 1906, by E. C. Parcells

All the farming population for five miles around said that it was a good match, that between Burt Adams, son of Deacon Adams, and Eunice Taylor, daughter of the Widow Taylor. The young folk had known each other as children. The parents approved the engagement, and the deacon went as far as to take his son by the hand and say:

"My son, she is a fine girl, and you will make no mistake in marryin' her. I shall feel toward her as my own daughter."

The engagement was announced and the wedding day set. Everything went well until the deacon's brother out in Wisconsin died and left him a legacy of $14,000 in cash. The deacon, who had lived without any of the luxuries of life, was stunned for a time by the size of the legacy. He felt that it made him one of the millionaires of earth. The money would have made some little difference to any man, no matter how level headed.

"We are on a different plane now," he said to his old wife, "and we must conform to the new circumstances. You won't wear calico any more and shall have a hired girl, and I shall do no more work except boss the hired man."

"And what about Burt?" was asked.

"He must go to college and become a lawyer or doctor."

"But he and Eunice are to be married, you know, and I don't believe he'll want to put it off."

"Look here, ma," said the deacon after thinking for awhile, "we can't let Burt throw himself away on no such girl. It might have done passably well when we were poor, but now we can buy out the whole county and have money left. He can't afford to tie himself to any such wife. To begin with, she don't look aristocratic."

"But do we?"

"Of course we do. Any one would know to look at us that we had blood and money. In the second place, she has no style about her."

"And have we got?"

"Heaps of it. In the third place, she hain't got no eddication."

"But you and me never went to anything better'n district school," protested the wife, "while Eunice attended a seminary for two whole years. I thought she knew more'n all of us put together."

"But she don't. At the seminary she jest chawed gum and played the pianner. We hain't been braggin' around any, because that ain't the way of the Adamses, but we've got eddication 'nuff to pass in any crowd. When I talked with the governor at the county fair two years ago I felt perfectly to home. I must have a talk with Burt."

"I don't believe he will give her up. You know how obstinate he is about some things. If Eunice would give him up"—

"By thunder!" interrupted the deacon as he brought his fist down on the kitchen table with a bang.

"What is it?"

"I've got an idea, ma—one of the brightest ideas I ever had. Keep mum. Don't say a word. I'll tell you all about it tomorrer or next day. Don't say a single word to Burt, and don't go around lookin' as if you had somethin' on your mind."

"You—you hain't goin' to do anything desperate?" stammered the wife.

"Of course not. I'm simply goin' to work out my idea, and when I get ready to tell you you'll say I am about as sharp as they make 'em. S-s-sh! Keep mum!"

The above conversation took place one evening, and at 9 o'clock the next morning the deacon was knocking at the door of Widow Taylor's farmhouse. Eunice had driven to the village to do some "trading," and the fat and motherly widow was just finishing up the last of her morning's work.

"Why, deacon, is this you?" she asked as she answered the knock and held out her hand. "I hope none of the folks are sick?"

"No. The folks are all well."

"None of the cows ailing?"

"Nope."

"Well, you ought to be thankful for that. Won't you come in and sit down?"

"No, I guess not. The fact is, widder, I've come over to say somethin' to you."

"Well, say on."

"It's about Burt and Eunice. You know I am rich now. Got $14,000 in cold cash—$14,000. I'm the richest man in Plum county."

"Well?"

"Waal, I want to say that I want Burt to go to college and become a great lawyer or doctor. I don't want him to marry for three or four years yet, and when he does I'd like the woman to be—to be"—

"To be somebody better than Eunice Taylor," finished the widow as the deacon hung fire.

"I hain't sayin' that exactly, but you know that the eagle and the crow can't mate."

"I've heard that they couldn't. Is that what you came to say?"

"Yes, that's about all."

"Then you have finished and can go. Good morning, Deacon Adams."

The widow turned away, and there was nothing for the deacon to do but go. He had got off better than he hoped for. He had expected to have a row, and he was elated that the widow had taken the matter so coolly. In coming he had come by the highway, but in returning he decided to take a short cut across the fields. To do this he must climb the fence of the widow's barnyard, and when he reached the top rail he sat for a moment to look around, slipped and found himself caught by a stout sliver and hanging head downward. He couldn't lift himself up, and the sliver wouldn't give way to his wiggles, and there was nothing to do but call out. He called lustily, and in about five minutes the widow appeared.

"Is there something you forgot to say?" she asked as she came up.

"You see I'm caught on the fence," he replied.

"Oh, that's it? It's singular what things happen to rich men. If any one had told me that a man worth f-o-u-r-t-e-e-n thousand dollars could be caught by a sliver on an old rail fence I should have said it was impossible. Are you enjoying the novelty of the situation?"

"Say, widder, I've got to ask you to help me out of this scrape. The blood's rushin' to my head till my ears roar."

"But as long as it's blue blood it won't hurt you. Take it calmly, deacon. All the wriggling around you can do won't tear the cloth nor break the sliver. I'm going back to the house."

"What! You goin' to leave me here hung up like this?"

"I'm going back to the house to skim the milk and get ready for churning."

"But I shall be a corpse in ten minutes more. My head's almost bustin' now."

"I shall be back in a quarter of an hour. While I'm gone you do some thinking. Think about Burt and Eunice. Think about that f-o-u-r-t-e-e-n thousand dollars; think what a fool you are trying to make of yourself. You've got the swell head, deacon, and the rush of blood will be good for it. Because you've got $14,000 you are ready to swell up and bust and make yourself a laughingstock. Get hold of yourself and get your common sense back."

"Don't leave me, widder!"

But she did. She went to the house and dallied around for a long twenty minutes and then returned. The deacon had been thinking. He was red in the face, and his nose was bleeding, and there was a roar like Niagara in his head.

"Widder," he said as he became aware that she had returned.

"Well?"

"I've got f-o-u-r-t-e-e-n thousand dollars, and I'm goin' to give Burt and Eunice $3,000 of it for a marriage present!"

"Very nice, I'm sure," replied the widow as she brought the ax and chopped the sliver and let him tumble to the ground.

Fetichism—New Style.

The case of a German student who is reported to have been arrested for stealing plaits of human hair is an example of what has been called fetichism, a not inapt use of an old term for an old tendency. A certain deceased English nobleman of the present generation who used to pocket the silver spoons of others when he went into society was never believed to do so in order to enrich himself. He was wealthy. A few years ago in a Manchester court an elderly man of many convictions was before the judge. He was not a mercenary thief. He had always stolen one particular thing, to the exclusion of all others—shovels. Similarly, one remembers a woman thief, with a long record of previous convictions, whose theft was always of one kind, and that not of a remunerative description. Her fetich was newly washed clothes hanging upon a line to dry, and she never tried to possess herself of anything else. Fetichism is not confined to criminal psychology. There seems a strain of it in the normal mind. A distinguished university graduate and traveler told me that he found fetichism so universal that much of his recreation in going through the world lay in a constant attempt to discover the fetich of each person he met.—Manchester Guardian.

The Bahamans.

A most curious utensil of a Bahaman dwelling is a big cement oven, like a cone, at the back of the house. In this the family bread is baked. Bahamans are physiologically starved, and their thin, attenuated forms show it. An unvarying diet of fish and fruit is not nourishing enough, and the fact speaks for itself in these islanders. The white Bahamans are homely and sallow unless burned so that complexion is a thing of the past. They rarely—some never—wear shoes; hence feet in these latitudes are feet and not merely the ends of legs. I used to gaze in admiration at the feet that daily and nightly visited our schooner. The owners of the appendages could walk where a shod foot could not bear to tread. The skin becomes tougher than leather. Black Bahamans are the finest specimens of the negro race to be seen outside of Africa—strapping fellows with magnificent arms and chests, but they are dreadful beggars and dreadful liars.—London Chronicle.

Birch Bark Shoes.

Shoes and other articles besides baskets and cabinets are manufactured from birch bark by the Russian peasantry. The bark from which these articles are made is from the inner skin of the Russian birch tree, common in almost all parts of the empire. It is gathered spring and fall, and the process is a very simple one. An incision is first made around the trunk of the tree, and the peasants have a knack of tearing or unwinding the bark from the starting point, which gives them a strip of even width that they wind into a ball and keep through the winter until it is dry enough to use. It is then made into shoes, baskets and other useful articles. The bark shoes are universally worn by the Russian peasantry. Other shoes used in winter are made of sheep's wool. These are manufactured by itinerant cobblers who travel from house to house, using the peasants' own materials.

SUPERFICIAL SENTIMENT.

Secret of Power Lies in Intensity of Emotion.

Superficial sentiment is without vital influence. The secret of power lies in the intensity of emotion, but especially so in poetry, art and literature. By no hocus pocus can artists and writers adequately depict what they do not feel. There should be a thermometer of temperament as well as for temperature. Feeling and emotion have their degrees. We are serene when our feelings are in the temperate zone, indignant when we pass eighty-three, furious when we reach blood heat, mad at boiling point. When feeling falls below 50 we become indifferent, and when it reaches freezing point we are heartless. An emotion that does not attain the seventy-sixth degree is hardly worth recording. At summer heat the rarest flowers begin to bloom and nature becomes poetic. While the temperate is the proper sphere for pure reason and scientific observation, it is rarely, if ever, proper for the highest achievement in any art. In the world of art imagination and feeling are not content with a serenity that touches the borders of indifference. The creative instinct is never effective unless at a certain pitch of enthusiasm. It is the sharp, clear, brilliant current of thought that electrifies the brain. But an idea is worthless unless we can find a form to hold it. In the best work idea, form and feeling appear to the beholder as one. An electric bolt seems a cold thing, yet a stroke of lightning will consume more at one flash than an ordinary fire would consume in an hour.—Francis Grierson in Critic.

GETTING THE NEWS.

Method Adopted at the Outbreak of the Revolutionary War.

In contrast to the workings of the newspaper of the day and of the rapid transmission of tidings without the aid of even a wire to guide the message is a document printed in the Berkshire Courier at the beginning of the Revolutionary war. But evidently people were as eager then as now to hear the news.

"For the Purpose of getting Speedy and Certain Intelligence from the Army at Boston. We the Subscribers hereby promise and agree to Ride from this town to Tyringham or Sheffield by Turns so as to bring Intelligence from thence each Day (the Sabbath excepted) and to Report the same at the House of Mr. Josiah Smith—And in Case no regular method is come into for bringing the News to Said Tyringham we promise to bear our proportionable part of the Expense in procuring Intelligence from Springfield twice in each Week—Witness our hands this 3rd Day of May 1775."

Following this agreement is a list of days, with the names of the citizens who were to be riders. Jacob Van Deusen, who agreed to be the first man to ride to Tyringham or Sheffield, was to go for it on Monday, May 8, and Mark Hopkins was to follow on Wednesday, the service from that time on alternating, except as to the Sabbath, which compelled a no news interval of two days in the week.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MISS ANNE LEARY.

A New York Woman Who Is Famous For Her Charities.

Miss Anne Leary of New York is a wealthy woman of whom it may be said that her life work is charity and philanthropy.

So great and so far reaching has been the charitable work of Miss Leary that Pope Leo XIII. in recognition of it created her a comtesse of the papal states, and the proudest title she owns today is that of "Comtesse Anne Leary," bestowed upon her by the pope for her charitable work among the poor.

For many years Miss Leary's Lenten sewing class has been a social charity, entrance to which is largely sought by the most exclusive women in New York. Here society sews and turns out hundreds and hundreds of garments for the poor in the hospitals and on Blackwell's and Ward's islands.

MISS ANNE (COMTESSE) LEARY.

The sewing class works only during Lent. The poor need clothes all through the year. In order that her work shall not flag, shall adequately fill the end for which it was started, she employs nuns in the poorer convents to sew constantly and supply the incessant demands.

Miss Leary is constantly aiming to improve the condition of the needy in the hospitals and in the poorer quarters of the city.

Her charities are practical. The poor are naked; she clothes them. They are sick; she tends them. They are depressed; she cheers them. They are dying; she ministers to them. Those who are needy and who can and are willing to work she pays to work for their needier brethren. She stimulates them to be self supporting. She trains them to this end. She raises them. She never pauperizes them.—New York Herald.

One Woman's Advice.

"If a wife would keep her husband her lover, let him miss her now and then," is the advice of a worldly wise woman. "Men get tired of their wives just from seeing them round so much, the same face at breakfast 365 times a year, the same face at dinner year in and year out. Neither realizes what the trouble is, and the wife, as often as not, thinks it is her fault and prods herself into greater conscientiousness, greater fidelity. Stuff and nonsense! Let her pack her grip and go off for a holiday. Give him the jolt of finding that he must eat his dinner alone once in awhile. The indifferent attitude toward the wife—the taking her for granted—it is this which, unguessed, unseen, lies at the bottom of much of the domestic friction of the day. In nine cases out of ten the woman is its victim; but, on the other hand, it is generally her fault to begin with. These self effacing, meek, ultra conscientious little wives—oh, how much they have to answer for!"—Exchange.

Wall Decoration.

In decorating the walls of a room the first point to be considered is whether they are to form a background for its contents or to be in themselves its chief decoration. In many cases the disappointing effects of wall decoration are due to the fact that this important distinction has been overlooked. In rooms that are to be hung with prints or pictures the paneling or other treatment of the walls should be carefully designed with a view to the size and number of the pictures. Pictures should never be hung against a background of pattern. Nothing is more distressing than the sight of a large oil painting in a ponderous frame seemingly suspended from a spray of wild roses or any of the other naturalistic vegetation of the modern wall paper. The overlaying of pattern is always a mistake. It produces a confusion of line, in which the finest forms lose their individuality and significance.—From "The Decoration of Houses," by Edith Wharton and Ogden Codman, Jr.

Things Girls Should Know.

Girls should know that the home kitchen with mother for teacher and a living, willing daughter for pupil, is the best cooking school on earth. That "the most excellent thing in woman"—a low voice—can be acquired only by home practice. That true beauty of the face is possible only where there is beauty of soul manifested in a beautiful character. That the girl everybody likes is not affected and never whines, but is just her sincere, earnest, helpful self, says the Manchester Union. And, finally, that one of the most beautiful things on earth is a pure, modest, true, young girl—one who is her father's pride, her mother's comfort, her brother's inspiration and her sister's ideal—which we should try to be.

Homemade Oilcloth.

A good floor covering may be made from an old brussels carpet. Nail it loosely wrong side up to an attic floor and paint with a thick coat of linseed oil and burnt umber. Let it dry thoroughly and then cover with a coat of good varnish. When it has stood for a week or more it can be scrubbed and washed like any oilcloth. Tack it closely where it is to be used, for it need not be taken up in many years. As the paint and varnish wear off renew them and thus it will last four times as long as common oilcloth.

Prize Cleaning Recipe.

The English Society of Arts offered a prize for the best process of cleansing silk, woolens and cotton fabrics—one that would not change their color or injure them in any way. The winning recipe was as follows: Grate two good sized potatoes into a pint of clear, clean, soft water. Strain through a coarse sieve into a gallon of water and let the liquid settle. Pour the starchy fluid from the sediment, and it is ready for use. Rub the articles gently in the liquid, rinse thoroughly in clear water, dry and press.

The Wife's Name.

The assumption by the wife of the husband's name is, in this country at least, merely a social custom, a custom of such universality, however, that few would care to disregard it. It is in no way required by law. A woman after marriage has a right to retain her maiden name if she desires so to do, although she seldom or never does. In fact, a person may go by any name he or she chooses, provided a new name is not assumed for the purpose of defrauding some one else.—St. Louis Republic.

The Wedding Ring of Today.

The wedding ring of today is a shallower circlet than its predecessor of a decade or two ago and allows for the wearing of other rings on the same finger with more artistic results than formerly. Some matrons who acquired their third finger circlets under the old regime are having them cut in half, wearing one of the sections themselves and presenting the other to their husbands. A jeweler of Manhattan has had several orders for this wedding ring operation this season.

Measles and Scarletina.

An easy way of distinguishing scarletina from measles is to draw the back of a finger nail pretty firmly across the eruption. If scarletina, a white line will result, and this will remain for one or two minutes. No white line will appear if the test be made in a case of measles. It is very necessary to distinguish between these two disorders. A mild case of measles may be treated by domestic means. A case of scarletina demands the presence of a doctor.

Let the Baby Handle Things.

It is the business of the baby to become acquainted with everything in the world, and the baby that does not want to grab and handle everything it sees is not normal. The wise mother lets the child feel and handle whenever it is possible the objects in a room until it is perfectly satisfied, and then cleverly removes them if it is possible to break or damage them.

The Double Chin.

There is no astringent that will reduce double chin, but hard massage will accomplish it. The strokes should be from the point of the chin toward the ears and from the chin along the under jaw. The movement must be hard enough to wear down the flesh and should be done nightly for ten minutes.

The Gloves.

A woman who is careful of her hands must be careful of her gloves, for this is most important. If they are tight, they ruin the shape of the hand; if they are badly cut, they give a common aspect to the whole appearance, and such gloves are the dearest in the end.

Benzoinated Face Tonic.

A benzoinated face tonic is a delightful addition to the bathroom. It is quite easy to make. Take a big bowl of warm water and put twelve drops of benzoin in it. If your face is rough, add a pinch of borax and bathe the face daily in it.

The tops of wardrobes and cupboards that do not reach to the ceiling should have papers laid over them, not only to keep dust from sifting down, but to lighten the monthly house cleaning.

Nail biting can be cured by will power alone in older people, as it comes from nervousness. With children dip the ends of the fingers in quinine or a little extract of quassia.

It takes only five minutes to change wet boots and stockings, but it may take ten months to get over a cold caught by not changing them.

Don't wash your hair on a damp day or you cannot dry it at all, and damp hair is always dull hair.

THE GHOST OF A CHANCE

By Martha McCulloch-Williams

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastment

"Everybody else is going," Selina said, with a sigh. "Oh, dear! I wonder why we have to skip all the good times."

"It is in punishment for our uncommitted sins," Bess answered, with a toss of the head. "All our sins must be uncommitted. I'm sure we've been brought up more strictly than ever nuns were. Sometimes when I think over it all I get fairly afraid for us two. We've been so proper from our cradles—we must break out after awhile."

"Hush! Aunt Wilton would have a fit if she heard you," Selina said. "Do you think she was ever young, Bess? I can't fancy her less than sixty and severe, yet I do believe she means only to be kind and really wants us to be happy."

"Yes, in her way, which isn't mine nor anybody else's," Bess broke out passionately. "Her way is to have everything just so 365 days in the year. We have all sorts of material good things—we eat well, sleep well, dress well—but no liberty to get the good of them. How many times did we wear our best frocks last summer? Not once! And it's going to be the same this season. People never ask us to things any more because they know we won't come."

"I don't mind that so much as the flowers. Shouldn't you like, just once, to run riot in the garden, pulling whatever you liked?"

"You heretic! Aunt Wilton would have serious doubts as to your sanity if she heard that. I think she loves flowers, not because they are flowers and beautiful, but because they are her own"—

"The same as her nieces," a deeper voice said from an ambush of lilac hedge. Next minute the hedge shook violently. It was old and gnarly, being a party hedge and therefore beyond Wilton control. The end of the shakings was a young man, slim and merry eyed, who bowed very low to the two young women, then said deprecatingly: "Don't freeze me because I eavesdropped. I know how bad it is, but really this time the end justifies it. I'm a committee of one, self appointed, to find out just why the nicest girls in town stay out of everything."

"Will you listen?" Bess adjured Selina, whose eyes were dancing, though her face was preternaturally grave as she answered. "Everybody overlooks Joe Hartwell's fibs because he fibs so nicely."

Hartwell laughed. His father being Aunt Wilton's lawyer, he knew the Ford girls, Aunt Wilton's nieces, better than anybody in Caswell town. It was a knowledge that ran back to the mud pie period, although the Fords knew no more of mud pies and their making than could be gathered from watching him enviously through crannies of the hedge.

Now, for two years he had been wondering how they had escaped their bringing up. Selina, he was sure, was full of mad longings for life and freedom. About Bess he was not so sure. She sang and laughed like a human sunbeam—sang and laughed herself into the deepest depths of his heart. Therefore he resented bitterly her isolation. The sisters would some day inherit Aunt Wilton's more than comfortable fortune. It galled him to think that people would say Bess had married him through lack of other lovers; maybe also that his father had encouraged his client to keep her heiresses so secluded out of regard for the interests of his son. Beyond all that, though, was the rebellion against thus winning by default. How could Bess be sure she really loved him when she had had no chance of measuring him against other lovers?

It was with a hope of giving her that chance he had asked his chum, Dennison, for a month's visit. Dennison was handsome, witty and winning. His coming, duly advertised, had set social Caswell all a-flutter. There were already things planned for all the first fortnight. Selina and Bess had been discussing the most spectacular of them, the lawn party at the old Vernon place. It was to come off by moonlight, aided and abetted by Japanese lanterns. There would be dancing, of course, and supper in the big hall of the deserted mansion. Everybody was to go in costume and masked. Except for that, Selina and Bess might have had faint hopes. But Aunt Wilton's face was flint toward masking. It savored to her so much of acting and the theater.

If Hartwell had known that—but speculation is idle. He looked blank indeed when Selina let him see how the land lay. "And I got it up mostly so you might dance your fill," he said sorrowfully. "How I wish I could wash the slate clean and begin all over! Such a great lark I hoped we might have, and now to think"—

"Such a great lark we will have!" cried Bess, springing up and whirling about in front of the garden bench. Hartwell stared at her. Selina looked puzzled. Bess stopped short in her dancing to put her finger on her lip and say, nodding sagely between the words: "Promise not to faint when you see us, Joe. I think we're coming, though we have just the ghost of a chance."

* * *

The lawn party had to take its full moon on trust. So many clouds sailed in the sky the lantern lights shone all undimmed. The thick, lowery night kept the crowd close about the house. It was big and substantial, and, if the worst came in the shape of rain, da ing could go on inside. True, a f nervous persons said that would ha ly do. Of course it was all idle t None the less there had been talk o Vernon ghost.

Two ghosts indeed—those of the V non twin sisters, who had loved t same sweetheart and had refused marry him out of regard for the oth They had lived to a great age, fadi and falling at last like withered ro there in the family mansion. They h been dead twenty years, with none b good words to follow them. If th did not sleep peacefully in their sun graves, then were pure lives and go deeds vain. Notwithstanding the was the talk, now one, now anoth glimpsed them walking hand in ha up the broad stairway or flitting dusk through the overgrown rose g den.

Dennison heard all this avidly. liked whatever was old world and u usual. Perhaps that was why, wh the rain at last sent everybody scurr ing within, he drew a little apart fr the merrymakers and stood staring the dim vista of the great stairwa And thus he was the first to see tw wraiths, slim and girlish, floating rat er than walking, glide out of the upp dusk and, linking arms, fall into th swing of a waltz. They were all vaporous white—swirls of it cover them from head to foot. They ke perfect time and moved so in unison was like the rhythm of one soul rath than two.

Dennison felt his heart beat faste All the rest had accepted the veile dancers as but new come maskers. nodded toward them, saying in Har well's ear: "Don't you hate monopoly Let's break that one up."

Then in hurried whispers he tol what he had seen. Hartwell suppresse a whistle, then said with a quic breath: "I'll go you. Take the talle one"—

"No; I'm going to dance with th other. Ghostlike masqueraders don' demand formal presentation." Denn son whispered back as he shot out t intercept the whirling visions. In wink he had his chosen one fast, an Hartwell perforce took the other. To gether they made the round of the lon hall—not once, but many times, th ghost dancers moving so lightly the did not even breathe more quickly, al though their mortal partners at las were panting.

"How did you think of it? How dared you do it?" Hartwell asked as he whirled and wheeled. The wraith in his arms answered evenly: "We've been doing it this long time. It was a sort of outlet. Selina first thought of it after we had found the lost key to the big gate, but she never would have had the courage to do it if I had not egged her on. She wouldn't dare be here tonight if I had let her think. We have always gone home before 9 o'clock and climbed in by the library window. This time we shall have to be ghosts until morning. We can get in on the heels of the milkman, and of course we shall run away before unmasking time. What would Aunt Wilton say if anybody told her we had been here?"

"Probably disinherit you. I should like that," Hartwell returned. "Then you wouldn't think, you couldn't, I am fortune hunting when I say I love you"—

What more he might have said nobody knows. Just then there came wild cries of fire and after them general panic. Despite the pouring rain, helped by the raging wind, the old house burned like tinder. Hartwell had for a moment left Bess. When he looked for her he saw two vapory creatures fleeing up the stairway.

Bess and Selina, madly bent on avoiding discovery, meant to vanish that way and escape up the back stairs by which they had come. A wall of flame blocked them. As they ran back from it they heard a shout: "Stand still! We are coming!" Then, up the long main stair, came Hartwell and Dennison, to rush down half a minute later through licking flames, each with a girl's inanimate figure crushed against his breast.

Right there was settled the question of a double wedding. Even Aunt Wilton insisted on it. Her nieces, she said, needed stronger guardians. Both matches have turned out to be ideal, so much so that Hartwell and Dennison say they shudder to think they gained such happiness by barely the ghost of a chance.

Shopping in Shanghai.

It must be lots of fun to go shopping in China. Here is the Shanghai Times, for example, with a dry goods advertisement that is well calculated to make any frequenter of the bargain counter wild to rush into action. It tells how various kinds of goods are going to be sold at sacrifice prices. You can understand in a minute that this particular store must have been swamped with custom when the Chinese bargain hunters read about the things that were marked way down.

Among the shirtings we notice the following varieties of attractive goods: Gold sun, Sing Sing soldier man, five sister, nine old man, eighteen student, painted three ladies, Chin Chin New Year, red emperor's birthday, brave soldier, blue four sister. Two squirrels jeans were going at an awful sacrifice. As for white goods, look at this list: Painted Buddha, painted grandfather, red double lighthouse, green three student. Black goods were offered at prices that would simply compel you to buy some of these: Three rabbit, joss birthday, Tin Chan's marriage, two war hammer, stag and monkey, teacher son, autumn festival, flower basket.

It just shows what bargains may be picked up if one will only keep one's eyes open.—Minneapolis Journal.

ADAM LLOYD IS ONCE MORE A FREE MAN.

Jury in Murder Trial Brought in a Verdict of "Not Guilty" After an Hour and a Quarter's Deliberation--Able Addresses by Counsel--Judge's Charge Was a Masterpiece of Logic--Mr. E. Guss Porter Highly Complimented For His "Masterly Defence" by the Chief Justice--Closing Scenes of an Interesting Trial.

Adam Lloyd, the aged Huntingdon man charged with the murder of his wife, is once more a free man, having been acquitted by the jury after a trial which lasted over three days. The case was given to the jury at 11 o'clock, and they took an hour and a quarter to reach their verdict. It is whispered that the acquittal of old Mr. Lloyd may not mark the end of the celebrated Lloyd case, but nothing more definite than that can be gleaned from those who are in a position to know.

Thursday Afternoon.

When the court reassembled Dr. Boyce again entered the witness-box.

In cross-examination by Mr. Porter, the witness said that, after death, the blood became thickened, rather than clotted. The witness thought that the clotted blood found mixed with old Mrs. Lloyd's hair was consistent with the theory that the wound was made before death. Lawyer and witness fenced very skilfully, but Dr. Boyce made few admissions that the clever lawyer was trying to extract from him. He admitted, however, that the redness of the skin under a blister would show that the burns had been made before death. He could not, however, recall any blister on old Mrs. Lloyd. Dr. Boyce did not know anything about broken glass having been in the coffin. He thought that any doctor who had made a fairly careful examination of old Mrs. Lloyd's body should have discovered the cut over her left eye the first time he examined her. The burns upon old Mrs. Lloyd would cause considerable shock, but he did not think there would be any shock till after there had been some pain. The shock might cause the death of the subject. It was a common thing for women to be burned to death by their clothes igniting, even though every effort had been made to extinguish the fire. The witness verified a statement made by him in the Police Court, namely, that the burns and death were close to each other.

Re-examined by Mr. Meredith, Dr. Boyce said he had no doubt the cut and bruise on Mrs. Lloyd's head were produced before death.

DR. JOHNSON.

This witness is Chief Coroner of Toronto, and had been practising since 1872. The description given of the wounds on Mrs. Lloyd's head, the witness said, showed that they had been made before death. The bruises under the cut were strong evidence of this. The clotting of the blood was evidence that the blood was still alive and warm when the clotting took place. The wound over Mrs. Lloyd's eye was inflicted before death.

The witness gave his evidence in a very graphic way.

The blow which caused the cut over Mrs. Lloyd's eye, the witness said, probably caused insensibility. The cut and bruise were probably caused by the same blow. The witness doubted if a fall could cause the cut and bruise found on Mrs. Lloyd's head. The putrefaction of Mrs. Lloyd's left eye, the witness thought, was evidence of the severe bruise caused by the cut on the left eyebrow. Dr. Johnson said he thought the burns were caused before death. It was utterly impossible that the burns found on Mrs. Lloyd could have been caused by the mere combustion of her clothing. There must have been some other substance used. There had been a good deal of fire. The witness examined the burned chair, and said that the woman who was burned in it had leaned to the left side; that was easy to see. In regard to the dead woman's hands and arms not being burned, the witness said it was plain she was not conscious, otherwise her hands and arms would have been burned. That was plain. There had been a fierce fire in the chair. The witness did not believe it would have been possible for anybody to take a person out of a fire such as the condition of the chair disclosed without suffering some damage to his own hands and clothing. The fact that a person repeated herself, as told of by Mrs. Wright, would not indicate imbecility. Without some inflammable material, such as turpentine or coal oil, it would have been impossible to inflict the burns found on Mrs. Lloyd.

His Lordship asked Dr. Johnson if, in his opinion, it was possible for persons to saturate their clothing with coal oil and deliberately commit suicide by burning themselves to death, under the circumstances found in the Lloyd case. Dr. Johnson said he did not think so. The record of such cases showed that such persons generally ran wild. The pain was so intense that they could not sit still.

Cross-examined by Mr. Porter, the witness said he had given his evidence entirely upon the post mortem and what he had heard witnesses say. Dr. Johnson said a wound made not later than ten minutes after death would have the same characteristics as a wound made before death. The edges of the wound would be everted the same as though the wound were made during life. If Mrs. Lloyd had lived any length of time after the cut on her eyebrow was inflicted, there would have been some swelling, the witness said. He was certain that the burns were produced before death; the cut and bruise might possibly have been made within ten minutes after death. Burns, the witness said, sometimes caused cracks or fissures in the skin, but the skin and flesh must have been burned into a mass like leather before this could be looked for. Such a crack or fissure could not be looked for in the midst of normal tissue. Shock from the fright caused by fire sometimes caused death. Pain attendant upon it might also cause death. He would look for death in such a case, rather than insensibility. The witness thought death would be instantaneous. Looking at the chair produced, he could quite understand the woman's hands being in the condition represented. The fact of old Mrs. Lloyd's lungs having been found to be spongy, signified nothing to the witness. That was the condition in normal deaths.

DR. McDONALD.

Dr. Albert A. McDonald, of Toronto, had been practising since 1872. Had heard the post mortem report read. Believed the wound over Mrs. Lloyd's eye was inflicted before death. The eversion of the edges and clotting of the blood, also the condition of the tissues, convinced him of that. The wound on the dead woman's eyebrow, he felt convinced, would have been caused by some blunt instrument. The blow would have been a glancing one. He could not conceive the wound's having been caused by a fall. The bruise on the other side of the head, he believed, was caused by the victim being thrown against some hard substance. He did not think the burns could have been made by the combustion of the woman's clothes alone. The use of coal oil would make it possible. He did not believe Mrs. Lloyd was conscious when she suffered the burns found. Considering the character of Mrs. Lloyd's burns, he did not believe they could possibly have been inflicted unless some combustible had been poured over the woman's clothing. The spongy condition of the lungs was a normal condition. The thin red line on the tongue indicated, to the witness, no proof that flames had been inhaled. Dr. McDonald said he thought, from what had been said of the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's forehead, that it was made before death. He thought it was unlikely that Mrs. Lloyd had died from shock.

Cross-examined — Witness would not admit that it was impossible to tell the difference between a wound made before death and one made directly after death. There was a lot of skilful sparring between lawyer and witness over this point. Dr. McDonald said he was of the opinion that the woman was either insensible or dead when the burns were inflicted. Shock would have a more serious effect upon Mrs. Lloyd than upon a strong woman, owing to the weak condition of the dead woman's heart. The fact of the smell of coal oil not being apparent in the Lloyd home, the witness said, did not signify much, as the odor of burning flesh was very pungent, and would overcome the odor of coal oil.

Dr. Noble was called, and Mr. Porter objected to his evidence, on the ground that the statute only allowed the evidence of five experts, which number, he claimed, had already testified.

Mr. Meredith claimed that Drs. Yeomans, Mather and Boyce were not called as experts.

The evidence of Dr. Noble was not given.

DR. YEOMANS RECALLED.

Dr Yeomans testified that he had taken the cracked pane of glass out of the coffin and placed it carefully on the top of a rough box near by. The glass had done no injury at all to the dead woman's face.

"That's the case for the Crown," said Mr. Meredith.

The Defence.

DR. DOLAN.

Dr. J. F. Dolan had heard the post mortem report read. Had also heard the evidence of Drs. Boyce and Mather. Dr. Dolan said he believed the wound over Mrs. Lloyd's eye might as well been made after death as before death. The burning, the witness believed, by what he had heard and read, took place before death, or, at least, very shortly after. He judged this by the line of demarcation. The parchmenty appearance of the skin would indicate that the burning was post mortem. From the description given of the wounds in the post mortem, Dr. Dolan said he did not think any doctor could tell by that whether it was inflicted before or after death. Witness did not attach much importance to the red line on the tongue. He thought it would be quite possible for a woman to sit in the chair and sustain such burns as Mrs. Lloyd had, providing the garments worn had been worn for any length of time. The witness said he had, as an experiment, taken an old flannel shirt, wrapped it round a piece of beef, and set fire to it. In 20 minutes the beef was quite badly charred. The witness said that, in his opinion, it was quite possible for Mrs Lloyd to have sustained her burns without any coal oil being used. It would be possible, the witness said, for the wound on old Mrs. Lloyd's head to have been made when old Mr. Lloyd threw his wife's body on the bed. Her head might have struck on the edge of the bed. Witness did not believe the wound on Mrs. Lloyd's head could be caused during life unless there was considerable flow of blood. The absence of swelling around the wound, the witness said, led him to believe that the wound was either made before death, or very little force was used. Weak clotting of the blood, Dr. Dolan said, would be consistent with a wound after death. The conditions of the wound, as described, the witness said, made him think it was inflicted after death. The witness did not think the skin would contain sufficient elasticity to cause a wound to open, longer than 25 minutes, but thought it would for that long. There was, Dr. Dolan said, no possible way of determining whether such a wound as that found on Mrs. Lloyd's head was caused by a blow or a fall. The blotches on the dead woman's face, he thought, indicated ante-mortem burning.

Cross-examined by Mr. Meredith—The witness said he had conducted post mortems on three persons burned to death. He would expect to find no difference between bruises made before death or shortly after. The witness was questioned very closely in regard to the beef experiment, and again described it fully and very graphically. It would, he thought, require a fierce fire to burn the chair. The burning of the woman's garments might have caused the burns on the chair.

"Could you tell whether those burns on the chair were post mortem or ante-mortem?" said the Crown Prosecutor, and everybody smiled.

Again Dr. Dolan said he believed Mrs Lloyd's injuries could have been inflicted without any inflammable substance being used.

Re-examined, the witness said he knew of a party being burned to death with only a nightgown on. There was coal oil in that case, however, as a lamp had exploded.

DR. W. J. GIBSON.

Dr. Gibson had practiced over 20 years. Had had extensive experience in cases of burning. Had heard the post mortem report. He believed the wound over the eye was either made post mortem or shortly before the woman's death. If the wound over the eye was made before death, the witness believed there would have been very considerable bleeding. Nothing he had heard would be inconsistent with that theory. Putrefaction of the body would cause liquifying of the blood. Dr. Gibson said he believed the burns on Mrs. Lloyd's body were inflicted before death. The evidence, he thought, showed that conclusively. It was possible, the witness thought, that the wounds on Mrs. Lloyd's head were caused by her being pulled out of the chair and striking on the floor. The fact of there being no swelling on the wound, no discoloration and no blood, would lead him to believe that the victim was insensible or nearly dead. It might have been inflicted either shortly before or after death. There was considerable similarity between ante-mortem and post mortem burning. There might be some connection between the wound over the eye and the burns. The presence or absence of blisters proved nothing to his mind. Death might have been caused by shock, but there would be a period of unconsciousness before death ensued in the case of old Mrs. Lloyd. The position of the dead woman's hands, the witness said, were perfectly natural, he thought, under the circumstances. The sponginess of the lungs, the witness thought, was consistent with death from suffocation. He did not think the conditions under the wound, as described by witnesses, could be directly traceable to the wound on the outside. This was a startling statement. In the opinion of the witness the body would retain its elasticity for perhaps 15 minutes. It depended somewhat on the cause of death. A blow inflicted after death might cause discoloration of the skin.

Cross-examined, Dr. Gibson said that, in his opinion, the blood would flow very freely if the wound on old Mrs Lloyd's head was made before death. The blood might have been darkened considerably by mixing with the black on the woman's face, so that, possibly, it might not have been noticed by the people who washed her face.

J. LESTER BRICKMAN.

This witness was the son-in-law of the dead woman, Mrs. Lloyd. He had been at the residence of the prisoner since he was charged with the crime. He identified the portion of board which was in court as having been taken from the floor in the Lloyd house, rather in front and to the left of where the chair was setting. There were burned spots on the floor in front of the chair, the same as the spot on the piece of floor produced in court. The largest burned spot was to the left side of the chair. Witness got to the Lloyd house about 12 o'clock on the day of the old lady's death. Lloyd and his wife were on good terms, so far as witness knew. The prisoner bore a good character, "not very easy to get mad." The prisoner, so far as witness knew, had always made the same statement in regard to the tragedy.

Cross-examined — Witness explained what he called the burnt spot on the piece of board. Could not swear how many burnt spots there were on the floor round the chair. Witness' wife had suggested that a coroner should be sent for. She wanted him to get Dr. Hudson. Witness thought it was an accident, but thought perhaps an inquest was necessary, "to clear the law." Brickman admitted being at the Lloyd place on the Friday before the tragedy. He arrived there about 3 p.m.; at that time the old lady was well. He went after a load of wood. Witness said he had no trouble or jangling with the old lady. At the inquest the witness' wife said her husband told her, on his return home, that her mother "was giving him digs all the time." Still he swore now that the old lady was perfectly friendly with him. Witness said he was not at Lloyd's on Saturday night or Sunday. There was no trouble between the old lady and him over the property. It was not true that he had abused the old lady "ridiculous" on the Friday before tragedy.

W. P. HUDSON.

Mr. Hudson had known the prisoner for 35 years and upwards. He had always borne a good reputation.

WILLIAM GILLESPIE.

This witness lived east of Roslin. Had known the prisoner "rising" 40 years. He had always borne an unsullied character.

WM. SHILLABEER.

Had known the prisoner for 30 years. Had never heard anything against him.

MR. BRICKMAN AGAIN.

The witness said Mrs. Lloyd was not right in her mind before her death. He knew she had attempted suicide. The old lady told him that night, when he came home, that there were more ways than one for a person to take their life. This was, the witness said, after old Mrs. Lloyd had tried to cut her throat with a file.

$17,000 IN 26 MONTHS

"I would not say."

"You would not say, and you the supervisor of the agents of one concern, became the supervisor of the same agents in regard to the other. You get an overriding commission of $17,290, and you ask us to believe that it does not belong to the York County Loan?"

Intends to Keep It.

"I intend to keep it," said witness.

"You intend to keep it," said Mr. Curry. "Well, I think you ought to give it over to the York Loan."

Books had to be fetched before witness could give any definite information regarding his salary. It appeared that on January 1, 1904, his salary was increased from $30 a week to $57 a week.

"I venture to say," said Mr. Curry to the witness, "that you will never have the same opportunity of earning the same during the rest of your natural life."

The witness admitted that the Toronto Life had built up a nice little business without impairing its capital.

Never Before.

"You have never before heard of a company that had a York County Loan to fall back upon?"

"No," admitted the witness.

"That is right," said Mr. Curry. "You will never have a York County Loan again. I think that the people of this country have had a sufficient lesson, until a new generation spring up that know not Joseph."

The court laughed heartily, Phillips appearing to enjoy the humor immensely.

Joseph Barrett gave brief evidence before the court adjourned until today. He gave an account of the dealings his wife and he had with Phillips, whereby an agreement was entered into for a loan of $212,000 for the construction of works for the Southern Light and Power Co. at Port Credit.

BRITISH DEFEATED.

Natal Field Force Attacked and Routed By Rebellious Natives.

Greytown, Natal, April 6.—The colonial field force, which was congregating at Umpanza, 12 miles northwest of Greytown, for operations against the insurgent chief, Bambaata, the deposed regent of the Greytown District, has been compelled to abandon its laager, after heavy fighting, and retire to Greytown.

A portion of the force, sent to rescue the women and children isolated at Keate's Drift, succeeded in so doing, but while returning was attacked by rebellious natives. A running fight was kept up for six miles, the Zulus continuing the pursuit until within a mile of Greytown. Three of the colonial police were killed and several were wounded. The remainder are safe at Greytown.

The police report that the rebels are in strong numbers and flushed with victory, and the officials fear further excesses. A strong force of artillery, infantry and mounted men moved out of Greytown yesterday to operate against the rebels.

The British field force at present only numbering a few hundred men, will be strongly reinforced during the next 24 hours. The bulk of the reinforcements sent from Pietermaritzburg and Durban have arrived, and will join Manselles column to-day. Operations will begin on Saturday.

FIFTY-FIVE KILLED.

One Hundred Dangerously Hurt and 20 Missing in Collapse of Hall.

Berlin, April 6.—A large hall attached to the Hotel Blackstag, in Nagold, South Germany, collapsed yesterday while the place was crowded with members of a local association who were celebrating an annual fete.

Fifty-five persons lost their lives, and seventy were dangerously injured by the collapse.

Nearly 200 person were buried in the ruins. The building had not been fully completed, and the catastrophe is attributed to the non-observance of proper precautions. Up to 10 p. m. yesterday 55 bodies had been recovered and 100 wounded removed, many dangerously hurt. Twenty persons are still missing.

Prince Von Buelow Faints.

Berlin, April 6.—Chancellor Von Buelow, while attending the debate in the Reichstag yesterday, fainted and was carried to a committee-room by some of the members of the House. The chancellor made a speech on the subject of Morocco, and was listening to the answer of Herr Bebel, the Socialist leader, when he was taken ill.

Punishment and the Crime.

Ottawa, April 6.—James Finnessy, convicted on the charge of rape, was sentenced to Kingston Penitentiary yesterday afternoon by Judge Teetzel for six years and a half. An accomplice was sentenced in January to 7 years.

BUDGET DEBATE ENDED

Premier Whitney's Effective Points on Harcourt Deal.

Correspondence Showed Mr. Harty of Kingston Had Made an Offer on 1904 Bonds "Plus $25,000 Commission"—Premier Wanted to Know Who Was to Get This Commission—Mr. Harcourt Thought Harty Meant Bonus.

Toronto, April 6.—The second division of the present session of the Legislature took place yesterday, following an attempted explanation by Hon. Mr. Ross and Mr. Harcourt of the charge strongly driven home by Premier Whitney that the attempt to float the Temiskaming bonds in 1904 had brought about a binding agreement with the London brokerage firm of Coats, Son & Co., detrimental to the interests of the province.

The Government majority of 40, the vote being 64 to 24, included Mr. Rathbun, the Independent Liberal member from East Hastings, whose declaration to stand with the Government on the question, might be taken as one evidence of the strength of the Government's position.

The situation as developed a week before was given a new turn by the production of correspondence showing that, while in London on his mission, Mr. Harcourt had received a cablegram from then Premier Ross to the effect that Mr. Harty of Kingston, a former member of the Legislature, had made an offer "plus $25,000 commission."

Mr. Whitney wanted to know who the $25,000 commission was for.

Mr. Ross and Mr. Harcourt denied that there had been any understanding with Mr. Harty, as the Premier directly charged, and declared he thought that the $25,000 was meant to be a bonus to be added to the figure offered. At this the Government benches laughed sardonically.

The Opposition leaders showed haste to have the discussion wound up by urging a division after the 6 o'clock hour for rising had been passed.

Col. Matheson announced that Mr. Hanson of the firm of Coats, Son & Co., had written him making denial of the statement that the Provincial Treasurer had made in the House that he (Hanson) had gone about before the agreement was made with the Bank of Montreal to float the bonds protesting against its being done.

At the evening session of the House some of the estimates were passed, and the House went into committee on Mr. Hendrie's railway bill. Good progress was made, none of the clauses likely to be contentious being touched.

Province Is a Claimant.

The Ontario Government is a claimant for the valuable power site on the Current River, claimed by George T. Marks and the Town of Port Arthur. A bill to incorporate the Current River Power Co. was before the private bills committee yesterday, when Hon. Adam Beck made the claim on behalf of the Government. The property is included in the report of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

Mr. Marks claimed that he bought the rights in 1865. Owing to the Government's claim, consideration of the bill was laid over.

The Kakebeka Falls dispute was also before the committee. It will be further discussed to-day.

Province Shuts Off Electricity.

Kingston, April 6.—The Provincial Secretary has ordered that no more electricty be furnished to the Church of The Good Thief, Portsmouth, from Rockwood Asylum plant.

BANWELL'S PRISON DUTIES.

He Has an Easy Position as Librarian in the Penitentiary.

Kingston, April 6.—Banwell, the bank robber, is considered here to have a snap in the penitentiary. The duties of the position of librarian are not onerous. He remains in the library till 9 p. m., while the other convicts must return to their cells for the night at 5 in winter and 6 in the summer.

During the day he is in the presence of some of the best books in the language, and much of his time can be spent in reading. His work consists in taking the library cards with the names of the books desired by the convicts, selecting these and taking them to their cells.

New Settlement Lands.

Toronto, April 6.—The Dominion Government has practically completed arrangements for the sale to settlers of several Indian reserves on the Rainy River between Fort Frances and the Town of Rainy River, comprising 50,000 acres. The negotiations were opened by the Provincial Government, and it is expected that details will be completed in a few weeks.

Guilty of Fraud For Insurance.

Guelph, April 6.—John B. Madill was last night found guilty of an attempt to defraud insurance companies in connection with the burning of the Hillsburg creamery. A charge of arson was also preferred against him, but the Crown has not yet proceeded with it. The jury was out nearly five hours. Chief Justice Mulock will pass sentence this morning.

Prisoner Eluded Constable.

Berlin, April 6.—Albert Stricker, a young man of Elmira, was arrested yesterday on a charge of seduction, and remanded for trial. He was brought to Berlin by Constable Bowman, who took him to the Market Hotel while the prisoner's father was looking for bondsmen. While waiting, Stricker eluded the constable and didn't return.

MR. M'COOL SAVES LIVES

Collapse of New 75-Foot Tower on Parliament Buildings.

Five Men Stepped Off the Structure Just In Time Through M. P.'s Warning—Saw Cracks In Tower and Advised Public Works Department—A Probable Loss of $25,000 — Cause Given by Chief Architect Ewart.

Ottawa, April 6.—With a possible loss of $25,000, the new 75-foot tower which the Government has been building in the northwest angle of the western departmental block, collapsed yesterday at noon. Five workmen on the roof stepped off the structure just in time to save their lives.

Shortly before the crash Charles McCool, M. P., saw cracks in the tower, and he hurried to the Public Works office and advised that if anybody was near the structure they should be warned in time. This was done and the workmen's lives were saved.

The work was begun last summer and was almost completed. The entire addition was to cost $75,000. The contractor was George Goodwin of Ottawa.

Chief Architect Ewart of the Public Works Department believes that the fall was in part due to the building of the structure in the winter, by which the outer mortar dried before the inner, and to the lack of binding stones to solidify the wall.

IN THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. Borden called attention in the House to the collapse of the new tower of the western building at noon yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Hyman answered that Mr. Taylor, an experienced architect, had charge of the work. The department would make a thorough investigation.

At the suggestion of Mr. Bourassa, the Minister promised to have an investigation made by some competent expert who was not connected with the department.

Mr. Monk, on what he believed to be reliable authority (W. D. Scott himself) that the Minister of the Interior had forbidden W. D. Scott, superintendent of immigration, to obey an order of the House committee investigating the Atlantic Trading Co.

Mr. Oliver promptly denied it.

Edward Norman Lewis (West Huron) made an able speech of some three hours' duration, urging upon the Government the necessity of upbuilding the mercantile marine of Canada.

Mr. Brodeur said the matters referred to would be taken up by the tariff commission and by the Government.

On a motion of the Minister of Justice a select committee was appointed to examine the proposed Sunday law, subpoena witnesses and report to the House.

RUSSIAN COALITION.

Censorship of the Press Tightened After Election Results.

St. Petersburg, April 6.—The victories in the city elections just concluded, of the constitutional Democrats, have been followed by a proposed coalition of the constitutinal Democrats, the Moderates and the Octobrists under the leadership of Ivan Petrunkevitch, who is a candidate for president of the lower House, and M. Shipoff, a prominent zemstvo leader, to insure a clear majority in the lower House of Parliament to resist any attempt on the part of the Government to prorogue it immediately upon its assembling.

It appears that the reactionists are seriously endeavoring to induce the Emperor to find any excuse to annul the new elections.

The first act of the Government after the result of the St. Petersburg elections became known was to tighten the screws on the press. Some of the worst features of the censorship have been restored.

Smokers to Pay Cost of War.

St. Petersburg, April 6.—The exact financial burden caused by the war with Japan will be borne in part by tobacco consumers. A project to increase the internal revenue tax on an average of 30 per cent. has been approved for submission to the approaching National Parliament. The increase falls heavily on the choicer grades of tobacco, but even the cheap "momorka" smoked by the peasants, will be raised eleven points.

To Improve Sakhalin Island.

St. Petersburg, April 6.—The Russian Government has decided to stop the deportion of convicts to the Island of Sakhalin. The penal colonies there will be disbanded.

Horrible Child Murder in Montreal.

Montreal, April 6.—The body of Edith May Ahern, the four-year-old child which was reported to the police Wednesday as missing from her home at 40 Napoleon street, was found yesterday morning in a clump of bushes at Cote St. Paul, in the direction of which a child was seen going with a drunken man at the time crying bitterly. The little girl had been strangled, and the body showed evidence of a criminal assault having been perpetrated.

Understanding at Last.

Budapest, April 6.—As a result of a conference of leaders of the coalition party, held here yesterday under the presidency of Francis Kossuth, a complete understanding has been reached which may be expected to end the legislative deadlock. Herr Kossuth and Count Andrassy started last night for Vienna, where they will have an audience of Emperor Francis Joseph to-day.

Open Next Week.

Port Arthur, April 6.—Navigation will be open here early next week. A contract has been signed by the Government for the opening of the harbor, and the icebreaker Whalen will commence next week to open up the bay to steamers.

Enticed Daughter Away.

Windsor, April 6.—Mrs. Olive Moore, 24 years of age, of Detroit, is held here by the police on the charge of enticing a 15-year-old Windsor girl from her home to Detroit.

University Report Brought Down In the Legislature—Brief Summary of the Contents of Its Sixty Printed Pages—Provides For Board of Governors, But Real Power Remains in the Legislature of the People.

Toronto, April 7.—The report of the royal commission appointed by the Ontario Government on Oct. 3, 1905, to enquire into the present condition and needs of Toronto University was laid on the table of the Legislature by the Provincial Secretary yesterday. It is a comprehensive document, comprising sixty printed pages.

In addition to the report, a draft bill, embodying suggested improvements in the system of university management has been handed to the Government, and if the report meets with the approval of the Cabinet the bill will be given to the House in the shape of a Government measure.

The commission issued in October last authorized J. W. Flavelle, Dr. Goldwin Smith, Sir W. R. Meredith, B. E. Walker, Rev. Canon Cody, Rev. Dr. B. Macdonald and A. H. O. Colquhoun (secretary) to report upon:

Their Instructions.

A scheme for the management and government of the university; a scheme for the management and government of University College; the advisability of the incorporation of the School of Practical Science with the University of Toronto; such changes as should be brought about in the relations between the said University of Toronto and the several colleges affiliated or federated therewith, having regard to the provisions of the Federation Act; such suggestions and recommendations arising out of any of the subjects thus indicated.

The commission deals with the defects found in the university system and makes nine recommendations. These are prefaced by what the commission says of the defects in the present system.

The commission is strongly of opinion that the university's claim for increased endowment cannot either in wisdom or in safety be delayed or resisted.

Divorce From Politics.

After examining the governmental systems of other state universities, the commission finds a surprising unanimity of view upon the propriety of divorcing them from the direct superintendence of political powers. It is found that the Legislatures do not cease to act with generosity because the university is not a department of the state Government. The contrary is the case. Says the report:

"In order that no part of the state's authority shall be surrendered, and that the university shall retain the advantages and enjoy the dignity of state support, we recommend that the governors be nominated by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, * * * * In our opinion no step should be taken to lessen the responsibility of the Legislature for the efficient management and support of the institution. To confer upon the graduates the power to elect some of their number to the board would divest the state of its full control of the governing body. This, in our opinion, would be unwise. The chancellor and president should be ex-officio members of the board."

Authority of Legislature.

The authority of the Legislature should be asserted in three ways:

That of the fifteen governors, all except the two ex-officio members, should be appointed by and removable at the pleasure of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

That detailed statements of the expenditures and the investments should be annually furnished to the Government.

That no provision involving any encroachment on the endowment should be made without the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

The governors, if fifteen in number, would be sufficiently numerous to permit of their being drawn from different parts of the province. They should be representative men. The Government should appoint the chairman of the board, and the term of six years is suggested, three of the members of the first board retiring at the end of two, and five at the end of four years.

The commission regards the senate as an essential element. To abolish it would disturb the harmony at present existing. It is suggested that the work now performed by the senate committees might properly be transferred to faculty councils.

The President.

The autocratic presidency is associated in the popular mind with many universities in the United States. Usually there are no specific enactments giving to the president the extensive authority which he exercises — as a rule the personality of the man determines the extent of his powers. The report continues:

"The head of a great university, to be influential, must have wide powers, but he need not be supreme.

"We believe that the governors, as representing the crown, should select the president. As their appointment for short terms ensures their acceptability to the public, as he, owing his appointment to them, must work in harmony with them, and be amenable in all respects to their supervision. The test of his success as an administrator will be his ability to secure the co-operation of the governors since, lacking their ratification of his acts, all his efforts must be futile.

"He should be relieved of all teaching duties. He should be a member, ex-officio, of the governing body, but not its chairman. He should preside at meetings of the senate. This would bring him into constant and intimate contact with both the business and the academic side of the administration. He should be, in general, the channel of communication between the governors and other academical bodies. * * * * The distribution of power over so many agencies, with the final appeal to a political ministry, entails upon the executive officer of such a system, a continual effort to reconcile conflicting elements without in the end being able to enforce the decision.

Appointments to Staff.

"The question of making appointments to the staff concerns the very life of the university. It is clear that the governing body should make all appointments. The method of procedure is of the first importance. Every possible assurance should exist that the efficiency of the staff is not determined on any other ground than that of merit and quality. * * * * The right to recommend should rest with the president, who, as the academic head, is the natural adviser of the governing body. Without his recommendation the responsibility of action would be divided. Appointments therefore should be conditional upon his nomination."

Forestry School.

The commission regards it as surprising that Ontario with its rich areas of timber has failed to set up a school of forestry in its own university for the double purpose of providing technical training for young men and of

Daily Intelligencer.

Comic Opera "Ministers."

Ignorance of their departments and inattention to them are the distinguishing marks of the farcical ministers in the Dominion Government. Attention was recently drawn to the extraordinary manner in which the Postmaster-General conducts his work. He owns that he only knows about some of the post offices from what he reads in the papers.

The same inattention to their duties is shown by all the ministers. It has become a public scandal. The Hon. Sydney Fisher gave an example of this last week. Explanations of votes of money are due to the country through questions in the House by members of the Opposition; yet this Minister is not only unprepared to give them, but resents the enquiries being made. On a grant for the Canadian Exhibit at the Imperial Institute, in London, England, this was forcibly brought out.

Conservative members protested against being asked to vote the money without having a more definite explanation of the plan. The House, in fact, should be informed of the details of the scheme. From the meagre information given by the Minister it appeared that he had come to the conclusion that Parliament itself practically amounted to nothing, and ought not to be consulted. It was time for the members on both sides of the House to utter their protests against this sort of thing.

Mr. Lennox joined in the protest, stating that he did so particularly on behalf of the farmers of Canada.

Mr. Borden said that the whole matter illustrated very forcibly a complaint which had become much too prevalent of late years. The Minister of Agriculture should have been in his place when the item was brought up in supply a few nights ago. The trouble now had arisen because on that occasion the Minister being absent, no explanation had been given. In addition to that, he should have brought down Mr. Hutchinson's report to-day. He (Mr. Borden) noticed an increasing tendency on the part of Ministers of the Crown to absent themselves from the House.

Day after day for the last ten days, or two weeks, public business had been delayed by the absence of the Minister of Railways. Why was that Hon. gentleman not in his place today? Look at the Treasury benches even to-day, and how many of them would they see filled? Only four. Occasionally proper reasons might be given for the absence of Ministers, and he was willing to make every possible and just allowance, but even after doing so, he found what seemed to be a very great neglect of duty on the part of the Ministers.

The estimates would get along better and public business would suffer less if the Ministers would be present to attend to business when their estimates were going through. He thought this thing had better stop right now.

Hon. Mr. Patterson even said that he agreed with Mr. Borden that when estimates were up the Ministers concerned should be present, if at all possible, to give information.

Mr. Ingram said that the Minister of Agriculture had been more than careless in regard to the exhibit, and he had not submitted a single plan to the House to justify the increase.

The Minister of Agriculture, in his usual self-satisfied manner, delivered a long harangue in reply, and when he sat down again, a Conservative member protested against the Minister of Agriculture obstructing his own estimates. Nothing had been said from the Government benches which in the slightest degree excused the Minister of Agriculture for an obvious dereliction of duty.

Then Mr. Bain (Peel) said it was surprising the exhibition of ignorance and inattention to departmental work that Mr. Fisher displayed. Last year when this very subject was under discussion, Mr. Fisher promised to bring down two reports bearing upon the subject, and they were not yet forthcoming. Could the Minister explain this?

This briefly is a description of a scene which took place last week. The public can judge for themselves of the business-like manner in which their affairs are being managed at Ottawa.

FALSE THEORIES.

Lead to Worthless or Harmful Remedies.

Stimulating the scalp may allay the itching of the dandruff, but that does not cure the scalp. The disease won't yield to quinine or capsicum nor alcohol, because it is caused by a germ or parasite. To cure dandruff the germ must be destroyed. Until recently there was no hair preparation, or dandruff cure, or hair restorer on the market that would kill that insidious germ that dries up the scalp in little scales called dandruff, and absorbs the vitality of the hair, causing falling hair, and finally baldness. Newbro's Herpicide is the only really scientific preparation to cure dandruff, prevent falling hair and baldness. Sold by leading druggists. Marmora Herald: At last Mrs. Diamond is free. For it is not likely the detectives will stir up the case again. At the previous court, the Grand Jury brought in a verdict "No Bill." The only excuse for again bringing her to trial would have been that there was new evidence to give. But there does not seem to have been any new evidence whatever. One is forced to the conclusion that either the detectives or the authorities brought the case on again for some personal advantage and not for the sake of justice. The most simple-minded laymen could see there was not evidence to convict of murder.

That sounds strange, taking into consideration the words of Chief Justice Falconbridge. But then, you see, it is a poor country newspaper man who does not know more about law than a Chief Justice of His Majesty's High Court. O tempora! O mores!

ARREST MADE IN MONTREAL CASE.

RAOUL BRADLEY, A FORMER BOARDER WITH THE VICTIM'S FAMILY, HAS BEEN TAKEN ON SUSPICION.

Montreal, April 6.—A man named Raoul Bradley has been arrested on suspicion of having murdered Ida May Ahern, the girl of five years whose body was found in a lamentable condition in a clump of trees at Cote St. Paul yesterday morning. Bradley boarded at the home of the little girl, but was forced to leave more than a year ago because he owed $10. Ever since then, it is believed, he had nursed a secret grudge against the family, and a fellow-boarder asserts that once he was heard to say that he hated little Ida. He is a laboring man of sordid temperament, and although he has not been absolutely identified as the person who was seen with the girl, the police are pretty well satisfied with his capture. He was in a saloon in Montreal when arrested, and afterwards admitted that he was in the vicinity of the scene of the murder on Tuesday.

The father of the little girl confronted the prisoner at the police station shortly after his arrest tonight. After declining for several minutes to meet his visitor's gaze, Bradley looked up with a peculiar leer, but said nothing.

Mr. Ahern says that he had regarded the man as not being right-minded, because he had always acted peculiarly. No other crime in recent years in Montreal has so shocked the whole community as has this terrible tragedy. In the immediate neighborhood of Ahern's home at Ste. Cunegonde the crowd of sympathizers was so great all day that it was necessary to place a cordon of police around the house in order to keep them at a proper distance.

WILL SECURE NEW QUARTERS AND LETTERS OF INCORPORATION—MEMBERSHIP FEE FIXED AT $10 PER ANNUM.

A special meeting of the Canadian Imperial Club was held at the Officers' Quarters, Church street, last evening, for the purpose of considering the leasing of rooms as permanent quarters for the club. The members unanimously decided to rent and fit-up suitable rooms. A number of the members generously offered to donate portions of the furnishings.

The executive committee were instructed to take steps to secure letters of incorporation for the club, and within the near future the members expect to have comfortable and well-equipped quarters.

A motion was also carried to increase the annual membership fee to $10.00 per year.

A well-conducted social club should receive generous support from the citizens of Belleville, as it meets a long-felt want.

Dr. William Canniff, A Veteran Physician.

INTERESTING SKETCH OF A FAMOUS AUTHOR, TRAVELLER AND MEDICAL MAN, FORMERLY A RESIDENT OF THIS CITY.

(Hamilton Herald.)

Away back—ever so far back—there was a family named Canniff. Louis XIV. expelled the Huguenots from France in 1685. The Canniffs were included. To Ireland they went. Soon afterwards they became residents in America, being among the first settlers in New Rochelle. Along came the American rebellion, but the new pioneers remained firm and true to the Empire. John Canniff, at the close of the war, was a refugee in New Brunswick. In 1788 he came to Canada, and was one of the first settlers in Adolphustown. Another move; to Thurlow, Hastings county, this time. The grandfather of the man in the Valley City also became an inhabitant of Adolphustown; his father, after serving throughout the war of 1812, located at Myer's Creek. In the course of time, Canifton was the name given to the neighborhood. This was near Belleville—there was no place on the map named Belleville nearly one hundred years ago. At Myer's Creek it was that William—the subject of this article—became a young Canadian, and looked for the first time on his parents. Now, let us follow him—so far as space will permit—through a career of travel and experience until spoken of as William Canniff, M.D., M.R.C.S.

"My age when first attending school? About six. Oh, dear, no! The school system was entirely different seven decades ago. School teachers were poorly paid."

Pedagogues received part payment in board. Now they get salaries through a board of education. It was customary, when a teacher wished to punish a scholar, to send the youngster out to gather material wherewith to make a birch rod to have himself whipped. From a village school to Cobourg college was only a matter of a few years.

"Your father erected a saw mill and flour mill, doing an extensive business, how came you to forsake the land and take up medicine?"

When a lad he worked on the farm, learned to plow and to sow and to reap and to mow; did all that falls to the lot of a farmer's boy. Still the work was not congenial.

"I suppose at one stage in your life, you had a liking for athletics?"

"Athletics! Youngsters on farms in the early days had plenty of athletic exercise. Chopping wood and felling trees kept them in training."

A can of tobacco and pipe being noticed, the question was asked if they were for use or ornament. The septuagenarian has been a smoker for more than fifty years, but never really enjoyed the weed until after his thirtieth birthday.

Leaving Victoria College, he commenced to study at Toronto School of Medicine, Dr. Rolph being principal, where he passed the examination of the Upper Canada Medical Board. Then he is found at New York University, and became entitled to affix the letters M.D. after the name he received when christened.

If you will kindly carry the mind back to the brief sketch of the doctor's progenitors, it may be noticed they had made journeys by land and by water. The same traits for wandering were inherited by the new M.D.

When in New York a position was secured as assistant surgeon at the Seamen's retreat, Staten Island. Wages $33 monthly—all found. Not the money; the provisions and lodging. This institution was all that could be desired for a young man with ambitions—one determined to attain a prominent place in the ranks of his profession. Testimonials of the highest character testify that the assistant had given satisfaction during the fourteen months he remained at the retreat.

"Now, I'll tell you a peculiar incident that happened at this time," the doctor remarked.

The Crimean war was in progress. In certain quarters in England it was believed that many recruits could be gathered in the United States to take part in the fight against Russia. Hon. Joseph Howe made a journey from Halifax to New York to prepare the way for enlistment. The plan promised to be successful. Dr. Canniff received the appointment of medical examiner. Before any recruits were examined, the United States authorities stepped in and prevented a regiment being formed. Red tape was pulled from both sides of the ocean, and a regular political hubbub followed.

Shortly afterwards, on the log book of a sailing vessel bound for England from New York, was the name of "Dr. Canniff, surgeon." Upon arriving in London, he became a student in St. Thomas' hospital. By the way, here the Canadian met a young man from Hamilton, Dr. Ryall. Both were in search of medical knowledge. In 1866, the two physicians met again on the field at Ridgeway.

In 1855, the initials M.R.C.S. were gained, also an examination was passed before the army medical board—a severe examination, too, but successful. Having had a desire to dress wounds and saw bones on the battle field, the doctor hoped to make a trip to the Crimea. The angel of peace brought the war to a close, thus upsetting the Canadian's plans.

Not to be daunted, he did duty in the Royal artillery, and at the same time gained experience by attending the returned sick and wounded soldiers at Chatham hospital. A rolling stone is said to gather no moss—a roving physician does gather knowledge. One morning Chatham hospital authorities were informed that a change on the staff would soon take place. Regrets at his departure were heard from physicians and patients.

It was a delightful morning towards the close of 1856 when the doctor set out on his peregrinations. By taking a walking tour through England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, places read of in history and points of interest to the tourist could be visited. Herein the searcher after information acted wisely. It is only by walking from city to town and village to hamlet, that a beneficial sight-seeing trip can be enjoyed. How is it possible to fully realize the romantic and historic spots of a country when being whirled long distances in a train going at a thirty or forty-mile an hour speed, or breaking records on a wheel. Castles, cathedrals, abbeys, famous houses and parks were visited, and mountains and monuments climbed. The pedestrian is a devotee of Sir Walter Scott—worships at the noted author's shrine. That is, he believes Sir Walter to stand head and front over all novel writers. Such being the case, many places mentioned in the author's works received special attention. Great, indeed, was his pleasure at being admitted into the identical room where the novelist thought out and indited his romances—works teeming with instruction, and also entertaining to the average reader.

In Ireland, too, much was seen that has not been forgotten — especially the ride in a jaunting car to kiss the Blarney stone. Is there not some verse regarding this stone that runs: Really, memory fails just now, but it intimates that any man who kisses it may, if he chooses, become member of parliament. The doctor, judging from the conversation held, was never "gone on politics." Anyway, they were only casually touched upon, consequently there was no political aspiration in the kiss he gave to the stone.

"To be, or not be? Shall I return to Belleville or travel the continent?" This was the question the tourist had to solve. Decision reached—the continent. Up the Rhine and down the Rhine, Brussels, Carlsbad, taking in all that could be seen. Not "taking in" only, but committing to memory much information, from which is drawn—even in his seventy-sixth year—incidents that make him a pleasant conversationalist.

When at Wiesbaden he "drank the waters." His own words: "I shall never forget it — the water tasted like poor chicken broth."

Something not understood at the time is made plain in after years. In 1878, a leading hotel in this city dispensed hot chicken broth at five cents per glass. Two friends partook of the hot liquid. Said one: "There's not so much flavor of chicken in that stuff as you get in the water at Germany." The other made no remark; in place of showing ignorance he pondered. Now all has been made plain. The so-called chicken broth sold in the Hamilton hotel must have been water from Wiesbaden. The travelling medico secured a bottle of genuine perfume at Cologne, and hied across the border to France.

Passing through many beautiful pieces of country, staying by the wayside to watch grape gatherers and champagne makers, finally he came to the one historic spot—the field of Waterloo; was actually treading the ground walked over by Napoleon. In this place incidents read in school days came to memory. Who can tell, perhaps he had taken part in a debate regarding the ability as general of Wellington and Bonaparte.

At last Paris was reached—Paris the beautiful. Time to visit the principal attractions was limited. Business now supplanted pleasure. Dr. Canniff's attention was devoted to studying the ways and means and whys and wherefores of the cases under care in Paris hospitals. In a few weeks, a longing to return to Belleville touched the feelings of the man. One thing he desired to do—climb the Alps. Inspecting the wonderful clock at Strasburg afforded satisfaction. Ambition urged him still higher. However, the Alps were never ascended by this tourist.

From Liverpool an emigrant ship was about to sail for New York. Securing the position of surgeon, in the month of December, the dust of Liverpool's dirty docks was taken with him on board—and very little else. Numerous passengers were on board the sailing vessel, and the voyage was unusually rough.

"Being a physician, you could heal yourself. Had some secret prescription to prevent sea sickness."

"Would you believe it, sir, I was sick, too. Of the many Christmases that have passed, the one spent on board that vessel will never be forgotten. All through the day I was only able to take lemonade."

As the vessel neared New York the weather became bitterly cold. Several of the sailors suffered so severely from the frost that upon reaching the dock they had to be hurried off to the hospital. Before leaving for home, the young surgeon visited the Seaman's retreat, where, it will be remembered, his first engagement was made. Going through one of the wards, several men called "Dr. Canniff, Dr. Canniff. How are you?" The exclaimers were the frost-bitten sailors.

Shortly afterwards, the return of the wanderer was announced in the streets of Belleville, for the news of his arrival spread quickly. Particulars of his pilgrimage were related over and over again. In a word, the rover was in great demand for —— How space does fly!

"Practice makes perfect," is a copybook sample. A good practice brings wealth to a doctor. After following his profession in Belleville for a short time, with excellent prospects for the future, he, in response to an urgent request, undertook the professorship of pathology in Victoria college. It was in this institution that the first series of lectures on pathology were delivered in Canada, And Dr. Canniff was the lecturer. Names of many students were mentioned. Some have risen to prominence in their chosen profession. At least four also have seats in the present House of Parliament.

The civil war in the States was the principal topic of everyday conversation. A desire to seek reputation at the cannon's mouth prompted the professor to resign his position. Hospitals at Washington were visited as a preliminary to joining the army of the Potomac. When on active service many operations requiring surgical skill were performed, particulars of some cases being related.

Once again in practice at Belleville—only for a few months. Previous to going to Toronto, the G.T.R. authorities had appointed him medical man on a certain portion of the railway. In this position, ample opportunity was given for the display of a surgeon's ability.

"Well," said he, "forty years ago things were managed on different lines. At that time doctors were supposed to be able to attend all sorts of cases.

Specialists now look after the various branches of ills that flesh is heir to.

The man from Canifton has endeavored to prove that it is better to wear out than rust out. A long life has his been. When travelling, eyes were kept open, ears alert. He "went out for to see"—and did see. When attached to the artillery, at a review near London he saw the late Queen on horseback. Had he been as proficient in sculpture as anatomy, a model for the proposed monument in Gore park might have been sent in. The Prince of Wales, when a lad, stood beside the Canadian as both viewed the ruins of a theatre destroyed by fire in London. When the former visited Canada in 1860, the doctor was beside him again.

As for Premiers and Governor-Generals, all in his day have been seen.

"By the way, for whom did you first vote?"

"The election lasted a week—Flint and Wallbridge were the candidates. Yes, I'm a Conservative. I voted for Wallbridge, at one time speaker in the house."

Upon a hurried perusal of original letters received from Sir John Macdonald, it is evident that the leader and the follower were upon the most intimate and friendly terms, outside of politics.

"Down Belleville way, Orangemen and Catholics were always to the front. Many a rumpus have I seen."

Dr. Canniff is credited with being a promoter of the Canada First party, president at one time of the medical section of the Canadian institute, one of those who formed the Canadian Medical Association in Quebec, and has filled many important positions. Being the originator of the U. E. Loyalist centennial celebration held in Toronto, 1884, it was he who presided over the deliberations. The doctor changed the subject when asked the mode of initiating candidates into a Free Mason's lodge at the time he became a member of Ionic, Toronto. Numerous signs were given, but all to no purpose.

During the Fenian raid he was ready to shoulder the musket or use surgical instruments. When the country was agitated over the Trent affair, a company of men in Toronto, under Captain Canniff, expressed a willingness to leave home and fight for country. In addition to the above, he was the first medical health officer in Toronto.

Numerous incidents of his active life have to be omitted, but one feature must not be overlooked—an important one, too. Contributions from his pen have been published in medical magazines. He is also the author of several works. The Principles of Surgery, Settlement of Upper Canada, and the Medical Progress of Upper Canada from 1783 to 1850, are three volumes that may be mentioned, each containing over six hundred pages.

In the doctor's possession is a large collection of memoranda well worthy of careful perusal by those in search of incidents bearing upon leading events of Canada. One parcel contains a number of old almanacs, illustrated with woodcuts, dating from 1811. They are curious productions. Seeing is believing.

In the House of Providence, about thirty rooms are set apart for the convenience of well-to-do people, who prefer to board at a quiet and well-managed institution in place of a hotel. The doctor expressed himself as being delighted with all the surroundings, and, so far as health permits, is a contented and happy guest. In a comfortably furnished room the physician receives friends and enjoys all visits made to him. Here it was that a pleasant conversation took place with the writer.

Nervous?

There are many causes of nervousness, but poor blood heads the list. The doctors call it anemia. The blood lacks red corpuscles. At your first opportunity, consult your doctor about taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Ask him if he has anything better for weakness, debility, nervousness. If he has, take it. If not, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Get well, that's what you are after. We have no secrets! We publish the formulas of all our medicines! J. C. Ayer Co., Lowell, Mass.

He simply ground the wheat.

You would refuse to use his product to-day. The results would not satisfy you. You have advanced.

JOHN.

(Charlotte G. Chase.)

I shouldn't like to give offence—
I never care to boast;
But of all the men I ever met,
I like my John the most.

I know looks aren't essential—but
John is a handsome man,
(You might as well have looks along
With goodness, if you can.)

A little more than six feet tall
(About the proper size),
With hair that's rather light than dark,
And steady, clear blue eyes.

Inclined to be esthetic
(Not too fashionably dressed),
He likes the things that I like—
(His tastes are of the best).

He sings—oh, so attractively!
And I am glad to say
That he accompanies himself
(For I don't love to play.)

While John is just about as fine
As any man could be,
Perhaps the nicest part of all
Is what he thinks of me.

What? Do you ask to see this man,
Whose like you've never met?
Why, John's my future husband—but
I haven't found him yet.

BEAUTY AND UTILITY.

(Hamilton Herald, Ind.)

One of the subsidiary enterprises of the C. P. R. Company is the maintenance of a flower department. Every spring packets of seeds are sent to every C. P. R. station master and responsible official with instructions how to plant them and to care for the plants as they grow. It is the ambition of the director of this department to have an attractive flower garden at every station on the great railway system. What a bountiful idea—a belt of blooming flowers extending across the continent from ocean to ocean! This spring each envelope distributed contains twenty-one packets of seeds, representing as many varieties of flowers, some of them quite rare. Who can estimate the good that is done by this attempt on a large scale to connect beauty with utility—the love that is awakened for the beautiful in nature, the taste for botany that is stimulated.

Bituminous Operators Want Arbitration With Striking Miners.

New York, April 7.—Soft coal operators, who have not yet agreed to the 1903 scale and their miners, ask for arbitration. Their offer is identical, except where the term bituminous is substituted for anthracite with the one President Mitchell presented to the hard coal operators here Thursday.

The receipt of the proposition caused a stir.

Within an hour of the receipt of the offer Mitchell sent reply to the effect that there was no power to act on the proposition, but he would submit it to the international executive board of the union at its meeting at Indianapolis week after next.

BILL WAS TALKED OUT

Cattle Embargo Discussed in the British Commons.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman Announced Government's Neutral Position—Tardy Justice to Canada Was Contention of Mover of Bill—Unsatisfactory Conclusion of the Debate Gives Impression That Bill Is Dead.

London, April 7.—(C. A. P.)—In the House of Commons yesterday Mr. Thomas Cairns (Liberal), in moving the second reading of the diseases of animals act amendment bill, sketched the history of the act of 1896 and the continued hostility that had been shown it by reason of the fact that under its provisions foreign, and especially Canadian, cattle could not be landed alive at our home ports. This bill, he said, did not affect Ireland, yet the Nationalists had announced their intention of opposing it. It was eminently desirable to remove the embargo on Canadian cattle. The Canadian Government habitually complained of the restriction, inasmuch as Canada was free from disease. If there was any risk he would be the last to express himself in favor of the measure. During the last ten years 1,250,000 Canadian cattle were landed here, not one suffering from foot-and-mouth disease or anthrax. For every one of Canadian cattle killed for suffering from tuberculosis there were 11 home cattle destroyed. He argued that the sooner we had these healthy animals among our home herds the better.

Quality Had Deteriorated.

Mr. Price, seconding the motion, said the quality of stock had gone down under the operation of the act of 1896. It was not suggested that any risk of disease should be taken. Canada was free from the disease.

Messrs. Courtenay warned and C. Wason moved and seconded the rejection of the bill, and denied that it would benefit the farmer, the laborer or the consumer. Mr. Wason said he protested against the recent despatch of Hon. Sydney Fisher, which represented the action of the British Government as unfriendly to the Dominion. That was an unveracious statement.

Sir Gilbert Parker asked that Speaker if such an expression was permitted, and Mr. Wason said he would substitute the expression that the despatch was liable to misconstruction.

Mr. Hamar Greenwood supported the bill.

Mr. W. O'Brien said if the bill passed 200,000 holdings in Ireland would be rendered unprofitable.

Government Is Neutral.

The Premier said that personally he preferred the old system by which matters of this kind were left to the discretion of the responsible Ministers. If the embargo were suddenly removed it might cause nervousness in many parts of the country. As to the policy of admission of Canadian cattle, he thought the House should be left to determine these matters without the interference of the Government. He had no desire to exercise any influence, and would leave this an open question.

Walter Long, for the Opposition, scored the Government for not accepting responsibility.

Several members continued the discussion on both sides, while many others vainly tried to get the Speaker's eye. Finally the bill was talked out without a division, the Speaker refusing the closure.

Mr. Cairns afterwards said the bill would be put down in the usual way on Monday, but had not much chance of being reached. The impression among the members is that the bill is dead.

Rebel Has Only 200 Followers.

Greytown, Natal, April 7.—Bambaata, the leader of the Zulu rebels, is believed to be within seven miles of Greytown. He has only two hundred followers. It is impossible for infantry to penetrate the bush in pursuit of the rebels, but overlooking their hiding place is an eminence on which artillery is being placed. Natives also are prepared to tackle Bambaata in native fashion in the bush.

Arrested For Child's Murder.

60 Days For Bigamy.

Toronto, April 7.—Alex. Cockburn was yesterday given 60 days for bigamy. While coming from the old country last August he made the acquaintance of Alice Jeffreys, aged 26, and married her in October. The arrival from Scotland of his first wife with five children placed him in the hands of the police. Both women asked that Cockburn be liberated, and when sentence was passed the wronged woman fainted in the witness box.

English Firms Anxious.

Toronto, April 7.—The Provincial Treasurer yesterday received the following cablegram from Lord Strathcona:

"It is reported here that it is the intention of your Government to let Cobalt mines by tenders. Am requested by English firms to request full particulars. Kindly cable."

An answer will be sent by cable.

Policyholders Position Defined.

Albany, N. Y., April 7.—Senator Armstrong in the Senate yesterday introduced a new bill designed to remove whatever doubt may exist as to the eligibility of policyholders in stock life insurance companies to be elected directors therein, regardless of whether or not he owns stock. The bill was advanced to third reading without opposition.

DOTS AND SPACES

By SHERWOOD BOYD

Copyright, 1905, by C. H. Sutcliffe

Truesdell looked eagerly from the platform of the sleeper as the long train pulled into the station.

There, by the baggage truck, stood his father, soldierly, gray haired and eager to welcome his son. Back in the crowd were a dozen familiar faces, but the one he most anxiously sought was not to be seen.

"Where's Margie?" he asked when all greetings had been exchanged and at last he was free to fall into step with his father and go up the familiar street. He tried to speak carelessly, but his father caught the note of anxiety in his tones and sighed.

"I think she did not know you were coming," he said gently. "She doesn't come over to the house as she used to. Perhaps the attraction was removed," he added, with a poor little attempt at a joke. But it was a jest of the voice, not the heart, and he wondered how he might break to this big boy, of whom he was so proud, the fact that his little playmate had not only kept away from them, but that it was common report that she was engaged to George Colson.

"I should think," said Truesdell, "that she might have at least answered my letters. I telegraphed my address just before we sailed, and I wrote by almost every steamer."

"Marjorie has been away, Dick," said his father. "Perhaps she did not get your letters."

"Nonsense. She must have had some of them," declared Dick. "There she is now." And before the father could lay a detaining hand upon his arm Dick Truesdell had dropped his bag and dashed across the narrow street.

He paused dumbly as the girl passed with a most chilling nod and then, with slow step, retraced his way. The elder man put out his hand, and Dick grasped it and wrung it with a grip that meant more than words. It was the way they had come away from his mother's grave, hand in hand, only now it was the old man who led his son, not the son consoling the father.

Dick picked up his valise, and the two went up the street. They had almost reached the old home before the father spoke.

"I wanted to wait until we got home, Dick," he said, with a touch of wistfulness in his tones. "I thought Marjorie was still away and that I could tell you better in the house. Marjorie is going about a great deal with George Colson. She never comes near me now. I have tried to find out what the trouble is, but she only says that I should know as well as she."

"It will come out all right," said the boy, with a brave effort at cheerfulness. "At any rate, we shan't let it spoil the homecoming, shall we?" He linked his arm affectionately through his father's, and they turned in at the familiar gateway and went up the gravel walk to the house.

That night as Dick stood before the mirror in his own little room the motto his mother had put over the glass when he had come home from college caught his eye. It was simply, "Look before you leap," one of those printed texts for framing, but now it seemed almost like a message from the dead, and he put out the light and jumped into bed with a braver heart.

"I shan't leap to the conclusion that I've lost Margie until I've looked into the thing," he said to himself, and the thought brought sleep to eyes that might not have closed save for that promise.

But it was easier to declare than to execute, and it was almost a week before Dick saw Marjorie. Letters had been returned unanswered, and on the few occasions he had seen her on the street she had been with friends. At last one afternoon as he was coming down the street she fairly ran into him in the growing dusk.

She began to murmur an apology before she saw who it was, and by that time Dick had her arm.

"I want to know just what the trouble is," he said commandingly. "If you don't love me I'll not bother you again, but if it's something that can be explained let's have it over with. Perhaps there is an excuse."

"Your affront was inexcusable," she said coldly. "I desire no explanation."

"I insist upon one," he said quietly, but with a new note of mastery in his voice. She recognized the tone and shivered a little.

"Of course," she said, "I can't run away from you if you insist upon holding on to me this way, but"— "I am glad to see you are convinced of that," he said softly. "I am not going to let you run away from me now or ever. There is some mistake somewhere, and I'll have the truth."

"There could be no mistake," she said. "The matter was entirely too clear to admit of explanation. I don't see why you should be so anxious to be friends with me when you have Marie."

"I don't want to be friends with you," he disclaimed. "I want to be your husband, and I don't remember any Marie that figures in this story."

"Doubtless you forget your traveling companion," she retorted.

"You mean Marie Gorman," he laughed. "I wonder who told you about that. Besides, she was Bennett's friend. His sister used to go to school with her or something."

"Very ingenious," sneered Marjorie, "but I fail to see that that explains anything. The fact that she was an acquaintance of Mr. Bennett does not excuse your going all over Europe with her."

"Now you are wrong," he said evenly. "We didn't go all over Europe together. We did Switzerland and the Rhine; then they went to the south for the winter, and we went on to Denmark."

"Who are 'they' and 'we'?" she demanded. "It is a little puzzling to keep track of your conversation."

"'We,' Bennett and myself; 'they,' the Gormans and the Crofts. We ran into them in London."

"I am no child to be told tales," she said bitterly. "I did hope that there might be some explanation I could accept, but you have made it impossible. After that telegram in which you declare that you are going abroad with Miss Gorman your explanation that you met them in London is an affront to my intelligence."

"I should like to see that telegram," he said. "It's the first I have heard of it."

"I still have it," she said. "If you think to get out of it by denying sending it you are mistaken. I kept it."

She led the way into the house, and he followed into the parlor. It gave him a pang as he remembered the pleasant evenings spent there and thought how close he was to losing it all, but he sprang up when she entered with a lamp and a sheet of yellow paper.

She thrust the latter toward him. "I don't suppose that you will deny sending this?" she said coldly.

"Not a bit," he admitted, "only I wrote: 'Am sailing for London with Marc tomorrow. Address American Exchange.' I cut out the Bennett to make ten words. The operator got it 'Marie.'"

"I don't see how he could do that?" she said doubtingly. Dick went over to the bookcase and drew down a volume.

"It's like this," he said, opening the book and laying it on the table. "Marc Bennett spells his name with a 'c' instead of a 'k.' Now, if you will look at this Morse code you will see that they telegraph two dots for 'i' and one for 'e.' 'C' is two dots, a space and a dot. Now, if the space between those dots was a little longer than it should be, as it very often is when a beginner is at the key, the receiver would read it 'ie' instead of 'c.' If Mark had spelled his name with a 'k' you would have been saved all this trouble, or if you had had more faith in me"—

"Don't scold," said Marjorie penitently, stopping his words with her soft lips. "I've been a little fool. Can you forgive me?"

Since Dick stayed to supper he presumably did.

The University Presidency.

The unity and security of a university can only be assured through accountability to a central office. While every one is to have freedom to do in his own way the thing he is set to do, so long as his way proves to be a good way, the harmony of the whole depends upon the parts fitting together and upon definiteness of responsibility and frequency of accountability. No self respecting man is going to administer a great office or an office responsible for great results and have any doubt about possessing the powers necessary or incident to the performance of his work. He will have enough to think of without having any doubt upon that subject. There need be no fear of his being too much inflated with power. There will be enough to take the conceit out of him and keep him upon the earth. If he cannot exercise the powers of his great office and yet keep steady and sane there is no hope for him, and he will speedily come to official ruin. It is not a matter of uplifting or of inflating a man, but of getting a man who can meet the demands of a great situation.—Andrew S. Draper in Atlantic.

She Was Ready For Him.

He had come to break off the engagement. His mother didn't approve of his choice. Besides, he felt that he was too timid to assume the responsibilities of married life.

It wasn't a pleasant task.

"I have come," he said, "to say that—isn't there some one stirring at the side door?"

"It is nothing," she hastily answered. "You were about to say that"—

"I were about—I mean I was about to say that I think that we have—I mean I have—made a mistake in—I'm sure I hear somebody shuffling at the keyhole!"

She laughed in an unmirthful way.

"Yes," she said, "my football brother, with his brindle bulldog, is out there waiting."

He didn't ask what they were waiting for.

"I have come to say, dearest," he briskly remarked, "that I think I have made a mistake in permitting you to put your wedding day so far ahead."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Usefulness of a Watch.

"If a business man did not require a watch in getting to and from the office every day," said a busy merchant, "he would need one to keep himself from being deluded and hurried or retarded by the hundred and one clocks he is sure to glance at en route. Have you ever noticed," he continued, smiling, "how few clocks are required to fill their original purpose of keeping the correct time? Not one in twenty or twenty-five is really exact, and frequently two clocks within half a block of each other will differ all the way from fifteen minutes to half an hour. The clocks in many stores regulate the time to suit their own sweet will. Public clocks and church clocks are frequently run down or out of order, and it really seems as if the only thing on duty in all timekeeping creation is the business man's pocket timepiece."—New York Press.

Solid Emery Wheels.

In the production of solid emery wheels the best cement that can be employed is one that binds the emery together with that degree of strength which will resist the centrifugal strain due to the high speed at which emery wheels cut best—about 5,000 feet speed per minute. It must not soften by frictional heat or glaze or burst or become brittle and break with cold, nor must it hold the cutting grains until they are too dull to cut nor release them so readily as to waste away the wheel too fast. It must be capable of being thoroughly mixed evenly with the grain emery, so that the wheel may not have either hard or soft spots and be out of balance, and must also be capable of being tempered to suit different kinds of metal or work. Great care and skill are required in the matter of selecting only pure and strong chemicals for these cements.—Cassier's Magazine.

The Bald Head.

A bald head is a less familiar (and nowadays less true) representative of the unchangeable than the Ethiopian's skin or the leopard's spots, but it was cited in this character with impressive pathos by Hipparchus, one of the seven martyrs of Samosata. After they had been subjected to severe tortures they were at last confronted with seven crosses, and the Emperor Maximian offered them a last chance to recant. But the aged Hipparchus put his hand on his bald head and cried, "As this, according to the order of nature, cannot again be covered with hair, so never will I change or conform to your wish!" Maximian ordered a goat's skin to be nailed to Hipparchus' head and then jeeringly claimed that the condition was fulfilled. But Hipparchus remained obdurate and speedily died on the cross.—London Chronicle.

He Was Absentminded.

The absentminded man is at it again. He had been reading the egg story and decided to try the trick. The first thing to do was to boil the egg. How many minutes? he asked himself, and, going to the stove with the egg in one hand and his watch in the other, he dropped the latter in the hot water. Then, placing the egg on the table, he sat down to read until the time was up. At the end of five or six minutes he was surprised to find the egg lying there before him, but, supposing that he had himself taken it from the kettle and cooled it, he proceeded to crack and peel it. The consequence may be imagined. Finally he missed his watch. The house was searched high and low, and it was not till the following morning that the cook found it in the kettle, where it had been boiling for hours.—Exchange.

SPEED OF INSECTS.

A Common House Fly Travels a Mile In Thirty-three Seconds.

It is the popular belief that the flight of the birds is much swifter than that of the insects, but a number of naturalists who have been making a study of the matter think that such is not the case.

A common house fly, for example, is not very rapid in its flight, but its wings make 800 beats a second and send it through the air twenty-five feet, under ordinary circumstances, in that space of time. When the insect is alarmed, however, it has been found that it can increase its rate of speed by over 160 feet per second. If it could continue such rapid flight for a mile in a straight line, it would cover that distance in exactly thirty-three seconds.

It is not an uncommon thing when traveling by rail in the summer time to see a bee or wasp keeping up with the train and trying to get in at one of the windows. A swallow is considered one of the swiftest of flying birds, and it was formerly thought that no insect could escape it.

A naturalist, however, told of an exciting chase he saw between a swallow and a dragon fly, which is among the swiftest of insects. The insect flew with incredible speed and wheeled and dodged with such ease that the swallow, despite its utmost efforts, completely failed to overtake it.

Safety For Children.

Baby's Own Tablets is the only medicine that gives the mother the guarantee of a government analyst that it contains no poisonous opiate and is absolutely safe. This is worth much to every mother who cares for the future welfare of her child. The Tablets are good for the tenderest baby or for the well grown boy or girl, and cure the minor troubles that are inseparable from childhood. Mrs. W. J. Macintosh, Clam Harbor, N. S., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for constipation, vomiting and colds and have found them a splendid medicine. I give the Tablets all the credit for the splendid health my little one now enjoys." The wise mother will always keep a box of these Tablets on hand. They can be got from any druggist or by mail from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 25 cents a box.

HOME WHERE'ER THE HEART IS.

'Tis home where'er the heart is,
 Where'er its loved ones dwell,
In cities or in cottages,
 Thronged haunts or mossy dell.
The heart's a rover ever,
 And thus on wave and wild
The maiden with her lover walks,
 The mother with her child.

'Tis bright where'er the heart is:
 Its fairy spells can bring
Fresh fountains to the wilderness
 And to the desert spring.
There are green isles in each ocean,
 O'er which affection glides,
And a haven on each rugged shore
 When love's the star that guides.

'Tis free where'er the heart is;
 Nor chain nor dungeon dim
May check the mind's aspirings,
 The spirit's pealing hymn.
The heart gives life its beauty,
 Its glory and its power;
'Tis sunlight to its rippling stream
 And soft dew to its flower.

NELSON'S FAMOUS MEMO.

Patriotic Dealer Saves the Manuscript and Relic Stays In England.

Ever since the manuscript of Milton's "Paradise Lost," was carried off to the United States, for the price of £5,000 ($25,000), something like a panic has reigned in that circle of society interested in what is termed national treasures, says a London correspondent, and there was quite a nervous flutter, judging from the appeals to the Government, which, however, were all disregarded in the excitement of the opening of the new Parliament, when it became known that Nelson's famous memorandum to the fleet before the battle of Trafalgar was to be put up for auction at Christie's.

But the anxiety has subsided and given place to rejoicing. In the same way as a patriotic art dealer recently purchased the famous picture of "Venus and Cupid," by Velasquez, at a cost of £45,000 ($225,000), and presented it to the National Gallery—where, by the way, it has been hung this week between the other Velasquez canvases, namely, "Philip the Fourth" and "Admiral Pulido Pareja"—so has this memorandum been purchased by another patriotic dealer, Mr. Frank Sabin bidding and bidding until the hammer finally fell, amid the cheers of a large crowd, at £3,600 ($18,000).

No Provision For Defeat.

This remarkable document consists of four quarto pages, each side of which is covered in the bold handwriting of Nelson, with the orders issued to his captains at Trafalgar, including a rough map of the intended attack. It is interesting to note that in this forecast of the battle no provision is made for anything but victory.

The former ownership of the document was not disclosed, but it is believed to have been found in a desk which Admiral Sir George Mundy Rodney's grandson gave to one of his servants in 1884.

Though valuable, less interest was shown in the disposal of one of the official copies of the same memorandum addressed to William Leshmere, Esq., captain of H. M. S. Thunderer, and which was purchased by a dealer, Mr. Maggs, for £180 ($900). It is marked secret and contains the following note: "When the Thunderer quits the fleet for England you are to return the secret memo to the Victory." It was the property of Mr. John R. Talbot, son of Admiral Sir John Talbot, who commanded the Thunderer after the battle Trafalgar.

The terror of the wealthy American collector is voiced in an editorial in The Daily Express, which says: "What is required in order to prevent the loss of national treasures and waste of public money is the adoption of the stringent Italian law which forbids the sale of historical heirlooms to foreign purchasers. It ill becomes this country to lag behind Italy in such a matter, the more so as the purse of the American millionaire is as bottomless as his tastes are eclectic."

Dispersal of Art Works.

And now a large, interesting and very valuable collection of works of art is soon to be scattered over the land, if not over the world. They are the duplicate mezzotints and etchings from the Royal Library at Windsor and which are now on view at Messrs. Agnew & Sons' rooms. The majority were added to the collection during the reign of Queen Victoria and are stamped with the letters "V. R." There are many hundred mezzotint portraits of historical men and women, principally naval, military and theatrical personages, after famous artists.

Two are worthy of special notice—extremely fine proofs before letters, after Sir Joshua Reynolds, of full length portraits of the Duchess of Devonshire and the Duchess of Rutland, which were published in 1780. Both are very rare and will be eagerly sought by collectors.

Familiar Ostriches.

A traveler on the railway from Cape Town to Victoria Falls in South Africa writes: "There is not much incident on the trip, though the life at wayside stations when the engine stops for a drink is always interesting. At Mochudo two tame ostriches walked majestically up and down beside the train, their little heads on a level with the passengers, who sometimes would hand them a biscuit. I was told to keep my camera out of sight or they would gobble it up. A man was lighting a cigarette at one of the carriage windows when one of the ostriches bit from his hand and swallowed a box of matches. The matches were of the kind that light only on the outside of the box, so that the probability of the lucifers igniting on any of the stray bits of bottles on the staircase going down was minimised."

G. B. Shaw Explains His Epigrams.

I told a lie accidentally on the platform at Wakefield the other day. A workman corrected me afterward in private conversation. I assured him that it was pure ignorance on my part. "Oh," he said, with a slightly disappointed air, "didn't you know? We thought it was one of your epigrams." I think this shows a remarkable insight on the part of a poor man into the true nature of most modern epigrams.—From The Clarion.

Orders for bookbinding should be left at The Intelligencer Office. It is surprising how attractive and satisfactory a volume can be made of these magazines. HAVE A SYSTEM.

It Will Lighten Your Labors and Rest Mind and Body.

Care must be taken that the time set apart for the various items of housework is long enough to allow these to be thoroughly done and also that the arrangement is such that both mistress and servant will have some degree of leisure every day.

In many well regulated houses a time table is hung on the kitchen wall, with the work of each day carefully noted as well as the time to be devoted to each item. The work of each household can easily be arranged so that there is little to be done on the last day of the week, which most people regard as a half holiday.

An early start must be made every day. In all households, whether great or small, each apartment should be thoroughly cleaned once a week. It is a good plan to have a day set apart for each room, and one day every two weeks at least ought to be devoted to the cleaning and arrangement of cupboards and what are known as "odd corners."

If windows are cleaned regularly the work can be both easily and quickly performed. Bright windows and fresh curtains generally indicate the character of the interior of a dwelling. Ironing ought to be done as soon as possible after the washing is finished, as one never gets the work performed so quickly and efficiently as when the clothes are newly taken from the line.—Boston Traveler.

AN AID IN CLEANING.

Many Ways In Which Kerosene Oil May Be Used.

"If more women knew how quickly and thoroughly coal oil acts as a cleaning agent there would be fewer tired backs and aching bones on cleaning day," said a little woman, whose apartment is always as fleckless as the streets of a certain town celebrated for its immaculate condition.

"Ever since the hint was given to me by a practical friend, a fifty years' housekeeper," she continued, "I've been learning to use the oil for more and more purposes each week—in fact, I am a coal oil crank. I wipe up my stained wood floors with a rag moistened with the oil and find that in addition to removing every scrap of dust it darkens the boards a little every time, which is a disideratum in my case, as the floor is of soft wood and wears easily.

"All the woodwork I wipe with another rag on which I sprinkle a few drops of oil. Anything of porcelain, like a bathtub, it cleans most beautifully; also the bathroom washstand and closet, only taking the precautions to change your cloths. The wall back of my range is painted a deep red. When it becomes greasy and dusty I find that the oiled cloth makes a splendid cleanser, although I confess I tried it in the first instance with fear and trembling.—Philadelphia Press.

LAUNDRY LINES.

Calico dresses should be soaked in strong salt water for an hour before washing, so as to set the colors.

If a cup of thin boiled starch is put in half a tub of rinsing water for table linen and handkerchiefs they will be greatly improved in appearance.

Tie a lump of arrowroot in a thick cotton cloth and boil it with the fine white pieces to give them a dainty odor more delightful than from sachet powder.

To prevent goods from fading drop into a pail of water a teaspoonful of lead acetate and let it dissolve. Soak the goods in this mixture for half an hour before washing them in the ordinary manner.

Colored ginghams should be washed through thin starch water, without any soap, and then rinsed in soft cold water and hung to dry in a shady place, as few colors can stand to be exposed to the sun while damp.

A Pretty Basket.

There are many pretty and useful things that can be made with a crochet hook and a ball of common twine. Baskets may be made in bag shape, then starched and shaped over a suitable dish. The dish must be slightly greased before stretching the bag over it, so that it will come off readily after it is dry. Two coats of varnish will be needed after it is stiffened with starch. By mixing a little bronze paint and some turpentine with the last coat of varnish a very pretty basket is secured. Shellac varnish should be used with the paints, and gold or silver paint may be used instead of the bronze if preferred.

Whitening the Teeth.

The teeth are improved by the use of salt. Rubbed wet when the mouth is stained with fruit it will bleach perfectly. Rubbed in once a day with a brush it is a tonic and antiseptic, and combined with peroxide it makes a powerful bleach. This is done by wetting a brush with a few drops of peroxide of hydrogen and then dipping it into the salt. This will have a most pronounced effect upon yellow teeth, whitening them noticeably, but it should not be used oftener than once in ten days or the enamel will be injured.

Tender Feet.

A good bath for tender feet is composed of five quarts of hot water, 200 grams of boric acid and five grains of tannin. The feet should be soaked in this bath for ten minutes. Dry thoroughly. If your feet are sore after a long walk or vigorous exercise, massage them with olive oil. They respond to care very quickly. If your feet swell from long standing, dissolve one ounce of alum, two ounces of rock salt and two ounces of borax in the bath.

Tired Doctoring

How many people in Canada are tired doctoring? How many have gone from one doctor to another searching for the health they cannot find? How many, disheartened and hopeless, are wondering today if all the sunshine and pleasure has gone out of life forever? They are the ones to whom Psychine is recommended by people who were once as they are but who today are healthy and happy. We can only mention a very few of the many here, but listen to what they say. It's the grandest news ever given to suffering men and women:—

MR. JAMES HERRELL, Springhill, N.S.—

"I was taken down with La Grippe, then Pneumonia and Typhoid Fever, which soon affected my lungs. I was under the care of several physicians, who regarded my case as hopeless. I found a cure in Psychine."

MISS ELLA WOOD, Brownsville, Ont.—

"I was so weak I could hardly drag myself across the floor. I could not sweep the carpet under any consideration. Many times I dropped utterly helpless from fatigue. I found a cure in Psychine."

MR. ALEX. MATHESON, Braemar, Ont.—

"My physician advised me to go to another climate. He told me that my lungs were seriously affected, and that I could only live a short time. I found a cure in Psychine."

MISS ADA M. CHILDS, Florence, Ont.—

"For many months my father had a very bad cough and rheumatism through his chest. He suffered great tortures, and had given up all hope of recovery. He found a cure in Psychine."

MR. BRYCE ALLEN, Jarvis, Ont.—

"I tried medicines, and doctors prescribed for me, but I got no relief. With lungs and stomach diseased, nervous, weak and wasted, I began to use Psychine. With two months' treatment I found a cure in Psychine."

These people were tired doctoring, just as you are. They thought life held nothing for them but pain and suffering and that terrible feeling of weakness and despondency. They found new life in Psychine, and what the great tonic and germ killer has done for them it will do for you. It stops the ravages of disease and repairs the damage done. The greatest builder-up of weak men and women ever given to the public, the greatest of all spring medicines is

There are towns in Hungary, and small towns, too, where from seven to ten idioms are constantly being used. On the Galician frontier there is in a lovely valley the old town of Eperjes. The number of its inhabitants do not exceed 12,000. To this day the good people of Eperjes are in the habit of talking or being talked to in six different languages and several dialects. An ordinary household will include a Slovac manservant, a Hungarian coachman, a German cook and a Polish chambermaid. What is still more remarkable, each grade of society will tenaciously cling to its own language for centuries.

Few children reach the age of eight years without having worked out a cosmology of their own and their own system of metaphysics. A group of youngsters of that mature age were going home from school the other day when one began to instruct the others what to do in case of a certain crisis. "When the end of the world comes do you know what you want to do?" asked the manikin. "Well, you want to give a little jump like this. The world will slip out from under you, and you'll light on the one a-followin' it and be all right." Then the youngsters began practicing the sort of jump that was necessary to give them immortality.

A Specialist's Prescription for women

Who Feel Tired and Run Down.

A Remedy that Gives New Life and Vigor and makes Women Feel Good.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women are the prescription of a specialist.

We don't say that no other living physician could prescribe so good a remedy for women. But we do say this. The ordinary practising physician cannot prescribe so good a one, and no living physician can prescribe a better one.

Dr. Hugo put into the prescription all the knowledge, experience and skill which he had acquired in forty years' practice as a specialist in women's diseases, and included as well the discoveries of all other great physicians.

All that is latest in medicine—all that has been found useful to women, is contained in them. Nothing useless has been included. Nothing useful has been left out.

The result is, that every requirement of the female system in any possible condition is met by them.

And this fact has been certified to by leading physicians and chemists on this continent, to whom Dr. Hugo's prescription was submitted.

If you are in a run-down condition and don't feel as well as you would like to, or suffer from any menstruation difficulty, or weakness peculiar to your sex, avail yourself at once of the prescription of this great and good physician.

The cost of 72 tablets, enough for an extended treatment, is only 50c.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets Make Healthy Women.

Legend of a Book.

A quaint and kindly legend, illustrating the sorrow devout Christians used to feel for the paganism of their favorite classic authors, is that of St. Cadoc and his Virgil. St. Cadoc, whose day is Jan. 24, was the son of a South Welsh prince, who founded several monasteries in Glamorganshire and neighboring regions, but was driven away to Brittany by the coming of the Saxons. There he was walking one day with a copy of Virgil's poems in his hand and wept to think that Virgil as a pagan might be in hell. An ultra orthodox friend who was with him severely reproved him for even doubting the fact, and a sudden gust of wind carried the book out of Cadoc's hand into the sea. But that night he heard in a dream a sweet voice saying: "Pray for me; weary not in praying. I will sing the mercies of the Lord forever." And next day a fisherman brought Cadoc a fish inside which the Virgil was found uninjured. —London Chronicle.

Mixed Wives.

In the early part of the last century there lived in an old New England town a Mr. Church, who in the course of his earthly life was bereft of four wives, all of whom were buried in the same lot. In his old age it became necessary to remove the remains to a new cemetery. This he undertook himself, but in the process the bones became hopelessly mixed. His "New England conscience" would not allow him under the painful circumstances to use the original headstones, so he procured new ones, one of which bore the following inscription:

"Here lies Hannah Church and probably a portion of Emily."

Another:

"Sacred to the memory of Emily Church, who seems to be mixed with Matilda."

Then followed these lines:

Stranger, pause and drop a tear,
For Emily Church lies buried here,
Mixed in some perplexing manner
With Mary, Matilda and probably Hannah.

The Last Versailles Bourbon.

There is at Versailles an orange tree some five centuries old. This tree, which was taken from Fontainebleau of Versailles on the completion of the orangery, was already famous under the title of the Grand Bourbon. According to tradition, the tree had been planted in 1421 by a Princess of Navarre and after several changes of owners came into the possession of Francois I., by whom it was placed at Fontainebleau. When it reached Versailles the king came to visit it, and two grand Bourbons were then face to face. The man passed, and even his bones, torn from their tomb at St. Denis and tossed into a trench, have perished. Not a pinch of his dust remains. But the tree lives and blooms and bears fruit, the only Bourbon at Versailles, serene, invincible, enthroned.

AS SMOOTH AS A BILLIARD TABLE.

Your comfort on a railway journey very largely depends upon the roadbed of the route you select. No matter how luxurious the coaches, or how much personal attention you receive from the employees, you cannot be comfortable if jolted and jarred by a poor and irregular roadbed. On the Lake Shore Railway no expense has been spared to make a roadbed as nearly perfect as the most skilful engineering could build, and as a result, throughout the entire length and breadth of the system the right of way is as smooth as a billiard table. No jolts or jars, nor dust nor dirt. This perfection of service extends throughout the entire system. Lake Shore trains are the most luxurious, they are equipped with every comfort and convenience and are run at highest speed and in safety. They run on time. Son Used Knife On His Father.

SERIOUS RESULT OF A FAMILY QUARREL IN CARLOW TOWNSHIP, THIS COUNTY.

As a result of a family quarrel, Mr. O. K. Cameron, of the township of Carlow, Hastings County, is suffering from three knife wounds in his arms, inflicted by his son George, and is in a very serious condition.

From the information we have been able to gather, says the Bancroft Times, it appears that bad blood has existed for some time between the father and son with regard to the division of the farm. Mrs. Cameron is dead and when the son got married last winter against his father's wishes and asked to have the property deeded to him the trouble began which culminated in an encounter on Tuesday morning in which the father came near losing his life.

We understand the quarrel took place after the transfer of the property had been made and when Mr. Cameron, Sr., undertook to tell the boy what he thought of him. The son claims that his father struck at him with his fist and he drew the knife in self defence. He used it to good advantage, and appears to have made up his mind to put the old man hors de combat. The first blow severed the main artery in the left arm near the shoulder and made a wound which it took eight stitches to close up. At this juncture the father reached for a neck-yoke and the son stabbed him twice again in the right arm. The timely arrival of a neighbor, who tied up the wound in the left arm and stopped the flow of blood, saved the old man's life, as he would have bled to death in a few minutes.

A telephone message was sent to Bancroft for a doctor, and Dr. Beeman went down. He found the wounded man in pretty bad shape. When the bandages were removed from the left arm a stream of blood as thick as your finger shot out, and he had considerable difficulty in stopping the flow. However he succeeded in getting the wounds dressed and made the unfortunate man as comfortable as possible. He is still very weak from loss of blood, but will be brought to town as soon as it is safe to move him. Mr. Cameron is between sixty and seventy years of age.

The young man who did the stabbing is still at large. He treats the matter very lightly, and expresses complete indifference as to the outcome of the quarrel.

Since the above was written, Young Cameron came to town and was placed under arrest by Constable Ruttan. He will be given a preliminary hearing to-day.

Smallpox Across the Bay Bridge.

DISEASE IS BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN CARRIED BY A DOG — UNUSUAL, BUT NOT IMPOSSIBLE.

It was stated on the street to-day that there had been an outbreak of smallpox across the bay, a short distance from the bay bridge, in the Township of Ameliasburg, at the residence of Mr. F. Pitcher, son-in-law of the late Geo. Leonard, of this city. Investigation showed that for some days a son of Mr. Pitcher's, who had been a regular attendant at the Rednersville public school, had been complaining of not feeling well.

The symptoms created some alarm, owing to a peculiar rash which began showing itself. The lad's father consulted a doctor of this city, who pronounced the case indicative of smallpox.

The local doctor at once notified Dr. Moran, Medical Health Officer for Ameliasburg, located at Rednersville Dr Moran at once communicated with Mr. Cyrus Giles, chairman of the Ameliasburg Board of Health, who summoned a meeting of the Board last evening at Dr. Moran's office.

After learning the facts of the case the Board very properly decided to take prompt action in the matter and instructed Dr. Moran to visit the home of Mr. Pitcher at once and take the necessary proceedings under the Health Act to stamp out the disease. The Board of Health have ordered the public school and Sabbath school to be closed pending further developments.

A peculiar feature in connection with the outbreak of the disease is that a diseased dog is supposed to be the cause of the infection.

If such be the case it is an unusual thing, but as it is stated that such diseases are transmitted more readily through hair than in any other way, the dog may be responsible for the spreading of the disease.

Dr. Moran has had some experience with smallpox, and the public may rest contented that, with the assistance of the Ameliasburg Board of Health, nothing will be left undone which should be done to confine the disease to its present quarters.

APRIL WEATHER TO BE UNSETTLED

HICKS FORECASTS AN UNSETTLED MONTH — HIGH TEMPERATURE AND BAD STORMS.

Rev. Irl R. Hicks, of St. Louis, has issued his storm and weather forecasts for April, from which the following information is extracted:

The partial effects of the earth's spring equinox will be felt, in diminishing force, until after the central storm period in April.

The first regular storm period extends from the 2nd to the 7th, having its centre on the 4th. This period is also embraced in the mercury period, which covers the 1st to the 12th, central on the 4th. By the 3rd, marked fall of the barometer will be noted in western sections. Change to warmer will be advancing eastward out of the same region. By about the 4th these condition will grow into cloudiness and rain. During the 4th, 5th and 6th, wide areas of cloudiness and rain will pass eastwardly across the country, breaking into severe squalls, thundergusts and hail in various localities.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 9th, 10th and 11th. This period is at the culmination of the Mercury period, with the moon on the celestial equator on the 5th, full on the 9th, and in perigee on the 10th. These combined facts, all blending with the Mercury and the Vernal equinoxes will conspire to bring on very high temperature, low barometer and forceful storms, beginning on and next to the 9th in Western sections and passing eastwardly across the country from about Monday, the 9th to Thursday, the 12th. Change to decidedly cooler weather will follow for several days, causing frosts in many sections during the nights ranging between the 11th to 15th. Hail storms will be the most natural results, with violent local gusts, during the passage of these April thunder clouds.

A regular storm period extends from the 15th to the 19th, having its centre on Monday the 16th. As we enter this period a rapid change to much warmer will advance from western parts, the barometer will fall correspondingly fast and low, the general cloudiness will increase from the west and more storms of rain and thunder will touch many parts during the eastward march, of storm areas, from Monday, the 16th, in the west, to Thursday, the 19th, in the east. Another change to rising barometer and much cooler will push the western sides of these storms, causing more very cool nights, with decided frosts in central to northern sections, from about the 18th to 21st.

A reactionary storm period is central on the 22nd, 23rd and 24th. This period will be hurried in its development by the passage of the Moon across the celestial equator on the 21st, it will be intensified by the New Moon on the 23rd and prolonged by the moon in apogee on the 25th. A series of threatening to violent thunder storms will be quite natural for three to five days at this time, say from about Saturday the 21st to Wednesday the 25th.

A regular storm period extends from the 26th to the 30th, having its centre on the 27th. The Moon is at extreme north declination on the 29th, inducing atmospheric currents from the south. Hence very high temperature will prevail, with low barometer pressures; threatening storm clouds will gather, and thunder storms, with heavy rain and hail in many localities, may be expected, passing eastwardly over the country from Friday, the 27th, to Monday, the 30th. Rising barometer and change to much cooler will follow up these storms from the northwest.

Assizes Have Been Concluded.

UNFINISHED CASES TRAVERSED TO NOVEMBER SITTINGS NEXT MONTH.

The Spring Assizes, which have been remarkable for their length and the highly interesting cases tried, came to an end to-day, having lasted nearly two weeks. Following is a summary of the latest cases before Chief Justice Falconbridge:

Millard vs. Burgoyne — This case was concluded last evening. The plaintiff claimed damages for injuries received by being knocked down by a vehicle driven by the defendant. A number of questions were submitted to the jury and their answers in substance were that some blame was attached to both parties and in consequence no damages were allowed. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff, and Mr. O'Flynn for the defendant.

Marchant vs. Rathbun Co. — The plaintiff, C. E. Marchant, is a young Englishman, who on the 26th of July last, at Deseronto, sustained an accident at the defendants' mill, whereby he lost three fingers of the right hand and his shoulder was also lacerated by a saw. He claims damages on the ground of contributory negligence. It appears that Marchant was working near a band-saw and in crossing over what is known as the carriage track, leading to the saw, slipped upon some slippery bark and fell against the saw with the above result. It is alleged by the plaintiff that the company were negligent in not having this slippery bark removed as fast as it was accumulated. The defendants allege that the plaintiff did not exercise that care he should have used whilst working near the saw. The case was given to the jury at noon. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff; Mr S. Masson for the defendants.

The jury finally agreed to disagree.

The last case to be tried by His Lordship was a non-jury case, namely, Perry vs. Perry.—The plaintiff, a Mrs. Perry, now residing in Peterboro, brings the action to recover alimony from her husband who is at present living in Alberta. The local Master in Chancery some time ago gave an interim order granting alimony to Mrs Perry, which order, it is alleged has not been obeyed. Case not concluded. Messrs. Porter & Carnew for the plaintiff; Mr. W. J. McCamon for the defendant.

The remainder of the cases on the docket have been traversed to the non-jury sittings, which open here on the 28th of next month.

The Lloyd Case.

IS STILL A TOPIC OF POPULAR CONVERSATION IN THIS CITY.

The Lloyd murder trial, with the final acquittal of the aged prisoner, is still "the talk of the town." The verdict can hardly be said to have caused much surprise. Few people thought the case had been brought sufficiently home to the prisoner enough to satisfy the jury that he was the murderer—for that the case was one of murder no one doubts.

A professional man, talking to The Intelligencer yesterday, said; "There was murder there, sure. I have not the slightest doubt of that."

If there was murder, and Adam Lloyd did not do it, who did?

It is hinted that the jury declined to convict Lloyd because they thought some other people knew more about the case than he did.

It is said that the last of the Lloyd case has not yet been heard, and that the murderer may yet be brought to justice.

All right-thinking men and women will hope so.

CENT. ONTARIO RAILROAD BONDS,

MACKENZIE AND MANN HAVE ACQUIRED A BLOCK OF THEM.

Mail and Empire; Mr. Wm. Mackenzie, of the Mackenzie, Mann Co., Limited, stated last night that his company had purchased a certain block of the bonds of the Central Ontario Railway. He was not prepared to say that it constituted a controlling interest, because there was so much litigation as to the ownership of the other bonds. The block which he and his colleagues had purchased, however, was free of claims.

The Central Ontario Railway is what is known, in vulgar parlance, as a "jerk-water line." It runs from Picton into the mineral regions of North Hastings. It was promoted by Mr. S. J. Ritchie, of Akron, O., and for a time was owned by the late Judge Stevenson Burke, of Cleveland, O. Litigation as to the bonds has been going on for years, although the line is being operated, it is said, with profit.

Residence Burned.

The residence of Mr E. W. Roughley, near Paudash Lake, was completely destroyed by fire on Sunday last, with all its contents, says the Bancroft Times. Only Mrs. Roughly and two daughters were at home at the time, and the former narrowly escaped with her life. One of the daughters had her hands and face badly burned while trying to save some of the furniture. The house was a frame building and Mr. Roughley carried no insurance, so that his loss is pretty heavy.

Miss Eileen Millett Gets Fine Position.

A Toronto paper gives the following information concerning the young lady who was the soprano soloist at the recent Philharmonic concert in this city, and whose singing was greatly admired: Miss Eileen Millett, soprano soloist at the Metropolitan Church for some years, has been offered and has accepted the position as soloist in the First Baptist Church, Franklin, Pa., at the guaranteed salary of $1,700 per annum. Miss Millett has been a pupil of Dr. F. H. Torrington from the age of 13 years, being trained by him as a church, concert and oratorio singer. She leaves for her new position on Tuesday next, April 10.

And, to cap it all, a Federal League team, capable of making any bunch in Canada travel some to catch 'em, is a strong probability. How does that strike you?

In the meantime, what about lacrosse and baseball for this summer? Good players are said to be plentiful, especially among those sporty young gentlemen, the bankers. In other places teams have already organized for the season, why not here? Good Friday is only six days off. Whose move is it?

"Fruit-a-tives" (Fruit Liver Tablets) are concentrated fruit juices. And it is these fruit juices that cure Constipation, Biliousness, Headaches, Indigestion, Palpitation of the Heart and all Troubles of the Stomach and Kidneys. THE LIQUIDATORS ACT

Interim Injunction Against Toronto Life Shareholders.

Joseph Wright, the Hudson Girls, E. J. Burt, et al, Restrained From Disposing of or Transfering Their Toronto Life Shares—Results of Police Court Dragnet Satisfactory to Liquidators of York Loan—The Investigation.

Toronto, April 7.—Yesterday the National Trust Co. issued a writ against the following shareholders in the Toronto Life Insurance Co.:

Lillie Daw, 75 shares.
Agnes Conghlin, 50 shares.
Mrs. M. J. Hassard, 100 shares.
Lillian Hudson, 181 shares.
Georgina Hudson, 141 shares.
Annie Lee, 58 shares.
Fred Lee, 50 shares.
Joan McCann, 530 shares.
Joseph Phillips, 125 shares.
Annie Robb, 192 shares.
Emma Souter, 265 shares.
Maggie Ventress, 50 shares.
Effie Whatnough, 50 shares.
E. J. Burt, 91 shares.

By the writ the liquidators asked for a declaration that the shares of stock of the Toronto Life, on the names of the defendants are held by the defendants as trustees for the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs are the rightful owners. Also for an order that the defendants do transfer and assign the shares to the plaintiffs and for an injunction restraining the defendants from transferring, assigning, permitting assignment, or in any way dealing with the shares until the action is finally disposed of.

Acting for the liquidators, C. D Scott, solicitor, obtained from Mr. Justice Mabee, at Osgoode Hall, an interim injunction against the defendants, returnable Monday, 16th inst.

Satisfied With Present Position.

Mr. White, manager of the National Trust, stated that with regard to the Toronto Life and the Liszt Piano Co., the liquidators had already taken such steps as to protect the interests of the York County Loan shareholders and are satisfied with the present position.

Speaking of Crown Attorney Curry's investigation, Mr. White said it had been of the greatest possible advantage to the shareholders of the York County Loan Co. By the dragnet of the criminal courts, the transactions in regard to the subsidiary companies had been exposed and light thrown upon the York County Loan situation that could not possibly be got from books of the York County Loan.

Another point to be considered was that the prosecution of Phillips which is bringing out the facts is not costing the York Loan shareholders one dollar.

Mr. Barrett's Philosophy.

In the investigation in the Police Court yesterday, Joseph Barrett, managing director of the Southern Light & Power Co., said he had made from $3.00 to 50 cents on each pole that was bought by the company.

"Did Phillips know it?" asked Crown Attorney Curry.

"Certainly," answered Mr. Barrett.

"How much did he get out of it?"

"I raised his salary."

"Raised the president's salary?"

"Why not? I paid all the men."

"What increase did you give him?"

"I gave him $35 a week, instead of $25."

Mr. Barrett added: "I got poles cheaper than any other person. There was no reason why I should not get advantage of that."

"You were employed by the company to get the poles at the cheapest possible price?"

"The company got good value in those poles."

The way the company was formed was the subject of investigation. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett were paid $3,351 in cash for their property in Erindale and in addition were to be given $295,000 in paid-up capital stock of the company. The whole stock amounted to $300,000, divided into $100 shares.

A Still-Born Company.

"How much did the Southern Light & Power Co. get from the York Loan Co?" asked Mr. Curry.

"About $217,000 was paid to Mr. Hicks, the treasurer."

"What was he before?"

"An employe of the York Loan Co."

"What security had the York Loan?"

"We gave a mortgage for $200,000 in July, 1904. In August this mortgage was retired, and bonds issued for $200,000, of which $200,000 worth was assigned to the York Loan."

"What have you got now to show for this $217,000?"

"Our land, plant, etc."

"Yes, a still-born child," remarked the crown attorney.

"I notice a carload of poles arriving every now and then," said Mr. Curry, looking up from the books. "Did you get a rakeoff on all the poles?"

"Certainly."

"How much would it amount to altogether?"

"Perhaps $400."

"It looks more like $1,000 from the way I find things?"

"It might amount to that."

"But you were acting as a trustee," protested Magistrate Denison. "You were supposed to buy them at the lowest price."

"The company paid what any other company would under the circumstances."

"You had the underground passage," remarked Mr. Curry smiling.

Mr. Burt Again.

E. J. Burt, vice-president of the York Loan Co., was again on the stand. He had with him a duplicate copy of his bank book. He was told also to get a bank book of his wife's.

The $17,000 he earned from the Toronto Life Co. was not all he earned. He had earned also money from the York County Loan, but never got commissions on sales from outsiders to the York County Loan.

"Do you remember being mulcted in damages for scaring someone's horses?"

"Yes."

"Who paid those damages?"

"The York County Loan paid them."

Write Alike.

Georgina Hudson, who was called next, was asked what she had to do with Philip's private bank account.

"I made some deposits," she said.

"And the others were made by whom?"

"By my sister, I suppose."

"Which deposit slips are yours?" asked Mr. Curry handing out a bunch.

"I can't always tell my sister's handwriting from mine," remarked Miss Hudson after looking over them for some moments.

"Why?"

"We write very much the same."

A Director's Knowledge.

William Paine, one of the directors of the York Loan, said that he was elected in April, 1905, to fill the place left vacant by the resignation of A. T. Hunter. At the same time he was made a director of the Toronto Life Insurance Co. For the former he was paid $15 a week and the same for the Toronto Life.

Previous to that time he was employed as an insurance agent at $15 a week for the York Loan. Then he was raised to an inspectorship at $20 a week. He kept track of the agents in older Ontario. "I occasionally wrote business for terminating stock," he said.

"The agents of the York Loan were paid $4 for writing up a share, paying 25 cents a week. Then if they wrote four of those shares they were given $3 extra."

"Did most of them get the bonus?"

"Yes."

The same agents admitted the witness acted for the Toronto Life, the National Monthly and the Liszt Piano Co. Returns were often made to the York Loan office on York Loan Co. blanks

"What proportion of the people that went in withdrew their money?"

"I can't say. A number of them went in again."

Collected Commission Again.

"And the agents collected their commission again?"

"Yes."

"About this loan to the Southern Power Co. in July. Did you know that company was owned by Mr. Phillips?"

"No."

"Did you know it was the York Loan's money that started the Toronto Life?"

"No."

"But you knew that the president gave instructions to the employes of the York Loan to take stock in the Toronto Life."

"Yes."

"Did you know anything about the setting apart of $500,000 for the purpose of the Liszt pianos?"

"No, that was before my time."

Continues Monday.

The investigation was adjourned until Monday under a protest from J. E. Jones, who claimed that the investigation should proceed with haste as his client was in custody

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Ottawa, April 7.—The Opposition found in the fall of the Laurier tower a splendid opportunity for heckling the Government, and availed themselves to the fullest extent. The Minister of Public Works announced that he had appointed Mr. Curry of Toronto and Mr. Hutchinson of Montreal to make the investigation.

The evening session was quite unruly. It was largely devoted to personalities between Messrs. Bennett and Conmee and between Mr. Conmee and Col. Sam Hughes. The Speaker repeatedly called the members to order.

The House will adjourn from April 11 to April 17 for Easter.

Compromise Ends Controversy.

Vienna, April 7.—After fourteen months' of controversy between the throne and the coalition parties, the Hungarian crisis finally has been settled. Both sides express satisfaction with the result obtained, which appears to be in the nature of a compromise. The Fejervary Cabinet welcomed the overtures of the coalition and thus an agreement was speedily reached. The elections will be held within the proper time and parliamentary Government will be re-established.

No Winners and No Losers.

London, April 7.—In the House of Lords yesterday, replying to a question regarding the Moroccan conference, the under secretary, Lord Edmond FitzMaurice, said that the signing of the protocol would occur at an early date, if not to-day. He added that when the papers were laid on the table in the House he thought the members would agree that the phrase, frequently used, that there had been "Neither victors nor vanquished," expressed the true situation.

Railway Fireman Killed.

Woodstock, April 7.—Nineteen-year-old Alfred Norwood, a Grand Trunk fireman of Sarnia, was instantly killed Thursday night in the G. T. R. yards. He had completed raking out the ashes from the ashpan, and was crawling from beneath his engine, not noticing the limited, running at thirty miles an hour, on the adjacent track. The steps of the engine struck and instantly killed him. Norwood had been firing for about three months.

Forty-Nine Were Killed.

Nagold, Black Forest, Germany, April 7.—A revised list of the casualties resulting from the collapse of the Hotel um Hirschen (Stag Hotel) Thursday, shows that forty-nine persons lost their lives and that fifty were severely injured.

One Year In Central.

Guelph, April 7.—John B. Madill, who was found guilty of attempting to defraud the insurance companies in connection with the Hillsburg creamery, was yesterday sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

HIGHWAYS FOR PEOPLE

benefitting in the conservation of its forest wealth by their knowledge and skill. In the United States forestry is now a department of the Federal Government.

On the question of establishing a forestry department the report says: "We realize that a beginning may be made without incurring at first all the expenditures of a complete faculty," and concludes, "We are strongly of the view that the people of Ontario will endorse the action of the Government in creating a school of forestry, by means of which the scientific treatment of our forests can be effectively carried out."

The commission commends to the university authorities the idea of devoting the beautiful ravine north and south from the biological building to the boundary of McMaster University, to the purpose of a botanical garden.

An Art School.

The hope is expressed that the University of Toronto will either have its own art school or have affiliated with it a school conducted on the most advanced principles.

It has also hoped that the university may have connected with it a school of music over the management and teaching of which it would have complete control.

A history of the meteorological survey is included. "Believing that its transfer would not be in the public interest, we would strongly urge that prompt communication be had with the Dominion Government, with a view to having an appropriation for the erection of a new observatory on the site that has been provided by the university, made during the present session of the Parliament of Canada and the entire work now being carried on at the observatory being done in the new building."

Agricultural College.

The relation of the Ontario Agricultural College to the University of Toronto is considered. While not believing that the university should interfere with or be responsible for the management of the college, it is suggested that there might be an advantage in having in addition to the present, two members elected by the graduates in agriculture, who would represent the agricultural side of university education. It also suggested that an advisory council be appointed to assist the Minister of Agriculture, to be composed of the deputy minister of agriculture (chairman), the president of the college, three graduates or associates of the college resident in Ontario and not members of the staff and, if thought desirable, two representative farmers not graduates of the college.

A state veterinary college is recommended, that the college be placed under the Minister of Agriculture, and that the Minister have an advisory board to assist him in the administration of same, and that it be affiliated with the University of Toronto.

Other Suggestions.

The desirability of college residences is dwelt on. Others suggestions are:

A physical director should be appointed. He should be a graduate in medicine

As to discipline, each college and faculty should be responsible for its own students

A students' committee to represent the undergraduates as a whole is advised.

A bureau of self-support for the students.

Department of pedagogy.

Superintendent of buildings and grounds.

The report deals with the financial support of the university and suggests that for its endowment at least a million acres in New Ontario be set aside.

Manhood Suffrage Registration.

The Premier introduced a bill to repeal the Manhood Suffrage Registration Act. This will do away with the necessity of registering manhood suffrage voters in cities and county towns. "It is inconvenience and a nuisance," said the Premier.

A number of questions were answered, several bills were read a second time, and the House went into committee on the railway bill. On the clause fixing twenty-five years as the limit of a franchise, Premier Whitney said:

Highways For the People.

"The highways are the property of the people, and must remain so forever. When it is considered that municipal councils may be elected one year and turned out of office the next, we should go slow in giving them power to make agreements for all time to come. The Government will not take the responsibility under any circumstances of giving the power to grant any perpetual franchises."

Mr. Graham Concurs.

Mr Graham spoke for the Opposition in concurrence with the views of the Premier. He didn't believe any member of the House would care to pass legislation giving a perpetual franchise. It had been truly said that it became the duty of a Legislature to protect municipalities against themselves. The question was how far they might go without retarding railway enterprise.

By mutual consent the debatable clauses of the bill were passed over without discussion, to facilitate progress. These clauses will be fully threshed out when the third reading takes place.

The first report of the hydro-electric power commission was presented to the Government by the chairman, Hon. Adam Beck, yesterday afternoon. The report will not be given out for a few days.

Fred Cramus of Brantford Loses His Life In Altercation.

Buffalo April, 9.—His breast penetrated by a sharp file in the hands of Rudolph Schilling, a fellow workman, Frederick Cramus of Brantford, Ont., an employe at the Plant & Letchworth works here, lies dead. Schilling has been placed under arrest.

The men were employed as patternmakers by the firm, and worked on benches side by side. Shortly after 10 o'clock Saturday morning Schilling approached Cramus, and, so it is said, asked familiarly, "How are you, Cramus?" The latter seemed to resent the freedom of this mode of being addressed, and returned that he "had a handle to his name and preferred to be called by it."

As a result of the altercation that came after, Schilling made a thrust at the other with a sharp file used to scrape patterns. Cramus expired almost instantly, a blood-vessel having been severed.

It is claimed by Schilling that his benchmate first dealt him a sharp blow on the jaw with his clenched fist, and that he (Schilling) acted in self-defence. He is a youth of 19 and had been at work on the plant for eight months. Cramus was 29 years old and had been in Buffalo for some time.

WOULD TRUST COLONIES.

Lord Curzon Raps Government re. Natal's Recent Treatment.

London, April 9.—Lord Curzon, in his speech at the Pilgrims' Club banquet at the Savoy Hotel Friday night appealed to the British to as far as they could, trust the men on the spot in the colonies and not to worry, fret or nag them with dogmatic wisdom. They themselves did not claim superior wisdom, but in any case their errors were in nowise comparable to these based on dogmatic ideas, conceived at home.

He proceeded to rap the Government for its recent treatment of Natal, warning it never to sacrifice the interests of a dependency to exclusively British interests and never to force on it a policy unsuitable to it because it was advantageous to the Home Government.

Lord Curzon concluded by urging the country to send its best men to its dependencies.

KILLED AN INSANE PATIENT.

St. John's Authorities Astounded By a Conscious-Stricken Man.

St. John, N. B., April 9.—Edward Maloney, an Englishman, about 26 years of age, entered the Central Station Saturday and astonished the police by stating he had killed a man last August in the City of Warren, Pennsylvania.

Maloney says that, four years ago, he had charge of a ward in a state insane asylum in Warren, Pa. One day in August last he was attending a patient named Davidson, who angered him. Having a violent temper, he struck the man over the head with an instrument and killed him.' He then ran away to Canada.

Bomb Kills Governor.

Blown to Pieces in Principal Street Of His Town.

Reactionists Ruler of Tver Murdered by Very Young Man —Held Responsible For the Beatings of the Intelligencia by the "Black Hundreds" Last Fall – Governor Was Terribly Mutilated —Coachman Injured.

Province of Tver, Russia, April 9.—While the Governor of Tver, M. Sleptzoff, was passing through the principal street of the town Saturday he was killed by the explosion of a bomb.

Governor Sleptzoff was regarded as a very reactionary official, and was held responsible for the beatings administered to the intelligencia by the "Black Hundreds" last fall.

The governor was in his carriage when he was assassinated. His body was terribly mutilated and his coachman was seriously injured. The bomb exploded with terrible force. All the windows in the neighborhood were broken. The assassin, who is a very young man, was arrested.

PANIC AMONG AUTOCRATS.

Radicals Will Control House and Czar Must Yield to Witte.

St. Petersburg, April 9.—A panic has been created in Government circles by the surprising strength developed by the Constitutional Democrats in the elections, which may have immediate and dramatic consequences. The issue between reaction and reform which has been hanging in the balance, has been unexpectedly precipitated by Premier Witte. The elections have greatly strengthened the Premier's hand in his fight against the reactionaries, and he now feels strong enough to challenge Gen. Trepoff and Minister of Interior Durnovo and the entire reactionary cabal.

Would Be Fatal Blunder.

Less than a fortnight ago the Premier was decidedly pessimistic, and believed that the majority in the lower House of Parliament would be Conservative, and that the entire program for reform might be overthrown. The results of the elections, however, convinced him that the Radicals will control the House, and that an attempt to thwart the popular will, as expressed by the ballot-box, would be a fatal blunder on the part of the Government. It was learned from an unimpeachable source Saturday night that the Premier journeyed to Tsarskoe Selo on Thursday to lay this view before the Emperor, and made another trip to Tsarskoe Selo Friday night, and was closeted with His Majesty until after midnight.

The impression is abroad that the success of the Constitutional Democrats' bill will insure the success of the big foreign loan of which the Government is in such urgent need.

Russian Election Results.

St. Petersburg, April 9.—The electoral colleges in 20 out of the 51 provinces in European Russia yesterday elected 178 members to the National Parliament—about one-third of its entire membership—and returns received up to midnight indicate that the wildest hopes of the Liberals have been realized, the Constitutional Democrats and other progressivists practically everywhere having gained a tremendous victory over the Octobrists and other Conservative parties. As far as is ascertainable not a single reactionary candidate pulled through.

Smuggling On Increase.

St. John, N.B., April 9.—Smuggling on the winter port steamers has now reached such a magnitude that customs officials are taking every precaution. So far three ships of different lines have been fined $400 each. Cigars and tobacco are sold to different liquor stores in the city at fair profit by a member of the crew, who handles the goods. Smuggling is apparently increasing.

Liberal Majority Reduced.

London, April 9.—The bye-election Friday in the Eye division of Suffolk in consequence of the resignation of F. S. Stevenson, resulted in the election of H. Pearson, Liberal, a son of Sir Weetman Pearson, by a majority of 197 over the Marquess of Graham, Conservative, eldest son of the Duke of Montrose. In the last contested election in Eye, held in 1900, the Liberal majority was 1,517.

Stabbing at Haileybury.

Haileybury, April 9.—A teamster named Marrault is in a dangerous condition, having been stabbed four times in the back by a Swede with whom he was quarreling. The affair took place on the main street here about 11 o'clock Saturday night. Some parties hearing the noise came to the man's rescue, carrying him into Dr. Jackson's surgery, where he is being cared for.

Clerks' Won't Enter Building.

Ottawa, April 9.—It is now anounced that the defective cement that caused the collapse of the Laurier tower was used throughout the whole addition and that the civil servants employed in the departments of Inland Revenue and Public Works have absolutely refused to enter it.

A Stabbing Affray.

Ottawa, April 9.—Alphone Richard, aged about 30 years, is in the hospital badly stabbed about the abdomen, the result of a drunken brawl early yesterday morning. Napoleon Roy is in Hull jail awaiting the issue. Roy has a nasty cut on the head from a stone thrown by Richard.

Farmer's Bad Accident.

Brockville, April 9.—A farmer, named Robert Grey, will lose his left hand as the result of an accident. His coat sleeve became entangled in the moving cogwheels of a well-drilling machine, and the forearm was ground almost to a pulp.

Burns to Death.

Saskatoon, April 9.—Mrs. George Gill, wife of resident of St. Paul, who had contemplated removing here in the immediate future, was burned to death in her house Saturday night during the temporary absence of her husband.

Sea Hunting Is Good.

Montreal, April 9.—A cable from St. John's, Nfld., reads as follows: The seal fisheries have been the best for twenty years. The latest return from the fleet indicate a total catch of 360,000 seals against 177,000 for 1905.

Canada's Revenue.

Ottawa, April 9.—The revenue of Canada for the nine months of the current fiscal year up to the end of March totaled $57,051,562, an increase of $5,581,794 over the corresponding period of the previous year.

Goes to Ottawa.

London, April 9.—George Rennie, who for many years was gardener at the London Insane Asylum, has been appointed head gardener at the Parliament buildings, Ottawa.

The Gillies Limit.

An unexpected but very wise and statesmanlike step, says the Guelph Herald, has been taken by the Whitney Government in their determination to retain and mine the Gillies Limit at Cobalt for the benefit of the people of this Province. The land in question is believed to be the richest in ores in that wonderfully rich country—the very pick of the whole district.

Some idea of the wealth of the silver region, and especially that of the Gillies limit, may be gained from the fact that in places solid chunks of almost pure silver, weighing many pounds, may be picked up from the surface. Needless to say, this has attracted the attention and excited the cupidity of the less scrupulous of the crowd awaiting the opening of the limit, and a considerable quantity of valuable ore has already been made off with by poachers on the Government's preserve. The authorities, however, have placed a strong guard of constables around the ore-bearing district, and further thieving will be prevented as far as is possible.

During the coming summer Prof. Miller, of the Ontario Bureau of Mines, will make a thorough examination of the Gillies limit, with a view to ascertaining the geological formation and tracing the valuable ore veins, so that when the limit is thrown open on October 1st next everything may be in readiness for the Government to proceed with the development of the mines by the commission to be appointed.

Thus again has the Whitney Government fulfilled a pledge. The mines and the timber limits were not to be, as under the Ross administration, the prizes and rewards of political heelers, but are to be safeguarded in the interests of the people. The Gillies limit is a practical proof of the manner in which these interests are being looked after.

But, in addition to this, Mr. Whitney's mining policy is shown in another matter which still further emphasizes his desire to do all that he could for the people. Rich mineral veins lie on the right of way of the Government railroad, in a section of about three and a half miles in length. The privilege of developing this section will be disposed of to the highest bidder, whose bonus, however, must be not less than $50,000. Further, the Government must share in the yield of the deposits. On all ore worth more than $400 a ton the holder must pay 10 per cent. to the Government; on ore worth $1,000 a ton the tax is to be 25 per cent.; on ore of greater value than $1,000 a ton the Government is to get 50 per cent.

The public will no doubt contrast the Ontario Government's attention to their duties with that of the Dominion administration. At Ottawa graft is rampant, the public's property and money is being given away for political ends. It is in the power of the people to stop all this, as we have in Ontario, and the Conservatives have the leaders ready and capable to carry out an announced policy in the interests of the people of the whole Dominion.

It is a regrettable fact that many people in this city will find lessons in the following which they may profitably take to heart:

When your catalogue comes from the mail order house, wait until you get home before removing the wrapper; then, after supper, when the chores are done, draw an easy chair to the table, where the light will shine all on the page, put on your glasses so that no bargains can escape your eye, and settle down for an hour of enjoyment. What a wonderful book it is, to be sure—wonderful in what it does not contain as in what it does. We miss something we should be glad to see. How much taxes will they pay for improving roads and bridges, for the support of the poor of the county, for the expenses of running the business of the town and county? On what page is their offer to contribute money or services in the establishment and maintenance of church or Sunday school for the improvement of the moral tone of the community? What line of credit will they extend to you when your money is gone?; when through illness or misfortune you are not able to send them cash with your order for hardware, dry goods, etc.? Where is their offer to contribute to any demonstration on a holiday? In what department do they explain to you the increased value of your property as a result of dealing with them? If in the catalogue you find these questions answered to your entire satisfaction, bring the answers in. Under such conditions no town will be needed, further than to furnish a railroad station, express office and post office, all of which might be covered with one roof. If you buy of catalogue houses, think over the above seriously, and then make up your mind that you should patronize local business people.

A bill has been introduced into the Ontario Legislature to compel every director in a company dealing in medicine to take out a license as a qualified druggist. The Toronto Star hits off the situation exactly in the following: As an amendment to the Pharmacy bill, it might be provided that every director of a company selling spring hats shall be a licensed milliner. It further occurs to us that no newspaper ought to be allowed to publish poetry unless every director of the company has taken out a poetic license. Mr. Downey ought to promote a bill providing that all the directors of a newspaper shall be printers. It is also suggested that every director of the King Edward Hotel Company shall be a licensed bartender. Also that every trustee in a hospital shall be a qualified physician. Likewise that every director of a company manufacturing steam boilers shall take out an engineer's license.

Isn't that the limit for gall! It's bad enough for any Yankee newspaper to butt in, but surely a sheet published in Boston, the scene of the famous "tea party," should have sense enough to let John Bull run his own show!

Every true sportsman will applaud the action of the local branch of the Fish and Game Protective Association in taking steps to bring about a better observance of the Game laws in this district. If, as is alleged, certain overseers have not only neglected to prosecute cases of violation brought to their notice, but have given the names of the complainants to the lawbreakers, the said overseers should be given a short shrift by the Government. The enforcement of the Game laws has been a joke in this district long enough. Drastic measures are necessary.

The Hamilton Spectator waxes hilariously funny because we humbly pointed out that the murders investigated at the recent Assizes here were committed in the County and were simply tried here, this being the county town. Our esteemed contemporary says: "We suppose that calf which gouged the girl's eye out came from the county, too." It is not easy to see what object the Spec has in "rubbing it in" to Belleville, unless the fact that the editor of a rival Hamilton paper is a native of this city has something to do with it. We beg to assure our esteemed contemporary that human life is as safe here as it is in Hamilton, and that even he (if he behaved himself) might live in this burg without being hit with anything more deadly than a highball.

Cambridge Won the Historic Boat Race.

London, April 7.—The sixty-third annual boat race, between crews representing the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, was rowed to-day over the course from Putney to Mortlake, on the Thames, a distance of a little over four and a half miles, and was won by Cambridge, by three and a half lengths, after an unexciting race. Time, 19 mins., 24 secs.

Cambridge took the lead from the start and the race was never in the slightest doubt. The Oxford men struggled gamely to the end, but the work was so punishing that several of them collapsed.

The day was bright and sunny, the wind was very light, the water was smooth and there was very little choice in the stations. Enormous crowds thronged all parts of the course.

Oxford won the toss and chose the Surrey side. The two boats got away nicely at 12.03. Cambridge struck the water first, pulling 38 strikes during the first minute to Oxford's 37. The nose of the Cambridge boat quickly showed in front, and at the end of the first mile post Cambridge was half a length to the good.

The leaders were rowing with perfect finish to their strokes. They increased their lead to a full length before Craven Steps, about three-quarters of a mile from the start, was reached. Thereafter Cambridge drew away with every stroke. At Hammersmith Bridge, a mile three-quarters from the start, Cambridge already had the race well in hand, with a lead of over two lengths.

The Oxford boat at that stage of the race was rolling badly. Shortly afterwards the Oxford men spurted a little and took their rival's water, but from that time on it was merely a procession.

The race was the sixty-third contest between crews of the two great English universities. Since 1853 the races have been held annually. Between 1829, the year of the first aquatic contest between these universities, and this year, Oxford has won 34 and Cambridge 28 times, the race in 1877 resulting in a dead heat. Last year Oxford won by three lengths, rowing the course from Putney to Mortlake in 20 minutes, 35 seconds.

At the outset this season Oxford was regarded as having the better chance of winning, her oarsmen being superior in weight and physique to those of Cambridge. Later, however, several members of the Oxford crew were incapacitated, and in the betting yesterday Cambridge was the favorite.

The closest contests were — Dead heat 1877, half-length, 1856, 1867 1891 and 1896. One race went to Oxford on a foul, and Cambridge sank in 1859. In 1849 and in 1852 two races were rowed.

In the race in 1846 outriggers were first used; in 1857 boats without keels were first brought into requisition, and in 1873 sliding seats were tried for the first time.

Cambridge took three races in a row in 1839, '40 and '41. The longest strings were—Oxford; nine straight years, 1861 to 1869; and again, nine straights, from 1890 to 1898. The longest runs for Cambridge were—five straights, 1870 to 1874; four from 1886 to 1889, and three from 1902 to 1904.

The fastest times from Putney to Mortlake, or vice versa, were—1893, Oxford, 18.47, duplicated in 1900 by Cambridge.

Oxford won last year in 20.35 by three lengths.

BOTH FOOD AND MEDICINE.

We like best to call Scott's Emulsion a food-medicine. It is a term that aptly describes the character and action of our Emulsion. More than a medicine—more than a food, yet combining the vital principles of both. It is for this reason that Scott's Emulsion has a distinct and special value in all wasting diseases. There is nothing better to remedy the troubles of imperfect growth and delicate health in children. The action of Scott's Emulsion is just as effective in treating weakness and wasting in adults.

Our Shade Trees

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Mr. Editor,—Is it not a pity that there is no adequate supervision of our beautiful shade trees? Should there not be a by-law to regulate the planting, as well as the pruning and cutting down, or better still, a supervisor appointed, who has made some study of the subject?

All over the city the trees have been planted too close together to begin with, then trimmed and cut until they are maimed and mutilated, and their beauty gone, and when in the end it is absolutely unavoidable, some are cut out, leaving unsightly stumps, with trees on each side which can never recover from the butchering to which they have been subjected, but being more exposed than before to wind and weather, last but a short time, and are not much loss when they go. There is something radically wrong about all this. There ought to be a proper and uniform distance maintained and property owners made to observe this.

Experts argue that there should not be less than 35 feet at least between maples. In Rochester 40 feet is the distance allowed. Avenue A is planted with sugar maples 40 feet apart. Brighton Avenue with cut-leaved birches 40 feet apart, and Goodman St. with elms 50 feet apart. Why should we not have more variety, too?

Our city is going ahead. More building to be done this year than has been the case for years. Let us all do what we can to help the forward movement and to foster a spirit of municipal pride that will make Belleville worthy of its name of Beautiful city.

Yours for,
CIVIC IMPROVEMENT.

OLIVE OIL AS AID TO BEAUTY.

ENGLISH DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION STARTS NEW FAD IN LONDON.

London, April 8.—According to the well-known journal, Family Doctor, fagged-out society beauties may find salvation in olive oil. The Family Doctor relates how a reigning London beauty went to the King's physician during the season and said; "What shall I take for my complexion? I am a sight." The reply was; "Take olive oil; live on it, live in it, live with it, drink it, dress your food with it, lubricate yourself with it."

As a result of following this advice the young woman achieved a complexion of rosy blood, pink damask and gloire de Dijon roses, and began to give beauty luncheons. These luncheons have since become very popular.

LONDON HAS A WEIRD MYSTERY.

A PHOTOGRAPHER WHOSE CAMERA GIVES AMAZING RESULTS.

New York, April 8.— The Herald has the following cable from London;—An astounding story of mysterious photographs, which is vouched for by a well-known London photographer, is told in the current number of M.A.P.

A certain young woman named Miss B., who lives with her mother in one of the home counties, made an appointment with the photographer in question. The sitting was duly given, the photograph taken, and after the lapse of a week the young woman received a letter saying the photographs were not a success and asking for another sitting.

She agreed, and as soon as possible went to London again and a second photograph was taken. A short time elapsed, and as no proofs were sent she wrote making inquiries, only to receive a very apologetic letter, saying that again the photographs were failures and asking for a third sitting. For the third time Miss B. came to London. She is a good-natured girl, and contented herself with expressing the hope that this time there would be a successful result. In two days' time she received an urgent letter from the photographer, asking her to come up to his studio, and bring a friend with her.

As a result of this letter Miss B., accompanied by her mother, paid a fourth visit to the studio, and there the photographer exhibited the amazing results of the three sittings. The actual photographs of the girl herself were quite good, but in each plate there was to be seen standing beside her the figure of a man holding a dagger in his uplifted hand. The features, though faint, were clearly discernible, and to her horror Miss B. recognized them as those of her fiance, an officer in the Indian army.

The effect of this experience was so great that she wrote to India, breaking off her engagement.

KEIR HARDY'S "AT HOME."

An Interesting Old House and An Interesting Tenant — A Piquant Sense of Contrast.

The London World's subject for "Celebrities at Home" for March 2 is James Keir Hardie, M. P., at 14 Nevill's court, Fetter lane. Says the writer: One is impressed by a certain piquant sense of contrast in discovering the leader of the "party of the future" at home in a house which dates back to the time of the Tudors. Not far from the Holborn end of Fetter lane, and connecting that thoroughfare with the great printer's colony of New street square, is a quaint little alley, entered through a narrow brick archway, and flanked on each side by a row of private gardens, whose abundant leafyness provides in summer time, one of those pleasant oases of unexpected greenery which somehow contrive to flourish here and there in the very heart of the wilderness of city bricks and mortar. The houses to which these gardens are attached, and to which they give access from Nevill's court—so named from the great historic family whose one-time town mansion still stands close by—belong to a period of which the city has to-day but few surviving relics.

A Wonderful Old House.

It is perhaps the oldest — competent authorities give it at least four hundred years of existence — and certainly the most picturesque of these ancient buildings that Keir Hardie has made his modest London domicile. A wonderful old house, built of massive timber through and through, with irregular projecting casements, winding wooden stairway, and outer walls of plaster stained and tanned with the weather and smoke of centuries, it seems at first sight an oddly incongruous abode for the leader of the most determinedly "advanced" party in twentieth century politics. But one soon discovers that this strenuous prophet of the future, so far from being indifferent to the interests of the past, is not only proud of the antiquity of the house and well posted in the history of its surroundings, but has himself been at pains to restore, as far as possible, the original character and aspect of the rooms which he occupies, and to rescue them from the effects of whitewash and wall-paper vandalism of former unappreciative tenants.

Severe Simplicity.

However much Keir Hardie may abhor "mediaevalism" in politics, he has obviously no objection to it from the aesthetic point of view; and the severe simplicity of these old-world rooms of his is tempered by evidence of artistic taste and of appropriateness of decoration which might surprise some of those who only know the redoubtable labor leader in his public capacity. With its plainly distempered walls, its solid beams of stout Scots fir and its high antique chimney-piece, Mr. Hardie's combined study and reception-room seems to transport the visitor back at a bound to a period of English history when the profession of Socialism, in its mildest form, would probably have been a hanging matter, and provides a curiously interesting environment of a leader of men who regards even the party Radicalism of to-day as an outworn political and social creed. A tiny bedroom, plain as an anchorite's cell, curtained off from the living room, and a small kitchen on the same floor, complete the accommodation of the unique fifteenth or sixteenth-century "flat" which serves the leader of the newest of our political parties as his London home.

Striking Contrasts.

As may be imagined, however, the atmosphere of antiquity and feudalism which clings about these venerable rooms only brings into sharper relief the uncompromising "progressiveness" which finds expression not merely in the literature of socialism, permanent and periodical, that abounds on every hand, but in the portraits of pioneers and champions of social revolution—Robert Owen, Karl Marx, Walt Whitman, and others—which surround the labor leader of to-day as he works at a table thickly strewn with letters and telegrams relating to the business of the powerful organization of which he is now the chosen parliamentary chief. A pictorial treasure which Mr. Hardie specially prizes is a rare old print representing the historic Reform meeting in Birmingham, which brought together a hundred thousand resolute claimants of the franchise of 1831; and near at hand are portraits of the Boer generals, De Wet and Botha, memorials of their owner's vehement opposition to the policy of the South African war. A graceful color sketch by Faed affords evidence of Mr. Hardie's appreciation of gentler arts than those of the politician and agitator; and the portraits of his wife and three children carry with them the reminder that his real home is not in this ancient London house, but at Cumnock, in Ayrshire, where, in the intervals of his exacting public work, he finds recreation in gardening and in collecting specimens of the ballad and chap-book literature of his native Scotland.

Awkward First Lines.

A humorist of the days of the Reform bill hit upon a neat way of scoring off political opponents. A comic journal, not being a newspaper within the meaning of the act, was prohibited from giving news, and so, in place of a Parliamentary report, the humorist in question reported a few "first lines" from speeches by prominent members:

"Sir Charles Wetherell said he was not sensible—

"Mr. Hunt was entirely ignorant—

"Col. Sibthorpe never could understand—

"Lord Lyndhurst said he must entreat of everyone to give him credit—

"Sir Edward Sugden was not one of those who thought—

"Mr. Croker said he had the fullest assurance—"

It will be recognized that the method can be used by either party; it is only a matter of making the opening fit the opener.—London Chronicle.

Japan and Australia.

Many Australians have an idea that Japan is looking covetously on their island continent. Their suspicions were increased the other day by the discovery in the baggage of two Japanese, who were traveling in Australia as merchants, of a complete set of the secret plans of the Sydney fortifications.

Charges of Lawson Effective.

Boston, April 9.—The charges made by Thomas W. Lawson that the big insurance companies, in their hunt for proxies, have been giving rebates and issuing policies for no consideration other than the assignment of the vote of the holder, resulted Saturday in the return of several indictments after a special enquiry under the direction of District Attorney John D. Moran. All the names but one were withheld pending arrests. The exception is that of Frederick Hockaday, who is accused of "allowing rebates of insurance premiums contrary to the public statutes." Hockaday was taken into custody.

A Travelers' Presentation.

London, April 9.—Two years of splendid service for the Western Ontario Commercial Travelers' Association were rewarded Saturday afternoon at the quarterly meeting of the association, when Mr. Wm. R. Grant, president for 1904 and 1905, was made the recipient of a cabinet of solid sterling silver. The cabinet was of oak, with a silver plate, engraved on the lid, and it contained 110 pieces. The presentation was made by C. W. Nicholls, president.

Date is Inconvenient.

Washington, April 9.—The State Department has suggested to the Russian Government, through Ambassador Rosen, that the period suggested in the Russian note for the convention of the second Hague conference, namely, the early part of July, would be inconvenient to this country, and to some of the other countries of this hemisphere, which had expected to be represented at The Hague.

Both Feet Cut Off.

THE BLUES.

(James Whitcomb Riley.)

When a man ain't got a cent an' he's feelin' kind o' blue,
An' the clouds hang dark an' heavy, an' won't let the sunshine through,
It's a great thing, O my brethren, for a feller just to lay
His hand upon your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way!

It makes a man feel curious; it makes the tear-drops start,
And you sort o' feel a flutter in the region o' the heart.
You can't look up an' meet his eyes; you don't know what to say,
When his hand is on your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way.

Though the winter of 1906 has been counted one of the most remarkable on record because of little snowfall, the official figures for March on the whole indicate that the month just past was more wintery than last year. The mean temperature for March, 1906, was 27 degrees, or 2 degrees below the average for the month in other years. The highest temperature was 49 degrees and the lowest one below zero. The amount of rain was 1.32 inches, or .18 of an inch below average. The amount of snow was 12.3 inches, or .6 above the average. In March, 1905, the mean temperature was 30 degrees, highest during the month 64, lowest 6 degrees above zero. The amount of rain was .34 inches, and of snow 1.7 inches.

A VILLAGE IDYL.

Homesick to-night! My heart is sick,
And, as in days of yore,
I walk again the village street,
I see the village store—
The same old-timer codfish
Is dangling near the door.

I hear the village joker joke;
I hear the answering roar—
He's cracked those hoary-headed jokes
These twenty year or more,
Yet I could laugh at them again
Until my sides were sore.

Before that self-same window, there
I used to stand and feed
My boyish eyes on candy wealth,
For candy was my creed,
And if I had a copper, oh!
Then I was rich indeed.

I sit in awe upon a box,
My hands upon my knees,
And hear the farmers as they talk
Of politics and cheese;
Of horses, plows, the weather, crops,
And topics such as these.

Till all at once a vision bright
Stands in the open door!
My boyhood's darling! Ah, my heart!
I'll see that face no more.
Her face is sweet, her feet are bare,
Her little frock is tore—

CHRIS. STONG, HUNTER.

Famous Coon Hunter Who Recently Met Tragic End.

On the day he had concluded to quit coon hunting after a last try Chris. Stong, York's most successful coon hunter, fell from a tree fifty feet and was instantaneously killed.

Christian Albert Stong, who was 43 years of age, was born in Vaughan Township, in which he was raised by his uncle, with whom he lived until he was 9 years of age. Then he went to live with his grandfather, a farmer, and worked for him until the latter's death, about eight or ten years ago. Chris was a good hand at the work, but his real inclinations were always toward sports; he was quite an athlete and took part in several races besides riding horses at races.

Deceased was known far and wide as a hunter of coons, in which pursuit he professionally started after his grandfather's death. Some eight years ago he met with a serious accident, which folks thought would end fatally. He had mounted a tree some 60 feet high, and was chopping a coon out with an axe, which slipped, with the result that Stong missed his hold and fell to the ground, sustaining internal injuries, and it is said that he had never been the same man since.

He married twice and leaves a widow and three children, the eldest of whom, a boy, aged 22, is in the Northwest. Deceased had a wide circle of friends and was much liked.

Chris Stong, during the 20 years in which he hunted coons, is estimated to have captured something like 2,500 coons. He was known for unerring instinct in detecting their hiding places and few escaped him. His first proceeding was to look for claw marks.

His method of climbing trees was peculiar and effective. As a young man, he worked for a telephone company as a pole climber, and he used the same means, his boots being equipped with spurs and a rope attached to his waist belt, going around the tree trunk, the rope being also attached to shoulder harness that he wore. It was said by those who watched him that he was almost able to walk up a tree.

For use in dealing with his quarry he carried a brace of revolvers, a hatchet and other tools. As he went up his experience was such that he could tell by the sound of the spur just where the hollow in the tree began, and could cut a hole in the exact place to locate the coon or coons. Then he might either thrust his hand into the hole and seize a coon to throw down to the waiting dog, or lower into the hollow from the hole above used by the coon to go in and out, a piece of stick tied in the middle by a length of rope.

Aroused by the object bobbing among them, the coons would begin to scramble about. When the hunter felt the weight of one of them resting upon the stick he would begin to pull and force the coon to climb. On getting him on the top the hunter would either despatch the coon with a revolver or seize him and throw him to the ground. By the use of his methods he has secured as many as eight of the game animals, some of which weigh 40 pounds and over, in a single haul.

Chris. Stong was sometimes criticized for what was termed his butchery of coons, but he always held that the coon was a pest, killing poultry and ravaging grain in field and granary. The pursuit was a profitable one to him from the money view, as he was able to secure good returns for the pelts, which had been averaging in value over $2.

Among the points in his record was the capture of 187 coons in the winter of 1902-3. In 1904, at Sharon, he took 24 coons in 1 1-2 hours, his greatest achievement for quick work.

Art Treasure For Exhibition.

The Toronto Industrial Exhibition Association have received an important addition to their art collection in the shape of a historical painting done in water colors, of a scene on the banks of the River St. Lawrence or one of its tributaries, supposed to be in the neighborhood of Montreal. The painting was done by an officer of the French army about two hundred years ago, and represents an Indian encampment on the banks of a river. The painting, which is about 1 1-2 by 2 feet in size, will be placed on view in the Art Gallery at this year's exhibition. It was presented to the Exhibition Association by Sir Purdon Clark, former director of the South Kensington Museum, London, England.

Carrying a Loaded Gun.

A man came into the Police Court the other day carrying a friend on his back. "What's the matter?" asked the judge. The man answered, "Judge, this man is a friend of mine, and his name is Gunn. Now, Gunn is loaded. I know that it's against the law to carry a loaded gun on the streets, so I brought him in here." The judge said: "Gunn, you are discharged." And the next day the report was in the papers.—Mount Morris Index.

TO PREVENT USURY.

Reflections and Reminiscences Called Up on Scanning the Hon. Chas. Fitzpatrick's Bill in House.

The efforts to put an end to usury or the loaning of money at exorbitant rates of interest, are to be commended. It is therefore to be hoped that Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill dealing with this question will be made practicable, and that it will become the law of the land. It has been sent to the Committee of Banking and Commerce for the perfecting of its details, and thus give the country the reasonable defence against excesses to which it is entitled.

What the Measure Proposes.

So far as can be gathered, the bill proposes to limit the rate of interest that the money-lender can charge to 12 per cent. on sums under $500, and to make the rate after the debt has fallen due no more than 6 per cent. This is a change for the better, but it is scarcely so sweeping a reform as might be expected considering the gravity of the situation, and the means that may be employed to circumvent the intent of the statute. It can readily be understood that a loan may call for a great deal more than 12 per cent, although no higher rate is mentioned in the bond. All that is necessary, in order to extort an exorbitant rate, is to require the borrower to sign for a much larger sum than he receives. By artificially increasing the principal the interest charge is swollen. What Parliament ought to do is clear. It should make certain that there is no departure from the principle it lays down.

What Britain Did.

In this connection it is of interest to note that Great Britain, afflicted by the usury evil, dealt with it in a drastic way in the year 1900. Up to that time the usury had had a clear field for unchecked operations. Wherever he could find victims he did his heavy work. In the colleges, the schools, the army, the offices, the shops—in all places where young people were to be found—the usurer operated. The commission of enquiry exhumed the fact that the plan of procedure was the sending of a circular mentioning the convenience that a money-lending firm was to the recipient. The older people had their banks; why should not the younger have financial accommodation also? Money the young persons needed. Why not borrow it from the firm from which the circular came? The borrower would be able to satisfy his immediate needs, and nobody would be the wiser! And so the net was spread. Into it the unwary fell, with the result that he was soon heavily involved, the interest swallowing up all the money he could scrape together.

A Curse to the Country.

The constant drag upon the victim was awful. Sometimes freedom was attained, but there were too many cases in which the unfortunate sought relief by means that ruined him for life. The Imperial Parliament dealt with the question thoroughly, and to-day usury and its evils are not so general as they at one time were. The first principle of the British law is registration. Every person who makes money-lending a business must register as such in the Inland Revenue Office, and must trade under the firm name by which he is registered. This gives the law a grip upon the lenders, for without registration the business cannot be followed. Any person doing business with a money-lending firm is entitled to receive a copy of every document or security relating to the loan. Thus, there can be no secrecy and no misunderstood agreement. There is a fine of $500 for the first violation of this part of the law and imprisonment for three months for a second offence.

Precautions Against Fraud.

While the money-lender can be fined or imprisoned for failing to register or for neglecting to give the borrower the papers that are called for, he is subject to heavier penalties for misrepresentation. If by any false promise or statement he induces any person to borrow money he is guilty of a misdemeanor and is liable to two years' imprisonment or to a fine of $2,500. This clause renders the offering of false inducements to borrow a very hazardous business. Another provision renders the collection of usurious rates from an infant or from a person who is under age impossible. The money-lender has to prove that he had reason to believe that his customer was of age when the money was loaned in order to collect. This provision makes difficult the drawing of young people into the meshes of the loan shark. But the strongest protection the public have lies in the authority given to the judge, when a debtor is sued, to reduce the charges and the interest, if he thinks proper so to do.

High Rates Cut Down.

Whenever the money-lender sues to recover money which he has lent and the court is satisfied that the interest charged is excessive or that the amount charged for expenses, fines, bonuses, and so on, is too high, or that the transaction is "harsh and unconscionable," the court can reopen the transaction and award, in spite of the contract, what is fair. The judge may wipe out the debt, if he thinks enough money has already been paid. He may even order the creditor to refund to the debtor whatever sum he regards as an overpayment. Under this statute the man who charges a rate that is usurious will not go into court if he is not registered, for that would render him liable to a fine, and he certainly will not try to recover an unjust debt, even if registered, for it may happen that the court will turn the tables upon him and make him the debtor of the man he is suing. This is strong legislation. It certainly renders the operations of the unfair lender difficult.

While the British Act gives this remedy for the evil, there is another that has been tried elsewhere, namely, the opening of loan offices for the distressed. Wealthy people across the line have formed little companies for the advancing of money to worthy people at low rates of interest. The result has been relief where needed and no loss to the persons who have invested in these benevolent schemes.

Moderation.

Now happy is his modest lot
Who, when his fortune's truly stated,
Has cash beyond his need, yet not Enough to be investigated.

HOMESPUN HEROICS

By Claude Pamares

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

One of the habitues of Skinner's grocery, at the village of Skinnersville, was Abe Langford. He became a "sitter" when he was twenty years old, and for twelve years he never missed but one night. That was the night of his marriage to the Widow Durham. She was his senior by ten years, and she married him mostly that he might have a mother. Every night, rain or shine, summer or winter, Abe was there.

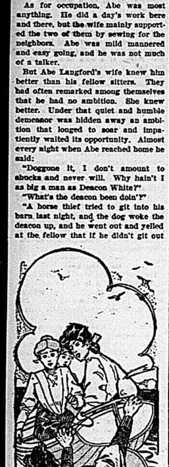
During the first year the old veterans crowded him around somewhat, but after that one of the cracker barrels was marked with his initials and duly recognized as his throne.

As for occupation, Abe was most anything. He did a day's work here and there, but the wife mainly supported the two of them by sewing for the neighbors. Abe was mild mannered and easy going, and he was not much of a talker.

But Abe Langford's wife knew him better than his fellow sitters. They had often remarked among themselves that he had no ambition. She knew better. Under that quiet and humble demeanor was hidden away an ambition that longed to soar and impatiently waited its opportunity. Almost every night when Abe reached home he said:

"Doggone it, I don't amount to shucks and never will. Why hain't I as big a man as Deacon White?"

"What's the deacon been doin'?"



HE HUNG ON TO THE STERN AND GOT THE BOW POINTED STRAIGHT.

"A horse thief tried to git into his barn last night, and the dog woke the deacon up, and he went out and yelled at the fellow that if he didn't git out mighty sudden he'd let go a hull bushel of buckshot at him. He's a hero, the deacon is. When he got through tellin' the story Skinner offered to trust him for ten pounds of sugar all to once."

"Everybody can't be a hero," answered the wife, with a sigh.

"What do you s'pose happened to Elijah Smallman two or three years ago?"

"I can't say. I don't remember of his telling that anything did."

"No, he never told a human being about it till tonight, and then he made us all promise never to breathe a word to a soul. Lordy, but the chills went up and down my back while he was tellin' it!"

"What was it?"

"He saw a murderer. His dog barked about midnight, and he got up and looked out of the winder and saw a murderer snoopin' around. The feller even came up and rattled on the kitchen door. The dog put his tail down and made a sneak and didn't come home for two days. Lijah said he got so weak in the knees that he could hardly get back to bed, and he covered up his head for more'n an hour afterwards."

"How did he know it was a murderer?"

"Because the feller had on a slouch hat pulled down over his eyes and was crouched over. That's the way they allus do. Yes, he was a regular murderer. A week later a tin peddler come along and told Lijah that a hull family had been murdered about fifty miles away the very next night. If the dog hadn't barked the Smallman family would have been wiped out. Do I ever see a murderer snoopin' around?"

"Land o' massy, but I hope not!"

"But I orter see one, same as other folks. If I ever do see one I won't stand and tremble and shake. No, sir, I won't. I'll just go right out to him and tell him to hump himself out of that or he'll have me in his hair, but I shan't never see one. There's no such good luck for me."

"But you hain't done so bad," observed the wife in soothing tones. "You fell in the river once, didn't you?"

"Yes."

"And you had a fight with a lightnin' rod man?"

"Yes."

"And a mad dog chased you up a ladder?"

"But what does all them things amount to agin Injuns and murderers? I want to be a hero, same as other folks. If I'd ask Skinner to trust me for ten pounds of sugar all to once he'd drop dead."

"Waal," said the wife as she rose up to prepare for bed, "you are doin' all you can, and nobody can't do any better. If you live long 'nuff mebbe your chance will come."

It was on the road and only two weeks away. A millionaire had his summer home on the bank of the river running through the village. His eighteen-year-old daughter was fond of rowing, and it was an almost everyday sight to see her skimming along in her boat. There had been heavy midsummer rains, and the river had gradually risen until the water poured over the dam like a Niagara. There was a drop of twelve feet, with three or four waves at the bottom rising up and curling over in a menacing way. One day, at the highest stage of the water, three young ladies appeared on the pond in a boat. The rich man's daughter was taking company out for a row. Two hundred feet above the dam, as she attempted to turn and go back, one of the oars snapped, and in her sudden panic she lost the other, while the boat turned broadside to the stream. To go over the dam in that fashion meant death to all.

Abe Langford had been salvaging sawlogs and boards from the river with rope and hook and stood on the bank when the disaster to the boat occurred. There were others higher up and lower down who were startled by the screams of the girls, but not one of them grasped the situation. It was left for Abe. Off came his coat, vest and shoes, and in he plunged. A score of men called to him that he could never hope to tow the boat ashore, but that wasn't his plan. There was just a chance that if the girls kept quiet and the boat was guided over the dam bow first she wouldn't fill or be upset. Abe caught it when it was yet fifty feet from the plunge, and, whirling it about, he hung on to the stern and got the bow pointed straight. Then he said to the girls:

"We have got to go over the dam. All of you crouch down and hang on for your lives. If you make one move we shall all be drowned."

There was screaming and yelling and shouting all along the banks, but Abe Langford was not rattled. Two of the girls had fainted away, and the other was dumb with fright. The boat half filled, but floated through to safety, and, guiding and swimming, Abe brought her to the bank. He had done a brave deed, and his fellow townsmen were unstinted in their praise. He took it all in his humble way, and as soon as he could escape them he went shivering home.

"Good lands, Abe Langford, but what's the matter?" exclaimed the wife on beholding his saturated condition.

"Just saved three gals from drowndin'," he replied.

"Then you are a hero at last?"

"Durn the luck, no! In all the stories I've ever read the hero marries the gal whose life he saves. There was three of 'em, and what am I goin' to do about it? Besides, if there wasn't but one I'd be married to you just the same, wouldn't I? I tell you luck is agin me, and I shall never have a fair show."

"Waal, git off your wet clothes and mebbe you'll be chased by a mad bull tomorrer," said the motherly wife as she began drying his wet hair with a towel.

Dangers in Circulating Libraries.

A foreign medical journal has been publishing facts about the dissemination of disease through books from public libraries. It is, of course, impossible for librarians to ascertain where books have been or to know the conditions of families into which they go. A large number of books were examined and were found to contain the bacilli of pneumonia, diphtheria and many other sorts, some of which were harmless. Even new books fresh from the publisher's hands were found to contain germs. There are very many persons who practice wetting the fingers with the lips or tongue when turning the pages of books. This is an exceedingly dangerous thing to do, not only to the person who does it, but to all others who may use the book afterward, especially if the person so doing has any form of disease in the system. Invalids of all kinds are likely to be great readers, and the consumptive or those suffering with cancer may unwittingly deposit on the pages of the volumes they peruse the deadly germs of their own malady.

Just a Lie.

"I once," said the colonel solemnly—"I once, and only once, had all thirteen trumps dealt me."

"Er—I suppose you were the dealer," suggested a candid friend.

"No, sir!" roared the colonel. "No, sir! I was not the dealer!"

"Then may I ask what happened to the trump which the dealer turned up?"

And a terrible silence ensued.

Recuperating.

Visitor (to convict)—I suppose you find your life here very tiresome, my friend, do you not? Convict—Oh, no, sir. I have been a burglar for a good many years and have worked hard and conscientiously at the business, and as I'm only in for three years I feel that the rest is doing me good.

FIVE NEW SENATORS.

Sketches of the Careers of Recent Appointments to the Senate.

Hon. Robert Jaffray.

Mr. Robert Jaffray, who is president of The Globe Publishing Co., was born at Bannockburn, Scotland, on Jan. 23, 1832. After being educated at Stirling school, he became an apprentice to Mr. J. R. Dymock, but when 20 years old came to Canada, becoming a resident of Toronto. He entered the employ of Mr. J. B. Smith, a grocer and provision merchant at the corner of Yonge and Louisa streets, five years later became a partner in the business, and in 1858 became sole proprietor. He retired in 1883. Mr. Jaffray was for several years a Government director on the board of the Northern Railway Co.; later a director of the Midland Railway; became a director of The Globe in 1880, and its president in 1888. He is vice-president of the Imperial Bank, of which he has been a director since 1885; vice-president of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co.; one of the commissioners of the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park; and a director of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation, and of the Canadian General Electric Co. He was chairman of the Temiskaming Railway Commission until the advent of the Whitney Government to power, when he resigned.

Hon. J. M. Douglas.

Mr. J. M. Douglas was born at Linton, Bankheed, Roxborough, Scotland, on May 26, 1839. He was educated there, at Toronto University, at Knox College and at Princeton Seminary. He was ordained to the ministry in 1865; was pastor at Uxbridge and Cobourg Presbyterian Churches; was a missionary to India and chaplain to the British troops at Mhow from 1876 to 1882. Returning to Canada, he became minister at Brandon and subsequently filled the pulpit at Moosomin. He retired from the ministry in 1896 and devoted himself to farming. He was elected to the House of Commons from East Assiniboia in 1896, was re-elected in 1900, but retired in 1904. He married in 1861 Jane, the daughter of George Smith, of Darlington, Ont.

Hon. Peter Talbot.

Mr. Peter Talbot, who is of an Irish father and a Scottish mother, was born at Eramosa, Wellington County, on March 30, 1854. He was educated at Rockwood Academy and the Ottawa Normal School, was Principal of Cornwall Model School from 1883 to 1890, when he was appointed Principal of the Public School at McLeod. He was elected to the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories as a supporter of the Haultain Government in 1902, but was elected to the House of Commons as a Liberal in 1904. He was married to Clara Card, of Guelph, Ont., on Jan. 1, 1879.

Mr. L. G. DeVeber.

Hon. Leverett George DeVeber, M.D., son of Richard Sandys and Caroline DeVeber, Anglo-Canadian, was born Feb. 10, 1849, at St. John, N. B., and was educated at the Collegiate School and King's College, Windsor, N. S.; St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, England, and the University of Pennsylvania. He was married in 1885 to Rachel Frances Ryan, and was elected to the Northwest Assembly by acclamation in 1898 and re-elected in 1902. He was Health Officer of the Town of Lethbridge. He belongs to the English Church, and is a Liberal politically.

The most valuable desolate islands in the world are the Liakovs, in the Arctic ocean, off the mouth of the Lena, in Siberia. They are frost bound and utterly barren save for arctic moss, but they contain such enormous quantities of fossil ivory that they are exceedingly valuable—in fact, although uninhabited save for the ivory diggers and of themselves incapable of supporting life, they produce a revenue of £1,000,000 a year.—London Queen.

A Bengalese Peculiarity.

A doctor remarks: "What strikes one most at a Bengal hospital is the lack of sense of proportion in the estimation of diseases. A man is gravely perturbed because he has not sneezed for three months, but he is comparatively indifferent to the fact that he exhibits the early signs of leprosy.

Rustic Folly.

"You'd never think Kjones was from the country, would you? His manner is perfect and his dress fashionable."

"Yes, but he gave himself dead away on the street car today."

"How?"

"Got up and gave his seat to a woman."—Cleveland Leader.

Hindoo Women.

The Hindoo holy books forbid a woman to see dancing, hear music, wear jewels, blacken her eyebrows, eat dainty food, sit at a window or view herself in a mirror during the absence of her husband and allows him to divorce her if she has no sons, injures his property, scolds him, quarrels with another woman or presumes to eat before he has finished his meal.

The Cote.

In Chaucer's time a woman's gown was called her cote.

Sneeze Wood.

One of the natural curiosities of South Africa is the "sneeze wood" tree, which is so called because one cannot cut it with a saw without sneezing, as the fine dust has exactly the effect of snuff. No insect or worm will touch it; it is very bitter to the taste, and when placed in water it sinks.

Marriage In Spain.

Marriage in Spain takes place during the day or night, according to the position in life of the young people. If well to do, the ceremony occurs early in the morning.

Mile Varieties.

A statute or geographical mile is 5,280 feet. A nautical mile or knot is 6,085 feet. A league differs in length in different countries. A marine league is three knots. In parts of the United States acquired from Mexico the league is 2.63 statute miles.

Ancient Salads.

The lettuce was deemed by the ancients the food of the dead because when Adonis, the beloved of Venus, was mortally wounded by a wild boar the weeping goddess laid him upon a bed of soft and tender lettuce, whose milky juice possesses soothing and narcotic qualities. Lettuce was eaten by the ancients at the close of their repasts, as from its cooling qualities it was considered an antidote to the heating effects of wine. The bitter herbs which the Jews ate at the passover were wild lettuce, succory, tansy, camomile and dandelion, and this same race are the inventors of the salad compounded of oil, vinegar, sugar, salt and mustard to render the bitter herbs palatable. The Irish two centuries ago made their salads of sorrel, wood sorrel and beet chopped with vinegar, beer and a little sugar, but no oil, salt or mustard. Readers of classic history will remember how a lettuce caused the cruel death of Cambyses, king of Persia and Media, and of his consort, who was also his sister.

Municipal Thrift.

On the way from one town on Cape Cod to another a contributor to the Boston Transcript came upon a charming house by the roadside, which immediately claimed his attention. It bore a fresh coat of white paint, which was well set off by green blinds. There was a smooth piece of lawn in front, a group of fine shade trees and hammocks, piazza chairs, brilliant sofa pillows and all the adjuncts of summer comfort in luxurious profusion.

"Whose place is this?" he demanded of the boy of twelve who accompanied him as guide and adviser in general.

"That there?" said the boy. "Oh, that there's the poorhouse."

"The poorhouse!" the man exclaimed. "You seem to have luxurious paupers in this town."

"Well, you see," was the explanation, "we hain't got but one, 'n' she's an old woman, 'n' the overseers they board her out with one o' the neighbors 'n' let the poorhouse to some o' them Boston folks for the summer, 'n' that pays her keep."

How to Boil Water.

To boil water would seem to be a very simple thing, and yet the late Charles Delmonico used to say that very few people knew how to do it. "The secret is," he said, "in putting good fresh water into a clean kettle already quite warm and setting the water to boiling quickly and then taking it right off for use in tea, coffee or other drinks before it is spoiled. To let it steam and simmer and evaporate until the good water is in the atmosphere and the lime and iron and dregs only left in the kettle is what makes a great many people sick, and it is worse than no water at all." For water boiled like this and flavored with a few drops of lemon juice Mr. Delmonico used to charge as much as for his best liquors, and he often recommended it to his customers and friends who complained of loss of appetite. It is worth trying. —Good Living.

Some of the Many Theories Put Forth For the Change.

That our winters are displaying a tendency towards a greater geniality is a theory held by many people, lay and scientific, all through the temperate zone.

Many are the theories put forth in support of a conviction, the most important being advanced by Herschel and favored by Gickie and the authorities of the Kew Observatory. That is that the axis of the earth is gradually swinging about, bringing the temperate and Arctic zones nearer the tropics, and carrying the tropic zone nearer the polar regions. The world is like a spinning top, they say, the upright centre upon which it spins being the axis.

Now they believe that the earth is running down, and is wobbling just like a top. Lest anyone should be alarmed for fear the spinning should suddenly stop, we hasten to explain that it has been running down for some millions of years, if these scientists are right. That many regions that are now hot were once cold, and many cold places once semi-tropical, seem to be proved by scientific discoveries, which need not be discussed here.

Another scientific theory is that the earth swings back and forth every few years, and that the cold winters for five or ten years are followed by mild winters for a like period of time. All we can say of this theory is that to strike a winter like this, after last winter, the earth would have had to back up so suddenly that everyone must have felt the jog.

Passing over the sun-spot theory, which has many admirers, we come to the students of the Gulf Stream and its influence upon our climate. These observers declare that the stream is changing its course, and is now closer to the Atlantic Coast of Canada and th United States than it was some years ago. The fact that the climate of Maryland and New Jersey is growing warmer is offered as proof of this theory. The Japanese current, others say, is changing its course. In short, there are scores of theories, all but one of them ridiculed by every scientist. What the one is depends on the scientist.

Kind Words For the Sucker.

The sucker is the coyote and hog of the waters, but he has his uses. Caught in the early spring, the fish is firm and clean and may become a dried and salt food of commercial value. Pigs and cattle can be fed on this fish later in the season, and if boiled and mixed with bran or meal it gives no taste whatever to meat or milk. Successful experiments have been made in feeding carp, suckers, and mullet to cattle when dried or salted. If all other fish are caught by the net fisherman and the sucker is thrown back into the water the inevitable result must be that only the sucker will remain. He consumes the wild rice and other wild-fowl food, and also the food that would support better fish.

A Whistle Language.

They have a whistle language on Gomera island, in the Canary archipelago. They can whistle there as articulately as a Bostonian speaks. And, since they can whistle very loud and shrill, the Gomeras can converse a long way off. A Gomera hunting a mile from home can ask his wife what there is for lunch, and, if the menu does not please him, he can scold her and order a change quite as well as though he stood beside her.

The Gomeras talk in a singsong, and their whistle language reproduces the spoken one's intonations. For instance, children all over America have a taunting cry:

"Hiss for shame,
Hiss for shame,
Everybody knows your name!"

This cry is not sung. It is intoned. And so the Gomeras intone their guttural language. It would be quite easy to whistle the "Hiss for shame" cry. So it is quite easy to whistle the Gomeras' singsong language.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Beyond the Limit.

"I don't mind folks borrowing," said Miss Hodges plaintively to an old friend who was paying her a visit, "but I've got an awful trying woman for a neighbor just now. She borrows such queer things I'm most out of patience with her."

"Shears and brooms and the flour sifter and ironing board, I s'pose," said the guest, who had known life in a country town.

"Mercy me, I don't count such things!" said Miss Hodges. "Nor my best umbrella nor my carving knife. I can make shift to get on without them for awhile any time. But when she come over to borrow my diary the other day so's she could keep account of the weather and her hens' eggs and so on till her husband came back from California, she having given him hers to put down his expenses and sights in, so's she could copy her record in from my book in the right place—I declare, I called it the cap sheaf!"—Youth's Companion.

Take a Fresh Start.

As the horses trot down to the wire in a long, straggling line a race official bangs a bell and the whole field turns and goes back to try again. A fresh start is necessary. But it is not only on the race tracks that fresh starts are essential to the achievement of results. There are countless instances of business firms taking fresh starts after visitations of misfortune. Individuals without number daily turn their backs upon discouragements of the past and take a fresh start. The man who fails is he who is unwilling to do battle over again. An individual suffers everlasting failure if, when confronted by obstacles, he refuses to gird up his loins and take a fresh start. Fresh starts are the foes of sluggishness and laziness and the guarantee of a brighter success than could be possible without them.—Baltimore Herald.

Her Method of Darning.

"The worst case of a henpecked man I ever saw," said the traveling man, "is up in my little native place among the Berkshire hills. The hen in this case is a smart woman who runs a farm and keeps everything shipshape except her husband. She is content to let him get along in any old fashion, so long as he does not interfere with her work. One day he asked her apologetically if she wouldn't darn at least one pair of his stockings, for every pair he owned had holes.

"She gave him a crushing glance and said, 'If every pair has holes, wear two pairs, and the good places in one will cover the holes in the other.' And she made him do it too."—New York Press.

Mexico's Fans.

In Mexico fans were used long before the conquest, and when Montezuma heard that the Spaniards had landed and were about to visit him he sent for goldsmiths and lapidaries and ordered, among other gifts which were to be offered to Cortes, two feather fans ornamented with a sun and moon of highly polished gold. Like the Japanese and other ancient nations, the Aztecs evidently considered the fan an emblem of authority, for they generally placed it in the hands of Ometeuctli, god of paradise, and of Totec, the military disciple of Quetzalcohuatl.

Weighing the Anchor.

A young lady, who had no knowledge of nautical phrases, asked a friend, "Do you know, I often wonder why a ship has to weigh its anchor every time it leaves port?" The answer of her friend was not illuminating—"Well—er—the weight is constantly changing, you know, because of the—er—binnacles and things that accumulate on the anchor!"—London News.

His Jubilee.

Judge—Are you aware of any mitigating circumstances in your case? Prisoner—Yes, your honor. This is the fiftieth time I have been here for vagrancy, and I thought that perhaps we might get up a small jubilee.

For Two Pins.

"My wife told me this morning that for two pins she'd kiss me."

"How affectionate!"

"No; merely crafty. She's after two diamond hatpins she saw in a jeweler's window yesterday."

The Resemblance.

"A wild goose has really some reason to be classed in courage with the eagle."

"In what respect?"

"It is sure to die game."—Baltimore American.

Scorn no man's love though of a mean degree. Love is a present for a mighty king. Much less make any man thine enemy.—Herbert.

Crabs Helped In Rabbit Hunt.

On a property where the rabbit shooting was strictly preserved upon the southern coast of England a boy was caught with two dead rabbits in his possession and nothing that would account for their decease. A search of his pocket revealed nothing but two live crabs of small dimensions, the end of a candle and a box of matches. Under promise of release the urchin was persuaded to disclose his method of procedure. First he selected a likely burrow and then stripped off his clothes, putting his coat over one hole, his trousers over another and his shirt over the third. He lit the candle end, dropped a little grease upon the crab's back and stuck the lighted candle thereon and then put the crab at an unoccupied opening. Straightway the frightened torchbearer fled sideways into the darkness and explored the innermost depths, while the boy, expectant as a terrier, awaited events outside. Presently a rabbit bolted into the coat. As it did so that boy was after it like a shot, and boy, rabbit and coat all rolled over together, the boy rising from the fray with the rabbit in his clutches.—Korea News.

Priceless, Yet Costless—Pure Air.

There is no menace to vitality and to the sum and the value of the products of vital energy so continuously imminent, so insidious, so effectively active as are the invisible wastes of the body. The dead by the weapons of the world's battlefields are few compared with those whose lives have been either blighted or prematurely ended because of failure to maintain the body in a correct relation to the atmospheric source of abundant energy waiting to be transformed into vital force and who have died for want of proper breath. He who would live at his best must breathe air at its purest. There is no material necessity to life greater than that of pure air. There is nothing so priceless and yet so costless as air. There is no financial investment which does or can yield so sure and so large returns as money wisely expended for pure air.—Professor S. H. Woodbridge in Good Housekeeping.

Villages That Cut Corks.

Thousands of men, women and children in the mountains of Spain and Portugal are employed in cutting cork. It is a domestic trade, and it occupies whole villages. Agents from the factories and export houses of Seville and Lisbon go through the mountain villages each year buying up the corks in enormous quantities. It is not unusual for an agent to purchase 5,000,000 on one journey. The corks as purchased in the native villages are of all sizes and qualities. They are sorted in the cities and, after being packed, are shipped by the ton. Once here many of them are recut by hand at the rate of twenty gross a day. So fastidious are some bottlers that the cork importers have to keep in their employment several cork cutters to recut such corks as do not suit customers.

Arabs and Portraits.

An artist who found it difficult to get pictures of Arabs in Morocco writes: "I once tried to sketch some Arabs in Algiers. They constantly evaded me, and at last an old Moor, with whom we were on the friendly terms produced by constant bargaining for embroidered rags, spoke to me on the matter like a father, for my good. 'It is not,' he said, 'that any harm will ensue to those whose picture you make. It is you yourself will suffer inconvenience in the next world. Allah will say to you: "Following your own will and pleasure, you have made those figures. I now command you give them souls." And where, my friend, will you be then?'"

Woman Was Made From an Elm Stick

In the Scandinavian myth of the origin of woman Odin, Vili and Ve, the three sons of Bor, were walking along the sea beach when they found two sticks of wood, one of ash and one of elm. Odin and his brothers were gods, of course, but the sight of the stick caused them to wish that they could carve other gods from the inanimate wood. They forthwith set about the task, with the result that they made a living man out of the ash stick and a female, being in godlike form, equally as lively as the man, out of the elm billet.

Injurious to the Memory.

Besides inattentive reading there are other things injurious to memory. One is the habit of skimming over newspapers, all in a confused jumble, never to be thought of again, thus diligently cultivating a habit of careless reading hard to break, says Home Chat. Another is the reading of trashy novels. Nothing is so fatal to reading with profit as the habit of running through story after story and forgetting them as soon as read.

Suspicious Directors.

"Our cashier seems to be a frugal chap."

"How so?"

"Always brings his lunch with him and eats it at his desk."

"Hum. That may be frugality and it may be fear of leaving his books. Better have him investigated at once." —Philadelphia Bulletin.

Information.

"What is a domestic animal, mamma?" asked the little boy.

"A domestic animal," replied mamma, with a scornful glance at papa, who was putting on his coat, "is one who does not spend all his time at the club."—Brooklyn Life.

A bill is better receipted, and an old chair is better reseated, and that is the resemblance between 'them, although neither of 'em looks at all like the other.

You have No Reason for Not Using

Zutoo

Some people think that all headache cures are alike—that they all undermine the health, even if not perceived at the time of taking them.

Well, we'll admit that the drug cures do this, but that is no reason why you should not take Zutoo.

Zutoo is a harmless vegetable remedy. One ingredient is soda—just old-fashioned soda that our grandmothers used to take to settle the stomach, when they had sick headache. And there is nothing better.

The principal ingredient—the one that stops the headache, is a vegetable ingredient imported for us from Japan. It won't hurt you any more than will the soda.

There is absolutely no reason why you should not use Zutoo.

If you suffer from headache there is every reason why you should.

Taken in time, two tablets will ward off a headache. Taken later, they will stop it in twenty minutes, and leave you feeling good every time.

If you are using a drug remedy, why not discard it?

Zutoo will cure just as quickly and will save you the penalty, that all must sometime pay, who take the drugs which these cures contain.

If you will give Zutoo one trial, you will never take any other headache remedy again.

Andirons.

In regard to andirons a writer in the Connoisseur points out the curious fact that the older specimens rarely come in pairs, but are of different heights and sizes. It was the custom in the middle ages, it seems, to make them uneven so as to facilitate the moving and raising of the huge blocks employed for firewood. He continues:

In the middle ages they were also planned to hold a spit, and it was not until the late sixteenth century that they were much ornamented. According to Viollet le Duc, since the most remote ages, from Etruscan times down to the Romans, such andirons were made of iron. Vasari speaks of andirons made with "meraviglioso magistero" for the captains of the Arte della Seta, but I have not found much ornamentation upon them as early as he says. I have a theory of my own, which is contrary to that of Viollet le Duc. In England andirons are called fire dogs, and in the Bargello there is a splendid specimen made in the form of crouching hounds. I hold that the andirons were in the first instance made in the shape of animals lying at rest, shaped of clay or stone, and it was much later that they were made of iron, when they often ended in animals' heads, most often in that of dogs.

Advertising a Novel.

In a New York literary club two novelists were discussing a novel of the eighties and of which 60,000 copies had been sold.

"It was," said the older man, "the best piece of advertising I ever heard of, for it was advertising, not merit, that made the book popular.

"The author has a millionaire bachelor friend—call him Millions—and he persuaded Millions to let him write for a newspaper a paragraph to the effect that the novel's heroine had made a hit with him, and if he could find anywhere a girl resembling her he would marry her.

"This paragraph duly appeared. It was copied all over the country. The young women of America, on fire with curiosity and hope, bought and read the book in order to see if they stood any chance with Millions."

The younger novelist took out his notebook.

"By Jove," he muttered. "It wouldn't hurt to resurrect that scheme."

The One to Be Pleased.

"No," said Peckham, "we never have boiled ham at our house any more."

"Why," replied Newitt, "I thought you were very fond of it."

"So I am, but my wife's pet dog won't eat it at all."

No Sleep
For The Kidneys.

Old people are especially liable to Kidney and Bladder Irritation. The organs are weakened by age. This starts up inflammation—blood is not properly purified as it goes to the kidneys—and the bladder is unable to retain the urine properly. There is a constant desire to urinate day and night—and sound, restful sleep is unknown.

A SACRED PILGRIMAGE

TEXT: "COME, SEE THE PLACE WHERE THE LORD LAY."

FIRST EASTER DAY SCENES

World's Most Sacred Shrines Are These Vaults or Cathedrals Which Cover the Bodies of the Honored Dead—But This Tomb, Out of All the Ages, Was Empty For the Lord Had Risen—O! Happy Day!

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1906, by Frederick Diver, Toronto, at the Dept. of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 8.—At this season of the resurrection of nature the preacher takes us back on a sacred pilgrimage to the scenes of the first Easter day, the text chosen being Matthew xxviii, 6, "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

The world's most sacred shrines are the vaults or cathedrals which cover the bodies of the honored dead. When the American tourist alights in the London depot to begin the exploration of the British metropolis one of the first places he visits is Westminster Abbey. He does this not because Westminster Abbey is near to the Parliament buildings, where assemble the legislative bodies of the British Empire. He does this not because its stones from the most beautiful architectural coronet of England. He does this because for years—aye, for centuries—the greatest dead of the British realm have been buried there. Not only do we find England's kings and queens sleeping within those stately walls, but we find there the bodies of some of the greatest poets, dramatists and musicians, painters, warriors and statesmen, whose closed eyes cannot be opened, whose ears cannot be filled by the many thunderings which the mightiest of capitals roars about those silent graves.

When you cross the channel and go to the most beautiful of all modern cities, the French capital, what journey do you first make? Do you say, "Let us get a carriage and drive out upon the boulevards and ride up the Champs Elysees and see the Arc de Triomphe?" No, not if you are like most American tourists. You want to see where the great dead sleep. You wish to go to the Notre Dame, or to the Madeleine, or to the Pantheon, or to that greatest of all tombs where sleeps the mighty Napoleon. It is said that when Charles V. of the Netherlands and Spain was about to be buried a courtier of his son and heir, King Philip, stepped forward and lifted a rod and struck the casket as he said: "The king is dead! He shall remain dead. He is dead, and there is another risen up in his place greater than he ever was." But though that may be true of Charles V. it is not true of Napoleon I., the warrior. Napoleon, the soldier, is dead, but another soldier greater than Napoleon has not risen in his place and in all probability never will arise. No wonder most tourists seek the mausoleum of the little Corsican. What is true of the tombs of London and Paris is also true of Berlin and St. Petersburg and Rome and Egypt. The graves of the great dead have, for the most of us, more fascination than the palaces and the thrones of living men, greater than their ancestors though they may be.

But though Caesar may travel hundreds of miles to stand at the tomb of Alexander the Great, and Otto III. went far out of his way to open the vault which contained the body of Charlemagne, and Napoleon himself went forth to find the tomb of Caesar, and though great may be our fascination for the tombs of great men, that fascination is as nothing compared to the yearnings that draw us to the family plots where sleep our own beloved dead. The greatest compliment we can pay to a living friend is to ask him to accompany us to the last resting place of a mother, a father, a wife or a child. Because we have loved our silent dead so much we do not wish any one to go to our family plot unless our dear ones are sacred in his eyes.

Now, Mary Magdalene loved the Lord Jesus Christ with her whole heart. He was to her the divine being who forgave her past sins. And as we see her going to the tomb of Christ on that Easter morning we find her taking along one of her dearest friends—Mary, the mother of James, who also loved the Lord. These two women are wending their way to Christ's sepulcher weighed down with a common sorrow. As they come near to the tomb an angel meets them and says: "Fear not ye, for I know that ye seek Jesus who was crucified. He is not here, for he is risen, as he said." Then the angel spake the eight words to which I wish to call your attention in our meditation on the events of that Easter day—"Come, see the place where the Lord lay." If a holy fascination drew Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to the tomb of a dead Christ surely it is important for us to visit the rifled tomb of a risen Lord. Easter day should be the happiest day of all the year to us. It is the mighty day when the Lord's humiliations and services came to their glorious eternal consummation and Jesus became the first fruits of them that slept.

Let us find out, in the first place, in what kind of a grave Jesus was buried. Let us see how his body was laid in that crypt. The condition of his tomb and of his clothes ought to teach us just as many helpful gospel lessons as his cradle of Bethlehem and the swaddling clothes in which he was wrapped as a new-born child. I suppose the easiest way to find this grave is to have Mary Magdalene for our guide. Without some help we shall never find it at all. The cemeteries or graveyards of the far east are just like the graveyards of the west. They all need a guide to take the tourists through. Yes, and the amazing fact about the Jerusalem cemeteries is that you can distinguish the different graves there, just as you can pick out the different graves in Calvary cemetery of Long Island. As you go through them you can say, "Here is the tomb of a wealthy family," or "Here is the family plot of people who lived in moderate circumstances," or "Here is a potter's field, where the poor are buried." You can tell all this by studying the tombstones and the elaborate mausoleums and the neglected graves. Now, as Mary Magdalene is leading you and me among the tombs and graves which surround Jerusalem to the grave of Christ, much to my surprise she does not go toward potter's field or to the place where the poor are buried. She directs her steps toward a beautiful garden, in the centre of which a magnificent tomb has been chiseled out of the solid rock. This must be the tomb of a very rich man. As she goes along I feel that she is beside herself with grief, and I say: "Stop, Mary, stop! You are going the wrong way. This is not the tomb of Christ, who died a pauper; this is the tomb of one of the weathy men of the east." Then Mary turns, with a sweet smile, and says:

"Nay, friend, I am not wrong. Christ may have lived and died a poor man, but he was buried as a king. Dost thou not know that Joseph of Arimathea, a member of the sanhedrin and one of the great leaders of the Jewish nation, went and asked Pilate for Christ's body after it was dead and that Pilate gave it to him? And dost thou furthermore not know that Joseph of Arimathea took Christ's body and buried it in his own family vault?" "But," I again say, "how could Joseph do that? Jesus did not own a particle of clothes when he died. The soldiers even gambled for the coat that he wore on his way to the cross." "True," says Mary. "True, but didst thou not also know that, as one rich man gave Christ his own tomb in which to be buried, so Nicodemus, another rich man, furnished the funds whereby Christ's body was appropriately arrayed for the rich man's sepulcher?" Do you think that these words which I have put into the lips of Mary are purely imaginary? Then read Mark xv, 43, "Joseph of Arimathea, an honorable counselor, who also waited for the kingdom of God, came and went in boldly unto Pilate and craved the body of Jesus, and he gave the body to Joseph." Then turn to John xix, 39, "And there came also Nicodemus, who, at the first, came to Jesus by night and brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about a hundred pound weight. Then took they the body of Jesus and wound it in linen clothes with the spices, as the manner of the Jews is to bury."

Now, what is the deduction of these two thoughts? Why, as Nicodemus, the rich man, gave the expensive spices with which to preserve Christ's body for the burial, and as Joseph of Arimathea, another rich man, gave Christ his sepulcher for the burial, therefore it means that all the rich men of the world and all the brains of the world shall yet stand by the empty tomb of Christ and declare him Lord of lords and King of kings. Oh, my friends, I am glad Christ's cradle was in a manger. That proves that Jesus came a Christ for the poor and the outcasts, the sorrowing and the afflicted. But I am also glad that Christ's dead body was wrapped in the spices of a Nicodemus and laid in the family vault of a Joseph. That symbolizes to me this other fact that some day all the mightiest men of earth shall yet acclaim him not only the risen Lord, but also their Redeemer and Friend. May that glorious day be not far distant! It is said that just over his study desk at Hawarden William E. Gladstone had these words framed and hung upon the wall: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee." So may all the great and honored men of this day find their perfect peace in a risen Lord, as Nicodemus and Joseph of olden times honored him at the sepulcher.

But as we approach a little nearer to the rifled sepulcher we find another startling fact. "The body of Christ is gone!" you say. Is that the startling fact? Oh, no. I expected to find the body gone. All historians have alluded to this one fact. I expected to find the body of Christ gone. Next I want to call your attention to the fact that the graveclothes were lying in the crypt, just as they were put there by Christ's friends when Jesus' body was laid away in the tomb. "How can these things be?" you ask. Then you realize that stones and doors and barred windows were no barriers for him. When Jesus arose on the first Easter morn he did not come forth, as did Lazarus, bound hand and foot with graveclothes. He did not get up, as we do of a morning, by throwing the bedclothes from off our bodies, but he arose silently, swiftly. He arose, and the graveclothes were left in just the same positions as Christ's friends had placed them. "Come; see the place where the Lord lay."

What is the significance of all this? It means that when we are resurrected we shall leave all earthly associations and infirmities behind. We shall not arise with a struggle, but we shall simply move quietly out of all the struggles, all the heartaches, all the sufferings of this world. It means that when you get up at the trumpet blast of resurrection your back will never ache again, your head will never be weary, your heart will never bleed. All these sorrows and trials of earth have had their mission in fitting us for the future life, but when that life comes the mission of Paul's thorn in the flesh shall be forever done away with. Oh, the glorious day when we shall be emancipated from our binding graveclothes, which have always been the symbol of sin and of sorrow and of earthly parting! In heaven we shall all have new wearing apparel. Would you like to catch a glimpse of the garments of the resurrection? "Who are these which are arrayed in white robes, and whence came they?" is asked in the apocalyptic vision. "These are they which come out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Glorious, glorious is to be the change of our resurrection garments. Thank God that, like Christ's, our binding shrouds of earth shall be left in the sepulcher and be exchanged for the coronation robes of heaven.

Now, as the angels had such a large part to do in the earthly life of our Lord Jesus Christ the question which comes to our mind is this: "Who are these angels? If they were important to Christ's life, are they important for ours?" Angels are mentioned at least 280 different times in the Bible. They were important to the lives of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Moses and Joshua and David and all the other mighty servants of God in the Old and the New Testament, and they are important to our life as they were to Christ's. When we shall arise from our graves God will send his angels to greet us as he sent his angels to greet Christ. We may be pardoned for wondering if the heavenly messengers who shall stand by our open graves will be those dear ones who have gone beyond and have come back to earth to take us to our celestial home. We wonder if the messenger who will open our closed eyelids on our first Easter morn shall be mother or father or brother or little child. Lord Jesus, who art thou going to send to us at that time? Will it be one of our loved ones who is to be thy messenger?

But there is still another startling fact about this Easter tomb to which I would call your attention. That is the garden surrounding it. In ninety-nine times out of a hundred, when you have pictured this tomb of Joseph of Arimathea, it has been in the midst of a garden. Then you have turned to the books of Biblical lore and studied the flora of the springtime in the Holy Land. These writers have told you that in March and April there are flowers everywhere about Jerusalem. The valleys are covered with them; the hillsides are covered with them. They push their golden heads between the crevices of every rock. And when you think of this angel of my text greeting Mary Magdalene and Mary, the mother of James, you think of him with piled up banks of roses on every side and amid great white calla lilies, as sentinels lifting up their heads to keep watch, and amid great hosts of carnations and bluebells and sweet violets and jonquils and tulips and orchids and dahlias and asters and pansies and heliotropes and wistaria. You say to me: "I do not care whether there are oriental flowers or no. When I think of the garden surrounding Christ's tomb I think of the most beautiful of all flowers, and then I say Joseph's garden was like those flowers and not only like them, but far more beautiful than they."

You are right, my brother. No garden of the western hemisphere can be as beautiful as the garden of the Palestine hills, where Christ was buried in Joseph's tomb. But, alas, you would be very much in error if you thought this garden about Joseph's tomb was beautiful when Mary Magdalene and Mary, the mother of James, entered it on that Easter morning. If you would go with these women there you would find the lilies and the roses and all the other flowers trampled down. It was once beautiful, but now it is a wrecked garden. This beautiful garden looks as though it had been uprooted by a pelting hailstorm. What was the matter? No sooner did this angel of the resurrection appear and Christ come forth from the tomb than the Roman soldiers fell down like dead men. They fell flat among the flowers. Then, as soon as they recovered from their swoon, they rose and in wild terror fled. Those flowers were torn from their roots or crushed as though a herd of stampeding cattle had jammed their hoofs into them. What lesson do we therefore learn from these crushed flowers lying around in the wrecked garden surrounding the tomb of Joseph or Arimathea? Why, this is the lesson: If we can only bring our risen Lord into touch with the intrenched armies of sin he will scatter the Satanic hosts as he made the Roman guard drop before him in the sunrise burst of that first Easter morn. Oh, my friends, will this not be your purpose, that Christ may triumph over all the forces of evil intrenched in our city streets?

We can never rid this world of sin unless we make the risen Christ our leader and companion. Almost everywhere we turn, even among the beautiful flowers about the tomb of the dead Christ, we can hear the hiss of the serpent, the touch of whose fang means eternal death unless the wound is healed by divine medicament. Bishop Meade relates how one day he was out walking in a beautiful garden with a young lady. "Oh, bishop," she cried, "look at that lovely flower!" With that she reached over to a bush heavily laden with the most exquisite roses. She reached far forward to pluck the most beautiful of all, when suddenly out of that bush there darted the fang of a snake and fastened itself upon her arm. So in the world about us. Even in the most beautiful of flower gardens we find the Satanic serpents wriggling, twisting, hissing, as the Roman guard was encamped about the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea from "black Friday" to Eastern morn. Oh, my friends, will you not strive to bring forth this risen Christ and let him make sin under the flash of his eye crouch and trample and die?

And, if it is important to let the risen Christ come forth to scatter sin out of the hearts of the human race, how much more important is it to let him come in touch with our own hearts and make us pure and true and good and noble and Christian! There is a beautiful legend told that many years ago a poor, blind pilgrim was journeying toward Jerusalem, the City of Peace. After he had been many days and weeks and months on his way he met another traveler going that way. This stranger said, "Friend, submit thyself to me, and I will guide thee to the City of Peace and give to thee whatsoever thou wilt ask." After the twain had journeyed on for some days more, at last the pilgrim, utterly wearied, turned and said, "Oh, good friend, thou who hast said that thou wilt do everything for me if I submit myself to thy will, open for me my blind eyes." The stranger said: "I will. 'Blind eyes, be ye opened!'" Instantly the blind man opened his eyes, and he say that he had been walking along the edge of a precipice. And he saw that his guide was Jesus Christ.

Lord Jesus, at this Eastertide we are pilgrims. We are journeying to the New Jerusalem, the City of Peace. We are journeying thither by the way of the garden, in the midst of which stands a rifled tomb. We are blinded by sin. We are lost, and we want a guide. Oh, thou Christ, who didst appear unto Mary Magdalene, come to our rescue! Open our blind eyes. Cry unto us as thou didst to the sinful woman of old: "Thy sins are forgiven thee. Go in peace." Grant us this prayer, O Jesus! And may thy angel who spoke to Mary Magdalene and Mary, the mother of James, speak to us in thy name the glorious message of our sins forever pardoned and forever past!

Cupid, Medical Assistant

By LA TOUCHE HANCOCK

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

Dick Fremont was in an unromantic state of mind. A little Cupid, which was holding a finger to its lips and gazing at him from the top of an inkstand on a table by his side, seemed to warn him that he had been physically exhausting himself lately. He had been working too hard. At present he had pains all over his body. His tongue was distinctly discolored, and his pulse was weak. His head was throbbing, and there was scarcely a portion of his body which did not ache. Loss of time meant loss of money to him, for he wrote for a living. If he did not work he was perfectly aware that some one else would get ahead of him. Not that he had easily given up, but the task of putting words together had proved in his present condition as hard as carving blocks of stone.

In his extremity he thought of a doctor. Of all medical men he had a horror. At the moment, however, there seemed to be no excuse for not conquering his aversion, so he dispatched a bellboy with orders to bring the nearest medical practitioner in a hurry.

"WHY, MAY—MISS MONTGOMERY—YOU?"

He had made a heroic effort to forestall any aid from such a source. On the table near by were bottles of all sizes and shapes, containing nearly every advertised patent medicine which he thought suited to his peculiar complaint. He had partaken of them all with much the same result as if he had drunk a "hazing" concoction. At last he had given up all hope of successful self treatment and resigned himself to a dubitative trial of "kill or cure" at the hands of a doctor.

The little Cupid attracted his eyes to a photograph lying close at his hand. He took it up, looked at it earnestly and meditated. Just as he was about to press it to his lips a knock came at the door. He said wearily, "Come in!" and a woman's voice responded:

"Pardon me, but are you the gentleman who sent for a doctor? The boy who called me said you lived on the third floor, but I did not quite catch the name he mentioned."

The tones of the voice seemed familiar to Dick. He hastily hid the photograph he had in his hand behind the pillow on his chair and looked up at his visitor.

"Why, May—Miss Montgomery—you?"

With a blush the woman he addressed turned as if to go away.

"It must have been a mistake," she began, when he interrupted her.

"No, no! Please come in!"

She hesitated and then, closing the door, looked at him.

There was a pause, and neither spoke. Then Dick said, in a half whisper, "Are you a—a doctor?"

"I am," she replied, with a smile, "but I don't think you meant to send for me."

"Well"—he hesitated. "I'm glad to see any doctor."

"Thank you!"

She almost laughed at the doubtful compliment.

"No! I don't mean that. I—I really had no idea of seeing you. I told the bellboy to go for the nearest doctor, and I never thought"—

"To see me? No; I suppose not. You didn't know I had taken my degree. Of course not. I don't suppose my affairs interested you after"—

"After our quarrel? Oh, yes, they did, I assure you"—

She stopped him with a glance.

"You do look sick," said she, "really sick, and"—advancing to the table—"what on earth have you been dosing yourself with?"

"A little medicine."

"A little medicine? A little poison!" she exclaimed, with a laugh, as she took up the several bottles, one after the other, and examined them.

"Toothache drops! Paregoric! Dear me, you must have a complication of ailments!"

"I suppose I have," he wearily assented. "I've tried them all, and I'm not a bit better!"

She burst out laughing. Then she came a little nearer to him and said, hesitating, "Let me feel your pulse."

He put his hand in hers. His pulse was beating at fever heat. She counted mentally, then touching him on the shoulder gently pressed his body forward and placed her ear to his back. As she did so the pillow fell down, releasing the hidden picture. She started as she saw her own photograph. Then, with a quite smile, she said, "Are you in pain?"

"Awful!" he replied, pressing his heart.

She winced and turned toward the mantelpiece. There, staring her in the face, was another photograph of herself. She turned and looked at him.

"Why," she exclaimed, "I really believe you still"—

"Yes," he replied, looking straight into her eyes, "I do still care for you. Won't you forgive me for my share in that silly quarrel we had two years ago? I"—

She made no reply as he hesitated.

"Ah, say 'yes,'" and he tried to rise, but sank back with an expression of pain.

"Don't get up," she said gently. "You are too sick!"

"Can't you help me?"

She smiled. "I think I can."

She took out her prescription book and wrote on a leaf.

"Here is a prescription which"—

"Oh, bless the medicine! I don't want that. If you only"—

"Will you take it? See what it is!"

"Oh, I can't read doctors' hieroglyphics. I mean I don't understand Latin."

She handed him the slip of paper. He took it and carelessly scanned what she had written, which was merely her name—"May Montgomery."

"Will I take it?" he almost shouted. "Will you give it to me?"

She nodded her head.

The cure was complete.

Startled the Rector.

The rector, returning from his holiday, heard that a parishioner had "lost his old Betty" and at once hurried off to console him.

"I'm grieved to hear of your loss, Giles," he began.

"Oh, well, sir, thankee," replied Giles, "it's a pity, of course, but she was a rare lazy jade. She would never do anything unless she was well thrashed."

"Tut, tut; dear me"—

"It's true, sir. She was a bad bargain. Thank goodness, the fair's next week, and I'll pick up a better one there, I hope, if I don't get suited before."

"But don't you think, even for appearances' sake, you had better wait a little longer?" urged the clergyman, getting rather annoyed at his tone.

"Oh, no," responded Giles. "I've had my eye on one for some little time, and what I get for Betty's skin will go toward it. I tell 'ee what, sir, I wouldn't mind having one of your young uns, if you're agreeable."

"I won't stop to hear another word of such abominable talk," said the disgusted rector. "There wasn't a better woman in the village than your wife Betty."

"Wife! Who's talking about my wife?" said the astonished Giles. "I'm talking about my old mare that died yesterday."—London Globe.

The Properties of Cocaine.

Travelers in Peru and countries where cocoa grows chew the leaves of this plant for the purpose of allaying the sense of hunger and the feeling of exhaustion that accompanies it. At first the leaves were thought to possess food elements, but now it is known that the cocaine they contain merely allays the irritability of the nerves that produce the sense of hunger. Cocaine is an alkaloid made from the cocoa leaf, which has the effect of completely destroying the sensibility of nerves. The discovery of this active principle of the cocoa leaf explained fully and satisfactorily the effect produced by chewing the leaves. An infusion of the leaf might be used with good results in allaying the gnawing appetite that follows some forms of fever or in cases where the sense of hunger is due to a diseased condition of the stomach. Cocaine should never be used except on the prescription of a trustworthy physician, because it is dangerous. The cocaine habit is more readily formed than either the morphine or the liquor habit and is far more rapid in its work of destruction.

Asked and Answered.

In the "Reminiscences of Sir Henry Hawkins" (Lord Brampton) a story is told concerning Jack, the pet terrier which always accompanied the famous judge wherever he went.

On one occasion, when on circuit and driving to the cathedral of a certain city for the preliminary religious service, Jack sat beside his master in the sheriff's coach. The sheriff and his chaplain, a most solemn looking, ascetic high churchman, occupied the opposite seat.

His lordship in relating the story says that the chaplain eyed the dog for a long time with great uneasiness. Then, as they neared the cathedral, he seemed to get alarmed and, in a state of great agitation, stammeringly said:

"My lord, may I—ah—er—ask if the dog is going to divine service?"

"Well, I don't know," replied his lordship. "I shall ask him. Jack, would you like to go to church?"

Jack growled and lifted his head to howl.

"No," went on the judge. "Jack says that he doesn't like dry sermons."

"Perfect Lemonade."

Perfect lemonade is made as follows: For a quart take the juice of three lemons, using the rind of one of them. Carefully peel the rind very thin, getting just the yellow outside. Cut this into pieces and put with the juice and powdered sugar, of which use two ounces to the quart in a jug or jar with a cover. When the water is just at the boiling point pour it over the lemon and sugar, cover at once and let get cold. Try this way once and see if it is not delicious.

LIFTING A BABY.

Be Careful Always to Support the Head and Neck.

The head of a baby is very heavy, much heavier in proportion to its body weight than that of an adult. The brain of a newborn baby is about 14 per cent of its entire body weight, while a grown person's is but 2.37 per cent of its weight. At the same time its spine is very weak, the bones of it are soft, being, in fact, more of the consistence of gristle than of hard bone.

Now, this is why a young baby's head falls forward if put sitting up straight, which, by the way, is a thing that never should be done until it sits up of its own accord. This it will not be slow to do as soon as its muscles are strong enough, which is generally when the infant is about four or five months old.

In lifting a baby, therefore, it is most important always, before beginning to lift, to place the palm of one hand under the back of the head and neck, so as to support them well. At the same time the other hand and forearm should be passed round the child's loins, so as to support both back and thighs and prevent the legs from hanging down. When both hands are in position, then gently raise the infant.

Never lift a baby up with one hand. This is an absolute rule, to which there is no exception. Both hands must always be used at the same time in lifting an infant. Neglect of this simple rule may cause muscle strains and jars to the spinal cord and brain.

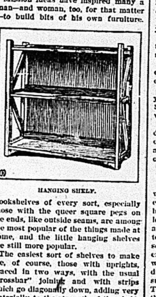
In carrying a baby see that its head is well supported against the arm and that its legs do not dangle from the knees. At the same time do not hold it so as to constrict its movements. Keeping a baby held with its back bent and its limbs doubled causes deformities. It also causes wasting of the muscles. These cannot grow strong unless they have free room to exercise. A baby should always be able to use its limbs freely.—New York American.

HANGING SHELVES.

They Come In Handy For Books, China or Bric-a-brac.

An extra shelf or two does a great deal by way of relieving congestion where the bookcase or china closet is small. These shelves, by the way, are comparatively easy to make and inexpensive to buy if you've no handy man to wield hammer and saw.

Mission ideas have inspired many a man—and woman, too, for that matter—to build bits of his own furniture.



HANGING SHELF.

Bookshelves of every sort, especially those with the queer square pegs on the ends, like outside seams, are among the most popular of the things made at home, and the little hanging shelves are still more popular.

The easiest sort of shelves to make are, of course, those with uprights, braced in two ways, with the usual "crossbar" joining and with strips which go diagonally down, adding very materially to the strength of the shelf. This is the style of shelf shown in the illustration.

Deeper sets may be made to set in under a window, where it is in a sort of recess, as many windows are. They may be built directly into the recess, made immovable, but the better way is in making them like a separate case which fits snugly but easily into the wall. Then at cleaning time the case may be entirely removed for the better getting rid of dust.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Massaging the Face.

Massaging the face is a help to nerves as well as a preventive of wrinkles and should be done with an emollient cream after washing it with lukewarm water. Start from the chin with an upward and outward motion. The palms of the hands are best for the cheeks, always moving them in an outward direction. Beneath the eyes also move the finger ball in an outward direction, but do it lightly, or bagginess at the corners of the eyes will result. Cologne dropped on a handkerchief and held under the eyes will remove the dark lines that come from fatigue.

Sickroom Deodoriser.

A delicious odor to use in a sickroom is merely a mixture of powders. A half ounce each of powdered frankincense, cascarilla, benzoin, cloves, cinnamon and thyme are used. They should be worked into a fine, well mixed powder and kept in a tightly closed glass jar. When using heat either a metal dish or a shovel and throw a little of the powder over. It will smoke, but not burn.

Cleaning Ribbons.

A mother of daughters who has phenomenal success in cleaning ribbons of all kinds and characters washes them in warm water, rubbing on them white soap as she works. Then she rinses them and irons them wet. As soon as they are dry she rubs them between her hands until they are soft and then irons them again. They usually issue from the ordeal like new.

Animals and Fire.

Rattlesnakes won't run from fire, bu instead strike till the last at the flame about them. This is true of many animals, especially of horses, who wil rush back into a burning barn, apparently blind with rage, striking wit their hoofs and switching their tails i great anger.

The flight of wild birds during migrating time against lighthouses is more like the action of the green bicyclist who rides against a trolley car o wagon as if hypnotized by it and in spite of his fears.

Gorillas, it is said, delight in fire, drawing closer to the flames as the fire dies down and at last wading in the redhot ashes, apparently enchanted and not feeling the burning coals.

A little fire built beneath one of the pear shaped paper wasp nests that are seen hanging from low branches will kill every wasp in it, as the insects fly at it one by one in their endeavors to save their home and young.

Frogs leap through the flames of a little bonfire time and time again, as if having the most pleasing of fun. It may be, though, that they think the flickering flames to be some new sort of insect.

Strange Captivity.

The springbok of South Africa migrate in vast herds, moving in a compact body and carrying everything before them. If a flock of sheep be in the line of march—as it sometimes happens—it is surrounded, enveloped and becomes, willingly or unwillingly, part of the army. An African hunter tells the strange story of seeing a lion in the midst of the antelopes, forced to join the march. It is supposed that the lion had sprung too far for his prey, that those upon whom he alighted recoiled sufficiently to allow him to reach the ground, and then the pressure from both flanks and the rear prevented him from escaping from his strange captivity. If the springbok travels in such armies, how can those in the middle and rear find food? In this wise: Those in the front ranks, after they have eaten greedily of the pasture, gradually fall out of the ranks to rest, while the hungry ones in the rear come up, and so the columns are all the while changing.

Had Him Beat.

The head day porter and the head night porter of a hotel, according to the San Francisco Chronicle, became involved in a discussion on ages. The head night porter confessed to thirty-eight.

"H'm! Say. I've got you beat ten years," declared the head day.

"You mean to tell me you're only twenty-eight?" demanded the head night.

"I should say not. I's just forty-eight," explained the head day, with an expression of withering disdain.

"Then you ain't got me beat no ten years. I's got you beat just ten years. Say, I got ten years comin' that you won't see again."

"Look here, man," declared the head day, "you ain't got no sense. I's sure of them ten years, 'cause I's seem 'em an' been through 'em. You ain't sure of yours. You might die tomorrow."

A Source of Contagion.

It has been proved by abundant investigation that one prolific source of epidemic diseases is found in the liability of the germs of such diseases to lodge in the mouth around the teeth and gums. A physician examined the teeth of the children of a certain school. He found disease germs present in almost every case. By careful watching he discovered that those children whose teeth were kept cleanest suffered less from epidemic diseases. The neglected condition of the teeth is, therefore, a common cause of illness. Indeed, if one takes the trouble to observe with what rapidity the tartar and cheesy matter accumulate around the teeth of people who are out of health they will not be long in making up their minds that a thorough and judicious use of the toothbrush is not very far from a means of grace.

An Alphabetical Advertisement.

The following remarkable alphabetical ad, appeared in an issue of the London Times away back in 1842: "To Widowers and Single Gentlemen—Wanted, by a lady, a situation to superintend the household and preside at table. CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Christ Church.

The services and sermons yesterday were appropriate to Palm Sunday. The Rector, Rev. R. C. Blagrave, preached at both services. In the evening his text was from St. Matthew, 21st chapter and 9th verse:

> "And the multitude that went before and that followed, cried, saying, Hosanna to the Son of David, blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest!"

John Street.

The pastor, Rev. A. H. Drumm, officiated at both services. In the evening his text was from St. Matthew, 19th chapter and 25th verse;

> "When His disciples heard it they were exceedingly amazed, saying, Who then can be saved?"

During the service Miss Gowsell and Mr. Cameron sang a duet entitled, "Some Day the Silver Cord will be broken."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

At last evening's service the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly, preached the last but one of a series of sermons on "The Glory of the Cross." The final sermon of the series will be preached on Good Friday. At the evening service yesterday Miss Lillian Hubly sang "Gethsemane," very sweetly.

St. Michael's.

The services yesterday were exceedingly well attended. During the offertory at the evening service Mr. Harry McIninch sang "The Palms" in splendid style.

Holloway Street.

Yesterday the services in this church were of a missionary nature and proved to be both instructive and profitable. In the morning the pastor preached a sermon having especial reference to the Woman's Missionary Society and the good work which it was accomplishing. The text he chose was, he said, in keeping with the day, namely, Palm Sunday. It was from St. Luke, 19th chapter and 38th verse;

> "Saying, blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord, peace in heaven, and glory in the highest."

At the evening service Messrs. H. E. Plewman and C. A. Mullen, students of Albert College, who were representatives to the Students' Volunteer convention, recently held at Nashville, Tenn., gave addresses in reference to missionary work and the convention. The hymns sang and the music by the choir were appropriate to the service.

Baptist.

Pastor Emerson preached at both services yesterday. His evening subject was: "The Companions of Solitude." Text, Deut. 31: 43-52:

> "Our thoughts are the companions of our solitude."

Our life, the preacher said, is made up of past, present and future, and in our solitude these all pass before our minds. It is a good thing for us to spend some time in solitude. In the hours of solitude God equips men for service. The three means by which the events of our lives are borne in upon us are: 1. By memory, by which things of the past become present. 2. By imagination, by which the future is made present. 3. By faith, which lays hold of the unseen things and reveals them to us. Moses in the mountain of solitude saw God, and this was the secret of his strength. What is our vision of the future in our hours of solitude? The past may have been dark and sinful, but by looking to God a bright future opens up before us.

Bridge Street.

"Wrestlers" was the subject discussed last evening by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson. A large congregation was present and the discourse was highly appreciated. During the service Miss Vermilyea sang a solo entitled, "Babylon," and in the anthem, "Father, Keep Us in Thy Care," the solos were taken by Misses Vermilyea and G. Price.

A Bark Lost Forever.

Yesterday morning a valuable dog belonging to Mr. James Mackie, jr., was acting in such a strange manner that a policeman was called to shoot the canine, which he did. The dog had every symptoms of having taken poison.

Police Notes.

Since Saturday a couple of tramps were the only occupants of the cells.

Better Protection Of Fish and Game.

HASTINGS COUNTY BRANCH OF THE ONTARIO FISH AND GAME PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION MET ON SATURDAY.

A meeting of the above association was held on Saturday afternoon at the Public Library and was well attended. Much interesting discussion took place after routine business was disposed of.

President Ritchie occupied the chair.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted and copies ordered to be sent to the Hon. Minister of Fisheries, Dr. Reaume;

Resolved, "That this branch of the Ontario Fish and Game Protective Association hereby heartily endorses the decision of the Ontario Government to forbid the use of gill nets and seines in the Bay of Quinte and its tributaries, by means of which there has been hitherto such wanton destruction of food and game fish, and which at no time ought to have been permitted, these waters being one of the principal spawning grounds for whitefish, and before they had become almost exterminated of salmon trout also.

"Moreover, previous to the use of gill nets and seines, these waters were teeming with black bass, which, together with such game fish as maskinonge and pickerel, are now reduced almost to the vanishing point.

"We desire especially to draw attention to the absolute necessity of a thorough enforcement of the regulations, which have hitherto been a mere sham; unless the overseers appointed to carry out the law perform their duty, it will still continue to prove ineffectual to prevent the evil of so great a loss to the country.

"This association, though most desirous to aid in protecting the fish, find their efforts ineffectual owing to overseers neglecting to act even on information given them, and actually, in cases of infringement of the law brought to their attention, reporting the name of their informer to the law breakers instead of taking action against them.

"If hoop nets are to be permitted this season it is very necessary that the length of the leaders attached to these nets should be limited, otherwise they will destroy large quantities of other fish than their use contemplates."

As the usual slaughter of robins and other insectiverous birds is already beginning, it was decided to pay a reward for information in each case that leads to conviction of any person guilty of this rascally practice. If the informant does not wish to appear, any information furnished to the President, Secretary or any member of this association, will be treated as confidential, if so requested, but it must be positive and genuine information, as we will not spend time and money on suspicion, or to satisfy private spite, as people often want us to do. The same offer holds good in regard to all violations of Fish and Game laws occurring in Hastings County or Prince Edward townships adjoining Bay of Quinte, and all waters tributary to Bay of Quinte.

The meeting adjourned to meet on call of the President.

JOSEPH TEMPLETON,
Secretary.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MARKS BROTHERS TO-NIGHT.

May A. Bell Marks, who is one of the most talented and gifted actresses playing in repertoire to-day, is at the head of Marks Brothers' Dramatic Company, which is booked to appear at the Carman opera house for six nights and Wednesday and Saturday matinees, beginning tonight. The success of this organization in the melo-dramatic field during the past few years has encouraged the management to outdo their previous efforts, and as a result the present combination is said to surpass the productions of any similar company. "The Banker's Wife," with all its magnificent stage settings will be the opening bill this evening.

Theatrical People Joined in Wedlock.

Both bride and groom are valued members of Marks Bros.' Dramatic Company.

The wedding is of more than usual interest inasmuch as the contracting parties are nightly under the scrutiny of the public gaze from their position as exponents of the drama behind the footlights.

York Loan Money Long Way Off Yet.

MISS JOAN McCANN, A MISSING WITNESS, HAS BEEN FOUND IN NEW YORK.

Toronto, April 9. — The mysterious Miss Joan McCann, who is reported to hold 530 shares of Toronto Life Insurance stock, and whom some people believed to be a myth, is a real personage. She is a graduate nurse, now in attendance, it is said, upon a patient in the Holland House, New York. Crown Attorney Curry said on Saturday that Miss McCann would probably not come here to testify, but an order for a commission to examine her with regard to her knowledge of the York Loan & Savings Company and the other ventures of Joseph Phillips might be secured from a Superior Court Judge. If this commission is secured Mr. Curry and a special examiner, the appointee of the court, will go to New York and secure the testimony of Miss McCann, which, it is understood, is to be willingly given.

So numerous are the enquiries from shareholders of the York County Loan Company, as to when they may reasonably expect to be paid a dividend on the money they paid into the company, that Mr. W. T. White, manager of the National Trust Company, which is liquidator of the York Loan, was asked on Saturday for a statement on the matter.

"Shareholders and creditors," said Mr. White, "cannot possibly receive anything for a long time yet. The affairs of the York Loan Company are being wound up as fast as possible, but books are slow in coming in, and until they are all in and the different claims are decided no payments can be made.

"There are now about 65,000 books in but several thousand are still unreceived by the National Trust Company. Even after all the books are in the courts will have to decide upon the merits of the different claims—that is, classify them, and that will necessarily take considerable time. Then the assets of the company have to be sold. An organization of this kind cannot be wound up in a few weeks. It takes a long time, and shareholders, though anxious, will necessarily have to wait until all these matters are adjusted."

Departing Teacher Was Given a Watch.

A presentation took place yesterday afternoon in connection with the Sunday School session of the Holloway street church. Miss Emma Vandervoort, who has been engaged for some time in teaching the primary class, has resigned her position owing to the fact that she is leaving the city to reside in Toronto. Yesterday she was made the recipient of a handsome lady's gold watch, the same being from the officers, teachers and scholars of the school. Miss Sabra Bonisteel read an address and Master Adrian Magrath made the presentation. Rev. R. H. Leitch, on behalf of Miss Vandervoort, made an appropriate reply.

LATE REGISTRATION

GOVERNMENT HAS DECIDED TO STOP WHAT IT CONSIDERS A NUISANCE.

Toronto, April 7.—The Government has decided to abrogate the manhood suffrage registration act, under which persons in cities and county towns who find themselves left off the voters' list can have their names put on by application to the county courts. Premier Whitney introduced a bill yesterday to repeal this law. He does not propose to put anything in its place, but simply to wipe out a measure which, he says, has proved itself a perfect nuisance. The law as it now stands applies only to cities and county towns, and, the Premier pointed out, was not in force in many places considerably larger than some of the county towns. The only apparent advantage of the system, he said, was that it permitted electors who were not on the roll to have their names inserted immediately before an election and after the lists had closed. The advantage of this, however, was more than doubtful, while the cost was very great, considering the meagreness of the results. In future the municipal rolls will be taken as the sole basis of the voters' lists.

ANSWER TO MINERS.

Operators May Agree to Arbitration But On Different Plan.

New York, April 9.—With President Mitchell and the scale committee awaiting the reply of the operators to the proposition to arbitrate their differences all is quiet in the anthracite coal strike situation.

No information was obtainable yesterday accurately to indicate what stand the operators will take to-day. It is known they have carefully gone over the arbitration plan proposed by Mr. Mitchell, and, it is said, they have decided to accept arbitration, but in a radically different form from that offered by the miners.

The end of the first week of suspension of operations in the anthracite field found the miners staunch in their support of Mitchell.

Figures from the anthracite coal districts yesterday showed that in the five days they have been idle, so far, the miners have lost about $1,773,419, less the amount paid to the pumpmen. The operators have not sustained nearly so great a loss. They have sold, it is estimated, 1,250,000 tons, the normal demand for the week, and at a price fifty cents higher than they would have received had the normal conditions of April prevailed.

In the Western Pennsylvania bituminous districts reports indicate that 28,000, or over 95 per cent. of the miners will be at work to-day.

WINNIPEG STRIKE ENDS.

Cars Are Moving Again—Result of Mediators' Efforts.

Winnipeg, April 9.—The street railway strike is settled, and the cars were all started with the former employes in charge at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Dr. Sparling and Principal Patrick made the announcement after an hour's session with the men at Friendship Hall.

As the two mediators left the hall they were loudly cheered by the men.

They went immediately to the Street Railway Co.'s offices to communicate the decision that the men had accepted the terms offered.

The wages are advanced one cent an hour all round, while there is to be no discrimination against union men. The arbitration clause, though, is left out.

All former employes are taken back by the company except those who exercised violence toward the company's property. There is a clause in the agreement that the company will be willing at all times to treat with its men, or any committee employed by them, on any subject in the interests of the company, or employes.

There was a general feeling of relief over the termination of the strike, and as cars went out at 4 o'clock they were heartily cheered by thousands on the street.

McINTOSH BROS.

SIGNED AT ALGECIRAS

Work of Delegates to the Conference at Last Ended.

Moroccan Convention Was Signed Saturday—Treaty Is a Formidable Document of Sixteen Columns, Seven Chapters, and 123 Articles — Last Work of Conference—United States Does Not Accept Responsibility of Carrying Out Reforms In Morocco.

Paris, April 9.—The Moroccan convention was signed Saturday afternoon at Algeciras and the conference adjourned sine die.

The Foreign Office Saturday gave out the text of the convention for Moroccan reforms agreed upon.

It is a formidable document of sixteen columns, seven chapters, and 123 articles. The most interesting chapter relates to the Moroccan police. It consists of twelve articles and provides for natives as rank and file, Caids as commanders, French and Spanish instructors and a Swiss inspector-general. The force will consist of 2,500 officers and men.

Last Duties Performed.

Herr Von Radowitz, of the German delegation, supported by M. Revoil of the French embassy, asked Duke Almodovar to communicate with the Swiss Government on the subject of an inspector of police. The Marquis Visconti Venosta, head of the Italian delegation, thanked the president of the conference and the Spanish Government and asked the president to transmit to King Alfonso the compliments of all.

After a short response by Duke Almodovar, the delegates signed the written copy of the protocol, which will be preserved in the archives at Madrid. A printed copy, certified to and signed by the president, will be given to each delegation.

U. S. Signs Under Reserve.

Henry White, head of the American delegation, made a statement that the United States Government did not accept the obligation of responsibility with regard to the measures necessary to carry out the provisions of the protocol. The signatures of the American delegates were preceded by the words "Under reserve, this declaration, made at a plenary sitting of the conference, April 7, 1906." The Swedish delegates made the same reservation.

Duke Almodovar gave a luncheon, which was attended by all the delegates.

"Downing street, 21st March.

"My lord,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 68, of the 21st ulto., enclosing a copy of the approved minute of your Privy Council expressing profound regret of your Ministers and tendering the devoted sympathy of the people of Canada to Their Majesties the King and Queen, in the loss which they have sustained through the death of his Late Majesty the King of Denmark.

A few minutes later he went to the toilet room. When some time had elapsed and he did not come out the train crew forced the door and found him on the floor insensible. He expired within a few minutes. He had the appearance of a commercial traveler, and was about 45 years of age.

LAVA BURIES VILLAGE

Residents of Boscotrecase Are Forced to Flee For Lives.

Inhabitants Abandon Their Belongings to Escape—Torrents of Liquid Fire, Molten Stream of Lava and Huge Blocks of Rock Are Emitted From Crater of Vesuvius—Pitiful Scenes Everywhere In the Vicinity.

Naples, April 9.—Mount Vesuvius is a colossal brasier and the town of Boscotrecase, on its southern declivity, has been transformed into a gray island of ruin by the lava and ashes from the crater of the volcano. Torrents of liquid fire, resembling in the distance serpents with glittering yellow and black scales are coursing in all directions, amid rumblings, detonations and earth-tremblings, while a pall of sulphurous smoke that hovers over all makes breathing difficult.

The inhabitants abandoned it on Saturday in time to save their lives.

They had lingered in the hope of saving their belongings, but the destroying stream advanced on them so fast that they finally fled, leaving their possessions behind.

Besides the lava, huge blocks of rock are emitted.

The upper part of the Funicular Railway has been destroyed.

Pitiful Scenes.

Everywhere in the vicinity of the volcano pitiful scenes are witnessed—women tearing their hair in grief and old men crying aloud at the loss of their beloved homesteads, while in the distance, in striking contrast, lie the sapphire-colored Mediterranean, the violet-hued mountains of the Sorrento peninsula, and the island of Capri in the tranquil sea.

Artillery carts have been sent to the assistance of the fleeing peasants, and the Duke of Aosta, Cardinal Joseph Prisco and all the authorities despite the rain went into the portions of the mountain most threatened in order to succor or comfort the people.

Considerable apprehension is felt because of the earthquake shocks, which are growing stronger and are felt even at Castellamare, fifteen miles southeast of this city. Each shock is accompanied by deep and prolonged detonations.

Town Threatened.

Ottajano, at the northeast foot of the mountain, is threatened by a stream of lava and the people are beginning to desert the town. The populace of Torre Anunziata, at the south foot, have requested that night trains be run to the town. This request has been granted and trains are now ready to proceed thither in case of need.

It is estimated that 2,000 acres of land under cultivation has been destroyed by the eruption. Signor Matteucci, director of the observatory on Vesuvius, still continues to occupy a most dangerous position.

New craters have opened at different points on the mountain, but it is impossible to ascertain their number or where they are situated.

There has been no fatalities at Boscotrecase or elsewhere as a result of the eruption.

Panic at Naples.

The panic has spread to Naples. Two strong earthquake shocks shattered window panes and cracked the walls of buildings yesterday. The entire population rushed to the streets in terror, many persons crying, "The Madonna has forsaken us; the end of the world has come."

No trace remains of Boscotrecase, the commune on the southern declivity of the mountain, where up to 48 hours ago ten thousand persons lived; and Torre Annunziata, on the shores of the Gulf of Naples, one mile to the southward, is almost surrounded by the invading lava and has been evacuated by its 20,000 inhabitants. The people were brought to Naples by trains, street cars, military escorts and steamships. Transportation facilities have been sent to Torre Del Greco, to take away the people. The police and carbineers are guarding the abandoned houses and several members of the Government are also there.

Terror Stricken.

A telegram received from the mayor of Sebastiano, a village near the observatory on the northwest declivity of Vesuvius, says the lava is approaching rapidly and that the people are terror-stricken. They have been for nights without sleep, he says, are destitute and beg that assistance be given them.

The observatory has been destroyed and Signor Matteucci, the director and the employes had narrow escapes. The restaurant of the Funiculair R. R., too, has been obliterated.

The work of succor is hampered owing to the railway service, which is interrupted by red hot stones thrown to a height of 3,000 feet falling on the tracks.

As yet it is impossible to count the craters that have opened and from which streams of lava have flooded the beautiful, prosperous and happy land lying on the southeast shores of the Gulf of Naples.

With the danger and horror of the situation, aside, Vesuvius presents one of the most splendid sights imaginable.

Infant Murder.

Quebec, April 9.—With the little back broken, and bearing marks of having met with a brutal death, the body of a new-born infant lies in the morgue, while a young woman of St. Malo and her mother and brother are under arrest. It is said the young woman, who is unmarried, was the mother of the child.

Bambaata Escapes.

Durban, Natal, April 9.—Chief Bambaata has escaped in Zululand with a body guard of 70 warriors. Col. Leuchar of the colonial punitive force, is in pursuit. Two battalions of the Umoti militia reserves have arrived to reinforce the column.

Bribery Extraditable.

London, April 9.—The Lord Chancellor, Sir Robert Threshie Reid, introduced a bill in the House of Lords Saturday making bribery and bankruptcy extraditable offences in accordance with the Anglo-American convention.

THE OPPOSITION'S VICTORY.

Belated Returns of Russian Elections Only Increase Its Magnitude.

St. Petersburg, April 10.—Belated returns yesterday only increased the magnitude of the Opposition's victory. The City of Moscow has returned 160 electors, all Constitutional Democrats. Kursk returned a solid Progressive delegation, headed by Prince Peter Dolgoroukoff. M. Sherkoff, one of the members elected to the lower House of Parliament, is now in prison. Vitebsk elected two Poles, one a Catholic priest, and one a Progressive; two Constitutional Democrats and two peasants. Vladimir, one of the old capitals of Russia, where the orthodox faith is particularly strong, chose a Monarchist, but the electoral college elected five Constitutional delegates.

Tula is the only province, except Moscow, which elected a majority of Conservatives. The result in Moscow Province constitutes an anomaly in the elections. All the Constitutional Democrats went down, but the result was engineered through a deal with the Reactionists and a portion of the Octobrists, who bought the support of the peasants in the electoral college by allowing them to name an additional member.

As a result, the Province of Moscow, the real heart of Russia, sends to Parliament comparatively unknown men—two peasants, a workman, Prince Gagarin, M. Bashoff, M. Krudner and Peter Struve. The latter is the most prominent, being the president of the Moscow Bourse. With the single exception or Tula, in every province where the peasant class was in the majority they captured the majority of the members. Most of them, however, although belonging to the peasant class, are actually peasants in name only, and have risen far above their station. For instance a peasant of St. Petersburg province is a principal of a middle school.

Count Witte Resigns.

St. Petersburg, April 10.—Premier Witte late last night, according to information which has reached the Associated Press, again tendered his resignation to the Emperor with a clear-cut intimation that the latter must choose, and at once, between him and the Minister of the Interior Durnovo. The Emperor, according to reports, took the resignation under consideration.

Detroit, April 10.—The rain and wind Sunday broke the ice jam in the St. Clair River.

The McMorran, Port Huron, wrecking fleet of two steamers and a schooner, which had come down to Tashmoo to work on the sunken Linden, was caught in the crush of ice and carried below Algonac. The boats and their crews are thought to be safe.

Toronto's Oldest Citizen Dead.

Toronto, April 10.—The death of Daniel Osborne Brooke, which occurred Sunday, removes one of the oldest, if not the oldest, Torontonians, born and raised in the city. Born in 1823, when Toronto was known as Little York, Mr. Brooke had resided here ever since.

York Loan Money Used

Says Curry in Starting Toronto Life Insurance Co.

More Evidence Showing How Employes of York Loan Worked For Toronto Life and The National Monthly—A Teamster Who Had a Third Profits in Work Done By the York Loan.

Toronto, April 10.—Yesterday's evidence in the Phillips' conspiracy case was not of a remarkably exciting character.

Miss Alexander said she was in the employ of the York County Loan for nearly three years. Phillips started The National Monthly in June, 1902. At that time witness was in the pay of the York County Loan from June, 1902, until March, 1905, but she had worked for The National Monthly. Her work for the York Loan was not considerable.

Witness said she had also worked for The Canadian Home, under instructions of Phillips.

"Could you tell me the amounts spent by the York County Loan in advertising in The Canadian Home?"

"I could not say." Witness added that E. J. Burt brought in the advertisements. She did not know what Miss Lillian Hudson did. Witness knew nothing concerning the expenditures.

Divided the Profits.

Thomas Clark, teamster, said he had advances of money from the York Loan. He thought $2,950 in all. He entered the employment of the York County Loan.

"What did you do before you had any connection with the York County Loan?"

"I had a team and wagon. I went to work for the York County Loan four years ago. The first advance to me was $400 in cash. I got the other sums in cash. I bought horses and wagons with the money and worked them at the York Loan and the Southern Light."

He added that he had not done much work outside these companies. He sometimes drove the Misses Hudson down town in a buggy. He rendered the bills to the York County for the work done. Witness had given no security for his loan. He had charged 4 1-2 dollars per day for team and men. For the work done to the Southern Light he rendered the account to an employe of the York County. Witness said two-thirds of the profits made to Miss Lillian Hudson, by arrangement with Phillips. He retained the other third. After he had reckoned his expenses and retained the $15 a week due to him, he handed over the balance to Miss Hudson.

Witness added that his teams were not always all working, but the magistrate reminded him that he could not have afforded to keep the horses idle in the stables.

"When your teams were working what were the division of profits about?" asked Crown Attorney Curry.

"Sometimes there would be a profit of $50 or $60. Once there was $100 profit made."

"You got a third?"

"Yes." Witness admitted that he had been instructed by the York Loan to buy horses and wagons. He admitted that he did not think the money advanced was a loan at the time.

"Did you not tell Detective Twigg that you said you would not sign anything?"

"No." He added that the interest on the loan had been fixed at 6 per cent.

An Energetic Agent.

The next witness was a man named Broadhurst, who said that he was now in the employ of the Sun Life about two months. Prior to that he had been in the employ of the York County Loan.

He had originally received a bonus of $6 a week for writing 10 shares a week. He also received commissions, so that he got on an average $15 a week in all. When he was an inspector he sold National Monthlies and Canadian Homes, and he had also sold a Liszt piano, on which he got 15 per cent. commission.

He had written from $2,000 to $5,000 of life assurance on the average a week, out of the city as well as in it, and his expenses were paid by the York Loan. But he had been able to do business for the York Loan as well.

"But you could not do it at the same time."

"I could do it on the same day," said witness.

"What would your expenses be on the road?"

"About a dollar and a half per day for hotels and traveling expenses."

"York County Loan pay them?"

"Yes."

Witness had subscribed for stock in the Toronto Life on Mr. Phillips' suggestion. He paid $629.77 for 10 shares.

J. E. Jones contended that stock had nothing to do with Phillips.

Crown Attorney Curry claimed that he had a right to ask the question, as he contended that Toronto Life was started by the employes of the York Loan, from the president downward, out of the moneys of the York Loan.

Magistrate Denison said that Mr. Curry had to prove his contentions by asking questions.

The case was adjourned until this morning.

The argument to make permanent the interim injunctions against the holders of Toronto Life stock obtained by the National Trust Co., liquidator of the York Loan, has been adjourned by Judge Mabee till April 18.

Brighton, April 10.—Presque Isle Bay is now open for navigation. The strong north winds Sunday night broke up the ice fields and carried the ice out into the lake.

ILL, LEFT ALONE TO DIE.

Hungarian Laborers at Niagara Falls Desert Sick Comrade.

Niagara Falls, Ont., April 10.—But for the casual curiosity on the part of the driver of a butcher's cart, Michele Carowitz, a Hungarian, would have perished of starvation within a few feet of one of the busiest thoroughfares around Niagara Falls. Carowitz was one of a party of Hungarian laborers who have been living in a little house on Portage road, just outside of the city limits at Falls View.

Carowitz developed consumption and became too ill to work. His companions cared for him, but when the completion of the power development threw them out of work they decided to go to some other city.

Carowitz was too ill to take with them, so they calmly went off and left him to his fate. He is likely to die from his long chill and lack of food.

Some Dominion "Deals."

It is said that some peculiar "deals" are now being broached in the House of Commons, and it is gratifying to note that they are not liable to go through without protest by the Opposition. Mr. Bennett, M.P., brought up last week an interesting discussion concerning the sale of timber on an island known as the Clanta Tomb. It seems that the timber on this property is to be sold, and Mr. Bennett has information that negotiations have been going on in the interest of Mr. Peter Ryan, a well known party man in Toronto, for the purchase at a price very much less than its real value. He charges that Mr. D'Arcy Scott, son of a Dominion minister, has been acting as the go-between. Recalling the famous deal by which Captain Sullivan bought from the Ontario Ross Government for $250, timber limits which are sold afterwards for $10,000, Mr. Bennett intimates that the parties who are shut out from such operations in Ontario since the change of Government, are now operating with the Dominion Government. Mr. Oliver pleads ignorance of the whole matter, but a diligent cross questioning brought out that Mr. Ryan has been in communication with the Government.

Apparently there is a good deal to reform in the Indian Department. The name of Mr. Peter Ryan, who is negotiating for timber limits, is represented as one of the members of a ranching company which pays $5,600 a year for grazing rights on certain Indian Reserves in the ranch country. They have a ten years' lease over an area of over 350,000 acres, which is a cent and a quarter an acre for the territory, said to be very good grazing land. It does not appear that there was any competition for this privilege.

Mr. Roche is also a little curious to know what is the nature of the pull exercised by Dr. Lafferty, of Calgary. He has a salary of $300 a year as medical attendant of an Indian school, $200 for the same duties in another school, $400 as medical officer for the Stoney Reserve, $400 as medical officer for the Sarsee Reserve, $500 for the Blackfoot Agency, with $200 as expenses to Ottawa on a trip which is alleged to have been made to promote the doctor's claim to a Senatorship.

These are but a few instances of the way in which the Dominion Government is carrying on the business of the country. The public will no doubt take cognizance of them at the proper time—next election day.

Boys who get tired of going to school should read the following, written by Supt. Adams, of Fayette, Ohio, College. "The average educated man gets a salary of $1,000 a year. He works forty years making a total of $40,000 in a lifetime. The average day laborer gets $1.50 per day—300 days in a year or $450 a year, in forty years he earns $18,000. The difference or $22,000 equals the value of an education. To acquire this earning capacity requires twelve years of school at 180 days each, or 2,160 days. Divide $22,000, the value of an education by 2,160, number of days getting it, we find that each day at school is worth a little more than $10 to a pupil. Can't afford to miss it can we?

A Toronto paper says that a number of the English immigrants who arrived in Toronto on Sunday are already in distress and are being assisted by the City Relief Officer. Is not this enough to make people wonder if the Dominion Government is not a little too ready to admit immigrants not properly qualified for life in this country? People who land in a new country without sufficient funds to keep them in food for a week do not start with very bright prospects. It is, perhaps, not so much their fault as the fault of those who ship them over here on false pretences, but there is no denying that the condition of affairs is a deplorable one.

REMARKABLE TEST.

HYOMEI HAS BEEN KNOWN FOR YEARS AND IS GUARANTEED TO CURE CATARRH.

The remedy has made so many cures that we have urged its use in the most chronic cases of catarrh.

Breathed for a few minutes four times a day, through an inhaler that comes with every outfit, it soothes the irritated mucous membrane of the nose, throat, and lungs, kills the catarrhal germs, and restores complete health. Its healing, antiseptic fragrance penetrates to the most remote air passages, as no medicine taken into the stomach can possibly do.

The complete Hyomei outfit costs only $1, and consists of an inhaler that can be carried in the pocket or purse, and will last a life-time, a medicine dropper, and a bottle of Hyomei. If this is not sufficient for a complete cure, additional bottles of Hyomei can be obtained for 50 cents.

Compare this small expense with the fees charged by specialists.

If you cannot obtain Hyomei of your dealer, it will be forwarded by mail, postage paid, on receipt of price. Write to-day for consultation blank that will entitle you to services of our medical department without charge. The R. T. Booth Company, Hyomei Building, Ithaca, N. Y.

RECTOR DID NOT TALK OF MARRIAGE

BELFAST BREACH OF PROMISE SUIT, WHICH HAD INTERESTING FEATURES.

The London Daily Mail has the following from Belfast: "As pretty a little love story as he had ever come across," was how counsel at Belfast Assizes yesterday characterized the action brought against the Rev. Joseph Jennings Smyth by Miss May Robinson, of Dunmurry, Belfast, for breach of promise.

When the plaintiff, who is still a minor, was a school girl of fourteen, the defendant, now rector of St. Donard's, Bloomfield, was curate of the parish of Derraghy, and was on friendly terms with Mr. Robinson. His love for the girl, said counsel, was first shown when he presented her with a cracker motto, "Say you will be mine, my little one. Say you will wait for me only a few more Christmases, then happy we will be."

By Easter, 1901, they were regarded as an engaged couple. At one time there was a tift, but it was healed up, and when the plaintiff's sister asked if that were so, he replied, "She's my Mary, I'm her Joe."

One evening he called at the house, said counsel, and Mrs. Robinson was preparing to light the fire, when he said, "You need not light the fire for me. Your girl is not sufficiently class for me. I am told by the clergy I cannot have her for my wife."

There were numerous letters, but, said counsel, the defendant had carefully refrained from mentioning marriage in them. On a picture postcard, however, he had written, "Nice place for the holiday or honeymoon."

The plaintiff, in her evidence, said the defendant frequently sat with her, kissed her, and placed his arms around her. At her parents' house a pair of slippers was kept for him.

The hearing was adjourned.

AN ENIGMA TO THE POLITICIANS.

PREMIER WHITNEY AND HIS COLLEAGUES KEEP THEM ALL GUESSING.

Toronto Saturday Night: The Canadian power companies are, no doubt, extremely anxious to escape the excessive control of the Ontario Government. It is a significant fact, and complimentary to Premier Whitney, that these companies now begin to snuggle under the protection of Ottawa. Why do they do so—why did they not do so sooner. Because Premier Whitney's Cabinet of amateurs are a good deal of a puzzle to the big financiers. They do not know where they are at with Premier Whitney. He scarcely seems to be human, such is his indifference to the smiles of the capitalists and to the advice of wise politicians who go to him with warnings. He is not a brilliant man, but he has sand, and, perhaps, he remembers the cold deals he got from these same men when he was in Opposition. Perhaps he remembers, too, what happened to a Government that forgot the many and danced attendance on the few. At all events Mr. Whitney and his novices are a puzzle to men who have got into the way of whistling for any politician they want to use. The power companies are by no means sure that the Whitney Government will not, in its stolid and gruff way, step forward and expropriate all their property in the name of the people. Some lawyers have legal minds so fine that they can scent difficulties in doing anything whatever. They dare do nothing, because of a thousand and one legal possibilities that might ensue. Mr. Whitney's mind lacks these microscopic powers. He has a farmer's faith in horse-sense.

MARSHAL SOULT.

English Views of the Famous Lieutenant of Napoleon.

"When I had Soult as my opponent I could eat, drink and amuse myself without fear of being surprised. It was not that he failed to be a great commander. He was wonderful in his way; he knew how to collect 100,000 men at a fixed point on a fixed date, but when he had collected them he never knew the least in the world what to do with them."

So said Wellington, and on this occasion he actually ate Soult's dinner, which was in course of preparation for him. But, though the capture of the French marshal seemed inevitable, he was already "beyond the toils, having by a supreme effort extricated himself from perils as fearful as ever beset a general."

It was a masterly retreat, and throughout it he was not only watching for the best advantages to be gained, but testing the spirit of his men. His hand was almost on their pulses, his eye was ever watchful, and suddenly, by a stroke almost theatrical in its effect, he "drew up the troops, 20,000 in number, on the position he had occupied two months before at the battle of Braga," thus rousing the spirits of his soldiers.

He continued the retreat, facing every difficulty of country and weather, but never deterred, and finally crossed the Cavado "in full time, for the English guns were thundering on the rear."

He had lost about 5,000 men; he had entered Portugal with fifty-eight pieces of artillery; he returned without a gun.—Colonel J. Hanbury Williams, C. V. O., C. M. G., in Blackwood's Magazine.

THE NAMES HE USED.

They Helped to Sell the Wonderful Works of Whistler.

Though the peculiar nomenclature Whistler adopted for the output of his brush and needle inevitably in its novelty excited ridicule and censure and was surely adopted, just as his hirsutial oriflamb was carefully cultivated, mainly as an advertisement to attract the custom of the hunter after art novelties and art bargains even as his wand and flat brimmed hat were assumed to mark him out to "the man in the street," there is no little to be said in favor of such nomenclature by those who recognize the sisterhood of the various fine arts. Whistler's early days were passed in an atmosphere of music, and, apart from the masterful craving of erratic genius for novelty and his appreciation on reaching manhood and looking forth on the world of the value of new processes in systematic self advertising, it was therefore not unnatural that he should use musical terminology in giving titles to the output of his work in graphic art. Why should he not speak of that work as symphonies or harmonies in white, in green, in blue, in gray or what, not? Why should the word "arrangement" be confined to musical notes? Is not what is perhaps his masterpiece, his mother's portrait, really and truly, as children say, an "arrangement" in black and gray?—Critic.

Cause of Nosebleed.

In weak persons bleeding at the nose is frequently hurtful and should be stopped without delay, as continued hemorrhage may prove fatal if neglected.

Those who suffer from poorness of blood or anaemia and are sometimes seized with violent nosebleeding should avoid as far as possible anything which may tend to bring it on. Gentle exercise only should be taken, as violent bodily movements may provoke a repetition of the hemorrhage. Even running downstairs hastily should be avoided. Bleeding at the nose is usually a sign that something is wrong with the system. The cause should, if possible, be discovered and steps taken to remove it.

"Survival of the Fittest."

In Ireland from time immemorial candidates for political honors have had to cope not only with Irish brains, but with the noble Irish oak in the shape of a shillalah, a fact which illuminates a reminiscence of Galway, found in Blackwood's Magazine. When Georve IV. visited Ireland an election for Galway was pending. The king inquired of a Galway gentleman who came up to Dublin to attend his levee which candidate would probably be returned.

"The survivor, sir," replied the gentleman.

Exceptions.

Hardy—She may be well educated, as you say, but she uses very singular expressions. Tardy—She does? Hardy—Yes. Yesterday, for instance, she spoke of a musical concert. Tardy—Wasn't that correct? Hardy—Certainly not. It wasn't necessary to say "musical" in speaking of a concert. A concert must be musical. Tardy—Must, eh? Well, I've been to some that were not.

A Restful Book.

"Yes, I picked up his book last night, and I never budged out of my chair until 4 o'clock this morning."

"Goodness! Was it that interesting?"

"No, but I didn't wake up until that time."

True Helpfulness.

I want it to be said of me by those who know me best that I have always plucked a thistle and planted a flower in its place wherever a flower would grow.

Blue Blood.

Lots of people who boast of their blue blood are really color blind.—New York Times.

THE LUNGS ARE LIFE.

An Odd Little Essay on the Subject of Breathing.

Everything on, in and under the earth breathes—animals, minerals, vegetables, etc. The tides are caused by the breathing of the earth itself. This old globe must take two long breaths a day, each inspiration requiring six hours and each expiration the same period of time. If Mother Earth did not breathe she would in all probability "bust" and blow up. When she breathes too hard, as if in a panic, or because of some geological excitement, she cracks the ground and we have the earthquake. Her ordinary respiratory movement merely expands and contracts the water volume.

Singularly enough, air is the most important element provided by nature. A man can live forty-five days without food, several days without water and about three or four minutes without air. Take away his lungs, as by pneumonia, and death is as certain as sin. Does the heart beat make the circulation of the blood or does the circulation make the heart beat? What causes breathing? Does breathing make the heart beat? Does breathing make the circulation? Important, vitally important, are these questions. You may remove a man's liver, kidneys, stomach, intestines; you may sever arteries and veins; you may even stab him through the heart or withdraw his brains, and he will still live, but take away his lungs and he is dead. The lungs are the life!

THE MOTORIST'S JOYS.

A Tribute to the Beauty and the Delights of the Road.

To "see life steadily and see it whole" was Matthew Arnold's ethical aspiration. That is how the motorist sees the land he traverses. His teacher is the road. A road is the most interesting and instructive thing on earth. It is the chain that binds a country together; it is the artery along which the lifeblood of a people flows; it is the story of their past, the exhibition of their present, the presage of their future; it is the book of humanity, with a picture and a story and a lesson on every page. The history of Rome is in her roads. Once know and love the road and you can tolerate no other transit. Too fast? Read the wonderful poem W. E. Henley wrote after a friend's motor car had revealed England to him:

> Speed and the range of God's skies,
> Distances, changes, surprises;
> Speed and the hug of God's winds,
> Beautiful, whimsical, wonderful.

Read the whole of this "imperishable poem," as William Archer calls it (I had the privilege of giving it to the public), and never talk to me again of "going too fast to see anything." It is just because we go fast that we see everything.—Henry Norman, M. P., in Scribner's.

Humble Pie.

The term humble pie originally carried no opprobrium with it. It was a pie made out of the "humbles" or "numbles," from the Norman French "nombrils"—i. e., the entrails of a deer. To this day it is highly esteemed in Scotland and in northern parts of England. So late as the time of Pepys "umble pie" was served as part of the menu of a gentleman's table on an extraordinary occasion. Some writers derive the contumelious use of the phrase "to eat humble pie" from an alleged custom of serving umble pie below the salt, or at the second table. But this is not supported by authority. It more probably came into use simply through the similarity of sound, there being no similarity of meaning whatever between the noun umbles or numbles and the adjective humble.

A Ruskin Remedy.

A letter written by the late John Ruskin to Sir Oliver Lodge says: "Is it still impossible to get into any human head at your universities that the economic crisis is because people will dig iron out of the ground and build ironclads, instead of raising corn and wine and giving them to whoso needs them? That is the one plain two plus two equals four that I have tried to teach these twenty years—the thing of all others indisputable and needful, and no mortal yet has taken up the word!"

Brief Mention.

Reporter—Now that I have described your dress and those of your maids, the house decorations and the presents, what shall I say of the bridegroom when we print the account of the wedding?

Bride Elect—Well, I suppose his name must go in. You might say that he was among those present.

They Go Toward It.

"There are some men," said the chronic kicker, "whom good fortune seems to follow always."

"I think you're wrong," replied the happy hustler. "You will find good fortune meets them; it doesn't follow them."

Force of Habit.

One time a jail reporter was sent to report a wedding. He began his report by saying:

"The condemned man ate a hearty breakfast of ham and eggs."

Favorite Musical Instruments.

The burglar's, the lute; the scold's, the harp; the aurist's, the drum; the card fiend's, the trumpet; the apothecary's, the viol; the mathematician's, the triangle.

"Acre" once meant any field. It is still used with this significance by the Germans, who speak of God's acre, alluding to the cemetery.

Comparisons.

This is not a joke. It is a brief dissertation on astronomy. A variable star is one whose brightness has been observed to diminish or increase. The best known variable is in the constellation Perseus. It was called by the Arabians Algol, which means the demon star. This shows that the Arabians knew a thing or two themselves. Algol, which is larger than our sun, is partially eclipsed every 2 days 20 hours 48 minutes and 55.4 seconds by an invisible body about the size of our sun. In observing this phenomenon it is necessary to have in mind the fraction of a second; otherwise you will be liable to miss it. Algol is so far away from the earth that we do not hear the rush of the wind as the two ponderous bodies rush around each other. Compared with the distance of Algol, the diameter of the earth's orbit, which is about 185,000,000 miles, shrinks into an invisible point. When one reflects upon the vastness of such distances and the almost unimaginable activity displayed when two such tremendous bodies revolve around each other at a prodigious speed without a hitch or a change in the programme, the excitement about the amount of our gas bills seems puny indeed.

She Couldn't See the Barn.

An old lady in New Hampshire decided to try matrimony for the second time in extreme old age. Her children and grandchildren and great-grandchildren expostulated with her, but she remained firm and declared she was going to marry the man, says the Boston Herald.

"Why, you're too old," said they. "You are losing your faculties. You can't see. If this man was on the other side of the street you couldn't tell him from any one else."

The old lady said she was going to marry him. "Now, we'll put the man on top of the barn, and you shall stand in the kitchen door. If you can see him on the barn you shall marry him."

The prospective bridegroom sat on the ridgepole of the barn, the old lady came to the door, looked, shaded her eyes and looked again.

"Do you see him?" cried the family.

"Oh, yes," was the reply. "I can see the man all right, but I can't see the barn!"

Honest Sweden.

The Swedes are punctiliously honest and truthful. When asking for places at a theater, for instance, the ticket clerk never fails to inform the applicant if, owing to the crowded state of the house, a better position would be secured with a cheaper ticket than the one asked for. Again, when parcels are taken out by steamers from Stockholm to country places in the neighborhood, they are just thrown on to the quay, where they frequently remain half the day without being claimed. It never seems to occur to any one that they could be possibly taken by any one but their rightful owners. On a canal trip of any length a little book lies in the saloon of the steamer, in which each passenger keeps his own account of the number of meals and drinks that he has taken during the journey.

Alexis Piron.

Alexis Piron, a native of Dijon, is perhaps most notorious for his epitaph, "Here lies Piron, who was nothing—not even an academician." One night he was asked at a party if he could tell the difference between a woman and a mirror. "A woman," he replied, "talks without reflecting; a mirror reflects without talking." Upon this a lady asked, "Can you now, M. Piron, tell me the difference between a man and a mirror?" And as Piron remained silent she went on, "A mirror is always polished, while a man sometimes is not."

Good Breeding.

A man's own good breeding is the best security against other people's ill manners. It carries along with it a dignity that is respected by the most petulant. Ill breeding invites and authorizes the familiarity of the most timid. No man ever said a pert thing to the Duke of Marlborough. No man ever said a civil one to Sir Robert Walpole.—Chesterfield.

Bank of England Clerks.

The patronage of the Bank of England belongs entirely to the directors, a clerk being appointed by each director in rotation until the vacancies are filled, with the exception of one clerkship in every seven, which is given to a son of one of the clerks of the establishment who has discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the directors.

HEDGEHOGS.

Venom of the Most Poisonous Snakes Does Not Affect Them.

An interesting fact about hedgehogs that perhaps not many persons know is that the bites of even the most poisonous serpents have no effect on them whatever. Mr. Lenz, a naturalist, once watched a fight between a hedgehog and a viper and gives a most interesting description of it. He says that when the hedgehog came near the snake she began to smell it, for the sight of these animals is so poor that they depend almost entirely on the sense of smell, and then she seized its head with her teeth.

In a moment the snake had freed itself and, darting at the hedgehog, bit it several times, but the little animal did not seem to mind the bites at all, and when the snake was tired out with its efforts she again seized its head, which she ground beneath her teeth, poisonous fangs and all. Then she devoured almost the whole of its body.

M. Lenz also tells of a pet hedgehog that he kept in his house in a large box. Several times he put some adders into the box, which the hedgehog did not seem to fear at all, but attacked them fiercely and, as in the case of the other, was never in the least affected by their poisonous bites.

A man who had a pet hedgehog in his possession for a long time says that he had often seen it throw itself off the top of a wall fourteen feet in height. Without pausing a moment it would contract itself into a soft, fluffy ball and fall to the ground so lightly that almost immediately it would unfold itself and run off.

DIVISIONS OF TIME.

Measurements of the Days, Months and Years.

A "solar day" is measured by the rotation of the earth upon its axis and is of different lengths, owing to the ellipticity of the earth's orbit and other causes, but a "mean solar day" is twenty-four hours long, as reckoned by the timepieces.

An astronomical day commences at noon and is counted from the first to the twenty-fourth hour. A "civil day" commences at midnight and is counted from the first to the twelfth hour, and then again commences with one and finishes with twelve. A "nautical day" is reckoned the same as the "civil day," only that the reckoning is begun at noon instead of at midnight.

A "calendar month" varies from twenty-eight to thirty-one days. A "mean lunar month" is twenty-nine days, twelve hours, forty-four minutes, two and two-thirds seconds. A "year" is divided into 365 days. A "solar year," which is the time occupied by the sun in passing from one normal equinox to the other, consists of 364.24244 days, which is equal to 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 49.536 seconds.

A "Julian year" is 365 days even. A "Gregorian year" is 365.2425 days. The error in the Gregorian mode of time reckoning amounts to but one day in each 3,571 years.

A Good Eater.

When Gustavus of Sweden was besieging Prague, a boor of extraordinary aspect gained admittance to his tent and offered, by way of amusing his majesty, to devour a large hog in his presence. Old General Konigsmarck, who was in attendance, at once suggested that the man with the Gargantuan appetite should be burned as a witch, whereupon the boor, whose feelings were hurt by this observation, exclaimed, "If your majesty will but make that old gentleman take off his sword and spurs, I will eat him before I begin the pig." This was accompanied by such a "hideous expansion of the jaws and mouth" that the general, though he had given his "proofs" on many a field, turned pale and fled incontinently to his tent.

Two Handles.

Everything has two handles—the one soft and manageable, the other such as will not endure to be touched. If, then, your brother do you an injury, do not take it by the hot hard handle, by representing to yourself all the aggravating circumstances of the fact, but look rather on the soft side and extenuate it as much as is possible by considering the nearness of the relation and the long friendship and familiarity between you—obligations to kindness which a single provocation ought not to dissolve. And thus you will take the accident by its manageable handle.—Epictetus.

The Hungarian Crown.

The Hungarian crown, the royal headdress worn at their accession by all the Austrian emperors, is the identical one made for Stephen and used by him at the time of his coronation, more than 800 years ago. It is of pure gold and weighs nine marks and six ounces (about fourteen pounds avoirdupois). It is adorned with 53 sapphires, 50 rubies, 1 emerald and 338 pearls, but no diamonds, it being a notion of the royal Stephen that diamonds were unlucky.

Better Late Than Never.

"Intelligence has just reached me"—began Mr. Blodger as he sat down to the dinner table.

"Thank goodness if it has at last!" exclaimed Mrs. Blodger, and the food was partaken of in silence.

Plenty of Reason.

"I don't see why that tune haunts me constantly," complained a dull man who was always humming.

"Because you are forever murdering it!" came the quick reply from Foote.

It takes ten pounds of common sense to carry one pound of learning.—Persian Proverb.

Burma Customs.

Two ceremonies in Burma mark when childhood stops and manhood or womanhood begins. The boys have their thighs tattooed and the girls their ears bored. The boring of a girl's ears is commenced with a needle, and the puncture is gradually increased until the tip of the finger can be introduced. The enlarging process is the one carried out in the Polynesian islands, where a native can carry a good sized knife hanging in the lobe of his ear. The ugliest mutilation is that of the Eskimo, who punches a hole in his cheek and puts a bone stud into it. The Burmese boy suffers great pain from the elaborate ornamentation of his legs, which are decorated in blue and red patterns.

Organ Grinders In England.

By turning the handle of an organ the Italian in England obtains nearly eight times as much per week as he can earn in Italy, more than four times as much as the English farm laborer and nearly three times the pay of the policeman who moves him on when requested. Thousands of skilled artisans who have served apprenticeship as carpenters, painters and joiners get only half the organ grinder's pay, for the Italian reckons it a very poor week indeed if he makes less than $15, and he often gets $17.50 to $20 or more.

The Angler Fish.

The angler fish angles for his prey. From the upper part of his head project two long tentacles, with fleshy extremities, which wave about in the water and attract small fish, that, approaching and attempting to seize the supposed bait, are themselves captured by the angler. Without this device to attract his prey he would probably starve to death, as he is heavy and of comparatively slow motion.

THE GIGGLES.

(San Francisco Call.)

Sweet Mary is a charming girl,
Or so Augustus thinks;
She wears her golden hair a-curl
In fascination kinks;
But, oh, will some one tell me why,
While still with life she higgles
And all its solemn moments fly,
She giggles?

It matters not how dread the hour,
How grave its moments be;
While others' tears fall like a shower
Sweet Mary says "Te he!"
And there are others of her kind;
For instance, young Miss Miggles,
Who when she needs to air her mind
Just giggles.

I sat with Hamlet, but last week,
The melancholy Dane
Brought tears to my unwonted cheek,
So sore his woe and pain.
"To be or not to be!" he cried,
While Mary squirmed, and wriggled
And when at last poor Hamlet died
She giggled.

Within the solemn house of prayer,
At function or pink tea;
Where Mary goes—yet, everywhere—
She takes her te he he.
If laughter's due, or laughter's not,
Her golden head she wiggles,
And, though there's pathos in the plot,
She giggles.

I've thought full oft of Mary's case,
Along life's thorny road;
Why is her giggler out of place?
Any why does it explode?
Is it because her thinks won't flow,
The while she writhes and wriggles?
I dare not say—I only know
She giggles.

Coal has become an article of such vast economic importance that it would not be surprising, if this strike goes on, to hear of a movement for the destruction of corporative interests and the nationalization of all the United States coal lands. Stranger things have happened. The present uncertainty which prevails from year to year unsettles every line of business and has become almost intolerable. Perhaps Congress may apply this remedy.

Experts claim that Irish bogs are capable of turning out 50,000,000 tons of fuel per year for a thousand years, and if this were sold at the moderate figure of 5s. per ton it would bring in £12,500,000 a year. When this sum is multiplied by a thousand it will be seen that Ireland is richer in undeveloped resources than is sometimes imagined. It is claimed for the new fuel that it is practically smokeless, that it has no clinker or cinder, deteriorates but little by keeping, does not crumble by handling, and has high calorific power.

The great hindrance to modern husbandry is the ambition for extensive rather than intensive agriculture, says an exchange. The average farmer is spreading his resources over too wide an area to achieve the best results. Consolidation and concentration of effort characterize nearly all industries except agriculture, in which the majority of farmers are eager to compute their wealth by acres and not on the general results of revenue per acre. It is admitted that, owing to a lack of concentration, not more than 25 per cent. of products are producing annually which the land is capable of yielding. This entails an annual loss to the agricultural possibilities of the country that would aggregate billions of dollars.

According to officers of the De Forest Wireless Telegraph system, 572 words were flashed across the Atlantic Ocean from Coney Island to the coast of Ireland, a distance of 3,200 miles, without the use of cables, wires or any other medium than the atmosphere. This transatlantic achievement is regarded as marking the greatest forward step yet taken in the development of telegraphy without wires. A total of 1,000 words was sent out from the Coney Island station. The messages were sent in various keys, pitches or tunes, to use the wireless vernacular, in order to ascertain the correct one. Ireland reported by cable that 572 of these words were received and recorded. Heretofore the longest distance reached was between Coney Island and Colon, Panama stations, 2,100 miles apart.

HENS AND A PHONOGRAPH.

(Hudson, N. Y., Register)

A Stockport poultry farmer has had great trouble of late because his hens were not producing the proper number of eggs. A nearby neighbor has a fine flock of hens which were working over-time to produce eggs. While hanging over the back fence listening to the triumphant cackle of his neighbor's hens an idea struck the luckless owner of hens. He went into the house and brought out his phonograph, inserted a blank record, and succeeded in getting a fine imitation of the cackling of the laying hens. He then installed the phonograph in his own henhouse and started it going. The first day the hens were greatly amazed, but the second day they got down to business and ground out an egg every time the phonograph cackled. The hens have stopped cackling themselves, however, and when the phonograph stops they stop laying and the originator of the idea has to sit in his coop all day long to keep the phonograph going.

BRITISH EDUCATION BILL.

Passes First Reading—Oxford University Opposes the Bill.

London, April 10.—The education bill, the main measure in the Liberal program for the present session, yesterday was formally passed on first reading in the House of Commons after an extended debate participated in by Mr. Birrell, president of the board of education (its introducer), James R. MacDonald, Labor and Socialist, and Sir Alfred Thomas, chairman of Welsh Liberal Parliamentary party, who supported the measure, and Sir Wm. Anson, Liberal, representing Oxford University; George Wyndham, Conservative, and Lord Robert Cecil, who opposed it.

Mr. Birrell declared the bill was an honest attempt to deal with a difficult problem.

Under the bill religious education may be given in hitherto unprovided schools, if they are taken over by the educational authorities, two mornings weekly by consent of the local authorities, but not by the regular staff. Nor shall the attendance of pupils be compulsory, and no part of the expense thereof shall be borne by the rates.

The bill provides for a further annual grant of $5,000,000 from the Imperial exchequer for education, and proposes the establishment of a national education council of Wales.

Serious Heart Trouble

"Fruit-a-tives" cured her when Doctors failed.

Hundreds of people suffer with Irritated Heart. Pain comes over the heart, especially after eating. Palpitation or fluttering—headaches—belching gas—indigestion and constipation follow. And the sufferer takes heart tonics and sees heart specialists, and steadily grows worse.

The heart is irritated by the stomach. The nerves of the heart and stomach are identical. When the stomach is distended by gas—when food sours or is not properly digested—the stomach nerves are irritated and this soreness extends to the heart. That causes pain which makes so many people think they have serious heart disease.

"Heart disease and Dyspepsia cured by Fruit-a-tives."

OTTAWA, July 14th, 1905.

To Fruit-a-tives Limited,

Gentlemen:—

I never gave a testimonial to any medicine before but I like "Fruit-a-tives" so much I will gladly do so. I had every symptom of heart disease and I had a very nasty pain over my heart. I tried purgatives and consulted several physicians but nothing did me any good. After taking "Fruit-a-tives" I am entirely well again. My digestion was very bad and I suffered from long standing constipation and now I am quite well from these complaints. I wish to say also that my complexion was very bad, sallow and muddy in the extreme, but now after taking "Fruit-a-tives" it is as fresh as ever. To any one suffering from constipation and bad digestion or liver complaint and to any one with a bad complexion, I can recommend "Fruit-a-tives" with every confidence.

(Signed)

MRS. A. SUTHERLAND.

"Fruit-a-tives" CURE IRRITATED HEART because they cure stomach, bowels, kidneys and skin. "Fruit-a-tives" set the gastric juices flowing—clean and sweeten the stomach—insure the perfect digestion of every meal. They make the liver give up more bile, move the bowels regularly every day, and strengthen and heal the kidneys, as well as act directly on the skin.

"Fruit-a-tives" are concentrated fruit juices, combined by a wonderful process which increases their medicinal action many times. Tonics and antiseptics are added and the whole made into tablets.

At all druggists or sent postpaid on receipt of price—50c. a box or 6 boxes for $2.50.

Precious Metals of Canada.

Mr. Ingall, in his summary report of the mineral production of Canada for 1905, the figures of which have already been published, says the increase of 14 per cent. during the past year is the more remarkable as the falling off in the output of gold from the Yukon continues, amounting to over $2,000,000 in value. Of the gold products of the Dominion the Yukon is credited with 57 per cent., British Columbia 40 per cent., and the other provinces three per cent. In Ontario activity was evident in prospecting and developing both in the old districts in the eastern parts of the province and in the newer gold-bearing districts west of Thunder Bay. In British Columbia the dry season affected the production of placer gold. The Yukon continued to fall off, and will do so until under more favorable conditions the permanent forms of mining lower grade bodies of gravel are fully established. British Columbia and Ontario, since the development of mining at Cobalt, are now credited with 98 per cent. of the silver produced in Canada.

A Century Old.

Surrounded by relatives and warm personal friends, Mrs. James Harman celebrated her 100th birthday at the Aged Women's Home. Born on the 21st of March, 1806, in Kent, England, she came to America in 1844, on a sailing vessel, and after spending a few years in Pittsburg, Pa., and Cincinnati, Ohio, came to St. Catharines in 1853, and finally settled in Toronto in 1856. Afterwards going home to England, she stayed for a visit of two years, and again visited London when the London bridge was opened by King William.

Flowers and loving messages from a wide circle of friends brightened the day, and the most interesting incident of the day was when she held a little great-grand-niece, who was just a year old that day—ninety-nine years between, for her photograph.

Mrs. Harman must have been a beauty in her youth, as now, in her great age, she is like a piece of delicate porcelain, so fine is her skin, with scarcely any wrinkles, and her pink and white coloring give the lie to time's withering touch.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

Some men don't care how dull business is if it is equally bad with their rivals.

Patience is that which you have to have with others, but which no one is called upon to have with you.

Society is a good deal like our rich kin—we are mighty nice to its face, but make fun of it behind its back.

Some people are like a worthless team of horses—always have to be helped when it comes to pulling a load uphill.

There is one way of starting on the pathway to get rich which is seldom traveled these days—running a store and living over it.

It sometimes happens that deference is shown a man not in recognition of his greatness, but because he will be cranky of it isn't.

They Had No Dinner.

The absentmindedness of a certain well known Scotch professor is notorious. Not long ago he invited a few select friends to dine with him, and upon their arrival, some short time before the hour set apart for dinner, the professor suggested a walk through the conservatory and grounds until the gong should sound the dinner hour. After spending a short time inspecting flowers, plants, etc., host and guests came suddenly to a small gate at the end of the lawn. "Ah," said the professor to his astonished guests, "assuredly this will be a much nearer way home for you than going back to the front." And, all unconscious of his invitation to dinner, he opened the gate and bowed his guests out.—London Answers.

Pleasant Job.

"Oh, George, I'm so glad you've come," exclaimed the sweet girl. "Father is so excited and disturbed. Do go in and calm him."

"Very well," replied Mr. Lovett, "what's the matter with him?"

"Why—er—I just told him you wanted to marry me."

A Mean Trick.

"What do you do to make talk when you call on a new girl?"

"I usually start by telling a joke."

"But the rest of the evening?"

"That can be filled up in explaining the joke."

JOE'S MISSIONARY

By M. J. Phillips

Copyright, 1905, by Ruby Douglas

Little Mary Anderson was undoubtedly pretty. She was brown and lithe. Her crinkly hair was a jumbled poem. Her big brown eyes were alight with shifting fires, merriment and mischief predominating. Joe Temple thought, once or twice, that he had surprised a tenderer light in their depths, but Mary's pert little tongue and ringing laugh promptly drove such ideas helter skelter.

Joe was a light haired viking of a fellow, with muscles like a wrestler, shoulders almost the width of the door and the best temper in the world. He was teamster at the cereal food factory where Mary worked. The little brown maid attracted him. Her duty was to pack the paper cartons in cases for shipment and nail on the light covers of the boxes. Almost every load somehow lacked one box and that the one Mary was nailing, so it was natural Joe should wait for it by Mary's bench and talk while he waited.

"OH, BUT, MARY, I HAVEN'T TOUCHED A DROP IN SIX MONTHS."

The other girls were not slow to notice, and there were many sly little darts aimed at Joe in his absence. Mary soon learned that his besetting sin was drink. The conviviality of the cup that cheers had no fascinations for him. He abstained totally for months, only to fall grievously when the innate and agonizing thirst for liquor overcame him. Then he drank hard and long, suffering untold remorse after his appetite had been satiated.

When bashful Joe, his acquaintance with Mary a week old, asked if he might call on the girl in her home, the clear brown eyes met his gaze frankly.

"You may, Mr. Temple," she replied, "but there is one condition. If I smell liquor on your breath, it's all off." Poor Joe blushed. "And don't use cloves to cover it up!" she added emphatically. "That's so cheap a trick in a man. Besides, I'd know it just as quick."

Every Wednesday and Sunday evening thereafter found Joe at Mary's home, for he was soon very much in love. The family liked the big fellow and made more of him than the friendly but outwardly indifferent Mary. He talked politics with her father, helped her mother wind endless skeins of yarn and eased her small brother over rough places in the "three r's."

Fortnightly Joe and his sweetheart attended the dances of the Pastime Pleasure club at Hibernia hall, the teamster scrupulously sober and fairly exuding pride and happiness, while Mary's demureness was belied by the sparkle of her eyes.

Twice the old insidious longing for liquor fought with Joe's love, but was worsted. For days during these periods he trembled with the manfully suppressed longing when he passed a saloon. In the past he had fallen an easy victim; it was different now.

For a dazzling plan was taking form in Joe's honest brain. He had the home where he lived with his aged parents repainted and papered; during the long summer evenings he shingled the kitchen and built a back porch, for he was handy with tools, and several articles of furniture had been added to the living room out of his wages or savings.

Winter had come before he finally mustered up courage to ask the question which such preparations forefended. And the answer he received was not what he had hoped.

"Oh, I daren't, Joe; I daren't!" little Mary had said, the merry eyes sober for once. "I like you, but"—her voice sank to a whisper—"suppose you got drinking again! I couldn't stand that, Joe."

"Oh, but Mary, I haven't touched a drop in six months!" he responded earnestly. "And please God, if you'll marry me I'll never take another drink."

But she still shook her head. "That isn't long enough, Joe; wait six months more."

And to all his pleading this was her answer until Joe, in a burst of disappointment and wounded pride, declared the time too long to wait for any one; there were others; now—

Mary was a girl of spirit. She tossed her brown head and commended the sulky Joseph to those "others." He could go to them; she didn't want him, she was sure.

It was a sore hearted and very angry Joe who found himself alone soon after beneath the frosty winter stars, the snow creaking in discords beneath his feet.

"It's no use," he said to himself bitterly. "No one cares whether I'm on the water wagon or not. That girl's just been baiting me on; she doesn't care for me"—and he knew the thought was untrue while he formulated it.

"I know what I'll do. I'll go down to Joe Byers' and get sloughed. No use trying to do the right thing; nothing in it. M'm, but a drink will taste good!" It occurred to him that a drink would never taste as it did before he met Mary, though.

Joe's ugly reflections kept his eyes off his path, and a jolt to his shoulder brought him up standing. He had walked under an iron stairway which ascended to the second story of a quaint little brick store, an obstruction which the stream of progress had not washed away.

An arc light near by shone brightly on the seamed and grizzled wall. Absentmindedly rubbing his shoulder, he was stepping back from beneath the stairway when his eyes sensed something unusual on the wall, and he stooped to examine it.

There, sheltered by the steps above from the snow and the worst of the frost, a little clump of grass, a bare four spears, clung undauntedly. The cold had withered the tips, but the heart of the plant was vigorous. No earth was visible; it flourished, apparently, on bare brick and mortar. Temple peered at the grass, which stood out in minutest detail beneath the strong electric light, until a suspicious policeman gruffly ordered him to move on.

When Joe had walked half a dozen blocks, pondering the phenomenon, he began to find a lesson in it for himself. "Why," his thoughts ran, "that little bunch of grass has got more grit than I have! It's shy a thinker to help it out even. The Lord put that seed on earth to grow. He didn't say, 'Find a nice rich soil somewhere, grow if you feel like it and quit when you get discouraged.' No, sir. He just commanded it to be what it's made to be, and, by thunder, that seed didn't ask any questions!

"And here I am," he went on in wholesome self scorn, "a great big hulking guy with brains—leastways I'm supposed to have 'em—laying down like a hound pup when things don't go to suit me. Mary, little sweetheart, that bunch o' grass was a missionary set to growing out of a brick wall just to show me what a chump I am. Well, I've found out in time. No booze for me! And if you say six years instead of six months I'll wait for you and be proud to do it." With a light heart he turned homeward.

Joe met a diminutive messenger boy at his own front gate. "Yer name Temple?" queried the youngster. "This is fer you then."

By the light of a single match he read the brief message:

> Can't you come over, Joe? Maybe we can compromise.
> MARY.

"Hey, you!" shouted the boy in amazement as Joe, after rapturously pressing the note to his lips, rushed down the street. "Any answer?"

"Yes, but I'll deliver it myself," came back to him.

Cautiously the youth tested with strong teeth the dollar Temple had given him; then a grin overspread his wizened face, and he reached up into the frosty atmosphere as if to pull on a rope. "Weddin'-bells!" he commented laconically.

Having used a sample box of Gin Pills, and finding them give me great relief, I sent my father-in-law, A. McDermid, of Keady, a box; he having for years been used up with kidney and bladder trouble, and unable to get relief from the urinary remedies used. The Gin Pills gave him relief before half the box was used. He is now entirely cured, and I believe Gin Pills a great cure.

WHENCE NAMES COME

THE SURPRISING CHANGES THAT TIME HAS WROUGHT.

Who Would Think, For Instance, That the Name Thomas Whitehorse Originally Indicated "Thomas at the Sign of the White Horse?"

Considering the surprising changes that many names have undergone, says Miss Laura Alton Payne in the Independent, the almost universal lack of knowledge concerning their origin is not to be wondered at. What is there in "Peter Snooks" to suggest to the uninitiated that originally it was "Peter at the Seven Oaks?" Though "Thomas Whitehorse" suggests the American Indian custom in names, originally it was "Thomas at the White Horse," or "Thomas at the Sign of the White Horse" (a tavern). Sidney is a corruption of St. Denys, Sinclair of St. Clair, Seymour of St. Maur, Janeway of Genoa, Curtis of "courteous," Armitage of "hermitage," Spark of Sparrowhawk. Emerson and America had the same origin—Almeric, an old Norman name, Amerigo being the Italianized form.

Names, like things, are not always what they seem. Beers and Berry are not "beers" and "berry," but a corruption of "borough," often written "bury" and "bery."

In the beginning a single personal name sufficed. For awhile no two persons bore the same name, but as a stock of names accumulated repetitions became common, and as the population of the world increased distinctive names became necessary; hence we read of John the Baptist and John the Disciple, Darius Hystaspis and Alexander the Great, Joshua, son of Nun, and Simon Barjonas—"Simon, son of Jonas."

Surnames were first used in France, becoming general there during the latter part of the tenth or the fore part of the eleventh century. They were used hereditarily to some extent, however, prior to that time. They were introduced into England at the Norman conquest in the year 1066, but it required two or three centuries to establish the body of our nomenclature on a fixed basis. During that time surnames became general throughout the British isles except in Wales, in some parts of which they are unknown to this day.

Surnames are now general in all civilized countries, I believe, except Turkey. In England alone there are from 40,000 to 50,000 existing surnames.

Surnames have been drawn from every available source—personal names, location, occupation, deeds of prowess, mental, moral and physical attributes, terms of relationship, the human body, farm and household articles, buildings, foods and drinks, modes of travel, nations and laws, customs and religions, geographical terms, weather and seasons, months and days, measures and values, the joys and ills of life, the animal, mineral and vegetable kingdom and even from the kingdom of heaven. The use of nicknames and compound terms gave an almost inexhaustible source. Even oaths became embodied, as in Pardoe, from par Dieu.

In most countries it is customary for the wife to take her husband's name, but in some European countries it is not unusual for the husband to append the wife's name, particularly when it is more honorable than his own. Hyphenated names and the wife's retention of her maiden name for a middle name are customs growing in favor in the United States and Great Britain.

Among the earliest names introduced by the conquest were found Serl, Drew, Bryce, Harvey, Arnold ("ern"—eagle), Albred (now known as Albert and Albright), Almeric, Ingelram, Ebrardus (Everard), Warin (Guerin, now Warren), Ivo, Hamon (Hammond), and Payn (originally Pagan). After their adoption as surnames the most of these became obsolete as personal names.

The most popular personal names since the Domesday Book recorded them have been John and William, but their derivatives are too numerous to mention here. Roger, Robert and Richard took a double nickname in H and D; hence Hodge and Dodge, Hobbs and Dobbs, Hicks and Dicks, with the rougher forms of the last—Higgs and Diggs, and even Hitch, giving rise to Dickens, Hitchcock and Higginson.

Diminutive and other affixes served an important part in the origin of surnames from personal names. The Anglo-Saxon "kin" and "cock" and "ing" are represented in Jenkins, "little John;" Hitchcock, "little Richard," and Browning, "little Brown;" the Norman "ot" and "et," in Eliot, "little Elias," and Emmet, "little Emma" (sometimes "lot" and "let," Hamlet, "little Hamon"); the French "on" and "en" in Marion and Dickens.

Many prefixes were used. The Celtic "Mac" or "M" of the Scotch; "Mc" of the Irish; "Map," "Ap," or "P" of the Welsh, and the Norman "Fitz" (Latin fils), signify "son" or "son of," and the Irish "O," "grandson of."

A fair knowledge of English nomenclature, declares Miss Payne, gives a fair knowledge of English history, so closely are the two interwoven.

Called the Bluff.

Mrs. X.—Yes, I tried to make my husband economize in smoking, so I told him if he ever smoked I would never speak to him again. Mrs. Y.—What was the result? Mrs. X.—His cigar bill was doubled the next month.

There can be no friendship without virtue, for that intimacy which among good men is called friendship becomes faction when it subsists among the unprincipled.—Sallust.

Queer Salt.

In Lapland they have no salt, and the bark of the fir tree is used as a substitute. The Lapps peel the bark from the trunk of the tree, carefully remove the epidermis and then divide the inner bark into quite a number of very thin layers. During the brief but extremely hot Lapland summer the layers are exposed to the sun until thoroughly dried; then they are torn into narrow strips and placed in boxes made of fresh bark taken from other trees. Deep holes are then dug in the sand, and the bark boxes are buried in them, where they are allowed to remain for about three days. The second day fires are made over places where the boxes are buried and kept burning briskly for several hours. The heat penetrates deep into the sand, turns the fir bark a deep red color and gives to it a pleasing taste and odor. Finally the boxes are unearthed, the fir strips are pounded or ground into a coarse powder, and the Lapps use it just as we do salt, only much more sparingly, because it is so troublesome to prepare.

Got Haydn Interested.

Sir Joshua Reynolds was once commissioned to paint a portrait of Haydn, the celebrated composer. Haydn went to the residence of the painter and gave him a sitting, but soon grew tired. Sir Joshua would not paint a man of such genius with a stupid countenance and adjourned the sitting. The same weariness and want of expression occurring at the next attempt, Sir Joshua communicated the circumstance to the commissioning prince, who contrived a stratagem. He sent to the painter's house a pretty German girl in the service of the queen. Haydn took his seat for the third time, and as soon as the conversation began to lag a curtain rose, and the fair German addressed him in his native tongue with a compliment. Haydn, delighted, overwhelmed the enchantress with questions, his countenance recovered its animation, and Sir Joshua rapidly and successfully seized its traits.

Swiss Funeral Customs.

The funeral customs among some of the Swiss are most peculiar. At the death of a person the family inserts a formal black edged announcement in the papers asking for sympathy and stating that "the mourning urn" will be exhibited certain hours on a special day. In front of the house where the person died there is placed a little black table, covered with a black cloth, on which stands a black jar. Into this the friends and acquaintances of the family drop little black margined visiting cards, sometimes with a few words of sympathy on them. The urn is put out on the table on the day of the funeral. No one except men ever goes to the churchyard, and they generally follow the hearse on foot, though sometimes carriages are used. The horses that draw the hearse have long black cloaks on, with places cut out for them to see through.

To Ascertain Your Brain Power.

Do you possess well formed and evenly balanced features? This is the rule; judge for yourself: The height of your forehead, from your hair to the line of your brow, should be the same as the length of your nose, and both should be commensurate with the depth from the base of your nose to the extremity of your chin, so making three equal divisions. Have you an excess or deficiency of brain power? This question you may answer to your own satisfaction by contrasting the bulk of your head visible above or below a line drawn horizontally through the center of each eye and which normally divides the head into two equal parts.

A Noted Talker.

Dismal stories used to be told of Lady Hester Stanhope's portentous power of talk. "I," said her hapless doctor, "have sat listening for eight, ten—nay, twelve or thirteen—hours at a time!" Mr. Way remained from 3 o'clock one afternoon till dawn next morning tete-a-tete with her, and Lady Hester once kept Mr. N. so long in discourse that he fainted away. No wonder Mr. N. soon expressed a wish to return to Europe.—London Standard.

Terrible Malady.

"Isn't it ridiculous of these scientists to say kissing is dangerous?" scornfully remarked the pretty young man.

"Why, of course, it's dangerous," replied the crabbed old bachelor.

"What disease could it possibly lead to if we"—

"Matrimony."

Clever Youngster.

Mamma—Now, look here, Tommy, didn't I give you a penny yesterday to be good? Tommy—Yes, ma, and I'm trying to be as bad as I can today just to let you see that you got a good pennyworth yesterday.

It Was Worth the Five.

A rich heiress once said complacently to a very beautiful but poor girl, "I had five offers of marriage last week."

"You are more fortunate than I," said the pretty girl; "I only got declarations of love."

To the Crack of Doom.

The Colonel—I fancy your wife lost her temper today. Smith—Not a bit of it. She has an inexhaustible supply.

An Expensive Complaint.

Howell—What is your wife's trouble? Powell—Cataract. She wants me to take her to Niagara falls.

Conjugal Felicities.

FARM AND FIRESIDE

Useful Hints Which Will be Appreciated by the Progressive Farmer and His Housekeeper.

BOUGHT KING EDWARD'S BULL.

Mr. James Yule, manager of Sir William Van Horne's Northwest farm, has just returned from a trip to Britain, where he went to purchase pedigree animals for his employer. He purchased a bull from King Edward's stock, paying $1,000 for the animal, and for a bull purchased from a private party he gave $8,000. He offered $15,000 for a Shorthorn bull from a famous Wiltshire herd, but the owner refused to sell at any price at first, believing that he would take first prize at the Royal Agricultural show in Great Britain next summer. Eventually he offered to part with the animal for $10,000, but Mr. Yule did not purchase. Mr. Yule has purchased from Ontario cattlemen for Sir William several valuable pedigree cattle. In one case he offered $4,000 for a cow and her calf, but the farmer would not sell for less than $6,000.

AGRICULTURAL.

Work at The Barn.

Spring dairying should now be in active operation and with it comes increased care and work. Attention to the cows, the feeding and care of the spring calves and pigs, along with the other necessary work, will fully occupy the time. The season for full returns from the dairy is at hand and the most should be made of it.

The butter market remains in very good condition and the dairyman should seek to make the most from his herd. There should be added a proper allowance of grain with the fodder and of the kind that experience has proved to be the best for the purpose.

The stables should be kept well ventilated and free from objectionable odors. The manure should be drawn often and spread upon the fields, as this will save much work by and by when other work is pressing.

Strive for the Best Results.

Farmers and dairymen should carefully study the weekly market reports, noting the great difference there usually is in the prices of the different grades of butter. The best quality commands the highest price, and there is always a good demand. The inferior grades, all along down, may be in poor demand or not wanted at all, as the case may be, but there is always a place and at least a fair demand for the best. This should be an inducement to dairymen to do the best possible. If the butter is made on the farm, the aim should be to produce a superior article. If the milk or cream goes to a creamery it should be in the best condition, as the quality of the product at the creamery will depend in great measure on the condition of the milk or cream when delivered. The dairyman can assist very materially in this matter, and he should patronize those creameries that are altogether up-to-date in the quality of their products and prices paid.

In some parts competition prevails among creameries to secure the largest possible patronage that farmers are likely to get very satisfactory prices, while from this cause in some places those making their own butter have to do it at a small profit.

Turning Stock to Pasture.

The fences should be put in repair as early as possible, so that when the time comes the animals can be turned to pasture. But this should not be done until the ground becomes sufficiently dry and firm. If there is a dry field where the cows can be turned for a time during the day when the weather is suitable, they will greatly enjoy being out and it will do them good, but not much more than this should be expected or allowed until the season is more advanced. Toward the last of the month in favored localities the young stock, perhaps, may be turned to pasture. Animals should never be allowed to run on the meadows in spring, if at any time of year.

The Mowing Fields.

Where manure was spread on grass land last fall or during the winter, it should be thoroughly pulverized this spring. And the sooner this work is done the better it will be, as the spring rains will then have a chance to act the most favorably on it, driving the fertilizing element down among the roots of the grasses where most needed.

Where much manure is applied to the grass fields, the spreaders made for the purpose will do the work in the most satisfactory manner, but where there are not in use then other methods should be employed. A smoothing harrow, the corn weeder or clod crusher will do good work, or a brush harrow can be made fine, distributed evenly and well pressed down about the grass roots.

If concentrated fertilizers are to be applied this should be done early. These will need the early rains to render them soluble, and when rightly applied their effects will soon become visible and often produce the best of results. Try a grass fertilizer on a small scale and see.

If in last year's seeding there are spots where the seeds did not grow or were killed during the winter, more seed should be sown and as early as possible.

It may be a little too soon to determine in what condition the grass fields have come through the winter, but a few weeks will decide. The winter was a most singular one, and it is feared that its effects may be bad in unfavorable localities where the ground was long bare or covered with ice. On this account it may be necessary for some farmers to change their plans somewhat in order to get the best crops from their lands. lands.

Early Sowing and Planting.

When conditions are right, the soil and the weather sufficiently warm, early seeding is usually the best, and there is nothing gained in putting seed into the ground when it is wet and cold. The soil should be put in the best condition mechanically for the reception of the seed, and then the sowing or planting can be performed in a satisfactory manner. It is probable that by the last of the month potatoes may be planted and oats and barley sown.

Moving Trees and Shrubs.

Take advantage of the first fine day when the soil is in good order. All deciduous trees and shrubs may now be moved safely. It is well to remember the following points in connection with tree moving. Have the trees taken up with plenty of roots; trim off the ends of all broken roots with a sharp knife. Use a little judgment in pruning the top; thinning out the branches is preferable to cutting them back too severely. Never leave the roots exposed to the sun and air; they should be taken out of the ground and planted at once. Dig the hole large enough so that you will be able to lay the roots out straight without cramping. Shake the soil well among the roots. Never put manure directly on to the roots. Don't be afraid to tread the soil firm around the roots; you cannot tread the soil too hard with your feet. All small trees and shrubs may be trodden down with the feet, but use pounders for large trees. Stake immediately after planting all those that are likely to require support.

Plow and harrow the orchard lot this month; finish the pruning and most of the grafting. Cut all scions before buds start.

The Brooder Chicks.

Now that artificial incubation has improved so much that poultry keepers can with some safety count on their chickens before they are hatched, it is fortunate that artificial brooders have also been improved and cheapened. Chicken raising in inclement spring weather, is not the business it was some years ago, and death rates are decidedly lower among the big breeders. But even with the best of brooders it is very easy to lose not a few of the youngsters that go from the drying box into the foster mother strong and healthy to all appearances.

Baby chicks are extremely susceptible to chills, and many mysterious deaths are due to this cause. They should be moved very carefully out of the drying box, well covered with flannel, and placed in the brooder, the heat of the latter should not exceed 90 degrees, many more chickens are killed by too much heat than by too little—80 degrees is a high enough temperature for chicks a week old, and 70 degrees at three weeks. A little experience soon enables the poultry keeper to dispense with a thermometer. Whether chickens in brooders are reared on wet food or dry, the chief thing is to keep them active; they have no hen mother to call them and make them run about, and if the weather is winterish are liable to eat and sleep too much, which is bad for them; when every bit of their food has to be sought for they have to run about, and this keeps them in health.

Probably this is the chief reason why dry feeding and nothing else has been found so successful; when soft food is much fed it is very difficult to prevent the chickens occasionally gorging themselves, though by feeding very frequently, and a little at a time, the danger can be avoided. Always presuming that the chicks are in a weather-proof brooder, sufficiently ventilated and provided with a reliable lamp, there is no reason why they should not do well if the feeding is carefully seen after, and they have grit and green food, and plenty of chaff at the floor of the rearer; failing the latter, they get cramped toes. The brooder should stand in a sheltered spot with its back to the prevailing winds, and on short grass, and on fine days the door should always be open so that the chicks can run in and out.

One great advantage of an incubator is that the chickens start in life free from lice, but it is extraordinary how quickly they get infested if a few chickens that have lice get among them; this should be guarded against. It need hardly be said that strict cleanliness is very necessary. The brooder should be cleaned out every day; there should be no smell in the sleeping chamber, and only clean water procurable by the chickens. Fifty is the largest number that should be run together, and a one hundred chick brooder—that is to say, what manufacturers sell to hold one hundred chickens—is none too big for them; they grow, one must remember, and at three weeks old are double the size they were when hatched.

Apiary.

Bees naturally store pollen at the side of the brood nest, in the coolest part of the hive, and the honey above the brood. Bees will often winter kill, and have plenty of honey left in the hive; but it is away from the cluster, and during a continuous spell of cold weather, bees will rather starve than venture to leave the cluster in search of food. A thorough airing of the cellar is a good thing at any time, for you cannot expect bees to hive in good health if the air is foul. Bees wintered on honey dew will fare badly. The frames get badly spotted, and the hives become foul. It frequently happens that three-fourths of the bees die when wintered on this stuff. How to detect honey dew in the hives is hard to describe. It is usually dark in color, roiley in appearance, has a rank smell and generally a very disagreeable taste. Some localities are given to an abundance of it every few years. It is usually secreted on the leaves of oak and other forest trees. It is thought that the hives contain much of it. It will be a good plan, at the approach of winter, to take away some of the centre combs from each colony, extract it, and replace the empty comb, and feed the bees sugar syrup. Honey dew will not prove detrimental to the bees in the breeding season, when allowed to fly forth from the hive each day, but, on the other hand, will prove to be poison to them when obliged to endure a winter's confinement. At the time a prime swarm issues there is nothing more than sealed queen cells left in the old hive and the young queen may be laying during ten or fifteen days. But do not go to clipping wings until you find eggs present and are sure the queen is all right. A queen whose bees cap the honey so it has a watery appearance should be superseded by one whose bees cap the honey white. If the queen is otherwise desirable, better give her colony an extracting "story," and furnish the one possessing superior comb-honey traits with a super of sections.

If bees work on a dozen different kinds of flowers on the same day, you may find all the kinds of honey in one cell, but in actual practice you will find only one kind of honey in the same cell, for bees are likely to work on clover alone, or else on linden or some other of the chief sources.

DAIRY DEPARTMENT.

Stripping.

The practice of stripping a cow between finger and thumb is a bad one. The cow to do her best should be milked rapidly and completely. The practice of nearly milking a cow, and then changing off to one hand, and stripping about, is objectionable and the cow soon gets to like the stripping business and gives down her milk accordingly. The going back and milking the cow a second time is fully as bad, and she soon is at a loss to know at which time the milk is wanted, and the result is she quickly enters the non-paying class. Sit down to the cow and go resolutely to work, milk fast, and until she is milked out clean, and then stop. When milking, do so with a uniform and steady motion, and do not jerk and pull as if streams of milk were shoe laces.

DOMESTIC HINTS.

Bread Pudding.

Use two cups of stale bread crumbed, two cups of milk, one cup flour, one cup sugar, one cup raisins, a tablespoonful of melted butter, three eggs, two small teaspoonfuls baking powder and a half teaspoonful each of common allspice and cloves. Boil for two hours in a well buttered mould. Serve with meringue and drops of currant jelly on top.

After you have tried hot springs, sulphur baths, patent medicines, electricity, etc., bring your case to the Supreme Court of Rheumatism — Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. This is a powerful, penetrating oil, which as its name implies, acts directly on the bone or joint—the lodging seat of rheumatism. If you are troubled with rheumatism, sciatica, lame back or kindred troubles and have not been able to get anything to help you don't get discouraged and make up your mind that nothing can cure you until you have tried Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. It has cured hundreds of cases just as bad as yours. H. S. Brown, of Merrickville, Ont., writes as follows:—

THE SUPREME COURT.

Dear Sirs,—I am free from rheumatism to-day because I used Tuck's Bone Oil. I had rheumatism in my hands and feet and thought at one time that my life was going to be ruined by it. I consulted a doctor and tried various remedies, but while some of them that I took internally made me feel better for a time, none of them took the pain away. After I had suffered for six months or more, doctoring all the time, I was advised one day to try Tuck's Rheumatic Bone Oil. I did and I never can be thankful enough to the man who told me to get it. I had not used a bottle until I was better and before the second one was done my joints were loosened up, the pain was gone and I was well. Tuck's Bone Oil did it. That was six years ago and I have not been bothered since.

H. S. BROWN,
Merrickville.

For all inflammation arising not only from rheumatism, but from colds, croup, bronchitis, quinsy, &c., Tuck's Bone Oil is a sure and speedy cure. Sold by all medicine dealers at 50c a bottle or sent by mail prepaid by the Tuck Bone Oil Co., Limited, Smith's Falls, Ontario.

DISCRIMINATING LADIES.

Enjoy Using Herpicide on Account of Its Distinctiveness.

The ladies who have used Newbro's Herpicide speak of it in the highest terms, for its quick effect in cleansing the scalp of dandruff and also for its excellence as a general hair-dressing. It makes the scalp feel fresh and it allays that itching which dandruff will cause. Newbro's Herpicide effectively cures dandruff, as it destroys the germ that causes it. The same germ causes it. The same germ causes hair to fall out, and later baldness; in killing it, Herpicide stops falling hair and prevents baldness. It is also an ideal hair dressing, for it lends an aristocratic charm to the hair that is quite distinctive. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

Sweet Potato Fritters.

A pint of hot mashed sweet potatoes, two eggs, a cupful of flour, into which has been sifted a teaspoonful of baking powder, salt and enough milk to make a batter. Drop the batter, a tablespoonfoul at a time, in deep fat, smoking hot, and cook to a light brown. Tomato sauce may be served with the fritters.

Macaroni and Eggs.

Cook macaroni until tender and place in a small baking dish. Beat together two eggs and half a cupful of milk, add salt and pepper and pour over the macaroni. Bake in the oven until the top is nicely browned.

Carrot Soup.

Scrape and cut into small pieces six carrots add an onion, sliced, two or three stalks of celery, and a leaf of parsley. Cover with boiling water and cook until the carrots can be rubbed through a sieve. Add a pint of hot milk and thicken with a tablespoonful each of flour and butter creamed together. Season with salt and red pepper and the least bit of nutmeg. Serve over cubes of fried bread and dash paprika over all just before sending to the table.

Potato Omelet.

Mince a small onion, fry it brown in a tablespoonful of butter, turn in a cupful of hashed cold boiled potatoes and fry until they are brown. Make a plain omelet, and before folding sprinkle the potatoes over it.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

Good macaroni is of a yellowish tint and does not break readily in cooking.

Newspapers placed under carpets and rugs are most satisfactory, and by using a long stitch they may be sewn together on the machine, making squares as large as may be required.

Turpentine is the best preventive for moths. Saturate pieces of brown paper with same, and place in boxes.

Tea is one of the foods which it will not do to keep in a glass fruit jar. Tea loses its strength in strong light and probably deteriorates in a weak light.

A handkerchief wet with eau de cologne and held under the eyes will help to remove the dark lines that are caused by fatigue.

A strengthening drink for the aged is made by boiling a teaspoonful of pure honey in half a pint of water.

Ink spots may be taken out of delicate white goods with chlorinated soda. A few drops poured on will make the ink disappear at once. It should not be used on silk, however.

Delicious mustard is made by first slicing an onion in a bowl and covering it with vinegar. Let this stand forty-eight hours, then pour off the vinegar into another bowl, add a little red pepper, salt, sugar, and enough dry mustard to thicken to a cream. The proportions should be a teaspoonful of the papper and salt and twice that of sugar, but tastes differ somewhat as to the quantity of sweet used.

The easiest way to sprinkle clothes is to use a clean whisk broom that should be kept for the purpose.

THE HORSE.

To train a horse thoroughly to drive without bit or line under the whip, requires from four to six weeks' time; it requires also a man of strong nerve and self-control.

An enclosure twenty-five or thirty feet square is required. If you have it smaller, and your horse should be disposed to kick, you will be in danger. If larger, it gives the animal too much room to get away from the whip. It is better that you go in with the horse alone, as then the animal will have no other object to take his attention.

Turn him loose without bridle or halter in the enclosure. Take your position in the centre, holding in your right hand a straight whip nine or ten feet long. You crack the whip as you take your position. This alarms the horse and causes him to run into one corner of the enclosure. Crack the whip several times that he may learn that you do not intend to hurt him. Now commence tapping him lightly upon the near shoulder, but do not hurt him. If a nervy fellow, he is all excitement for a few minutes; continue the tapping until he turns his head towards you, which he will do in a short time. The moment he turns it, however slight it may be, cease the whipping. As soon as he turns it away again, repeat the tapping with the whip. In a few minutes he again turns his head towards you. Stop the motion of the whip. As he turns away repeat the whip tapping as before. In a very short time he turns around so that you can approach him. Now gently caress him, move away, and again approach him. Should he turn away repeat the whipping. By this means you teach him to come to you on the near side.

After he has learned this thoroughly, which requires about one week's training, half an hour each day, then proceed in the same manner upon the off side. As soon as he obeys the motion of the whip upon this side, take your position behind him, and turn him by the motion of the whip, to the right or to the left. As soon as he performs nicely, put the harness upon him, take the lines behind him, and, as you give him the word to go forward, throw the whip down by his right side without touching him. At the same time have the long web around the near fore foot, and give it to an assistant; you want him to stop, give him the word "whoa!" At the same time your assistant pulls up the foot, turn the whip in a horizontal position above your head. In this way you teach him that the whip in that position means "whoa."

By repeating these motions, he learns in about four weeks to turn to the right whenever the whip is thrown towards the right shoulder, to the left when thrown towards the left shoulder, to go ahead when thrown down by the right side; and to stop when held in a horizontal position. You now want to teach him to back. Having previously instructed him according to our rule, put the cord, using the small loop, in his mouth. Take the cord in your hand with the reins; pull upon the reins, and say "back" at the same time keeping the whip directly over the animal's back, giving it an upward and downward motion, or you may tap him gently upon the back with the whip—this is best done in a sulky. If he starts forward, set him back by pulling quickly upon the cord. Repeat the operation until he will go back by the motion of the whip alone. Should he make repeated efforts to go forward, bring the whip once or twice down over his nose, he will not then repeat the operation very often. With this training, it is necessary to use an open bridle, so that the animal will see the motions of the whip.

You are now prepared to hook him up for the first drive.

Take an assistant with you. Have the footstrap or long web secured upon the near fore foot. Get it in charge of your assistant; let the lines lie over the dash as a matter of precaution. Now commence operations with the whip. If the animal acts promptly remove the foot web, and begin again, having the lines over the dash as before. Drive the animal in this way at least two or three weeks before removing the bit from the mouth. Your horse is now safe to drive under the whip.

Of course it is better to use this method of whip training with young horses, and those which are naturally docile and obedient; but there are few horses so disobedient that they may not be thus controlled at any age.—W. Stinson, in American Cultivator.

BREEDERS' NOTES.

Linseed meal can be fed in small quantities to horses and colts with the greatest benefit just before and during the time that the animals are shedding their coats in the spring.

All through the Canadian Northwest there is a big demand for horses of all kinds and shipments which have already been received from outside points have found a ready sale, in fact, many of the carloads were sold before they were unloaded. Two cars of farm horses arrived at Virden recently and were sold within an hour after their arrival, the lowest price being $400 per team. Several fancy drivers have been brought up from eastern Canada recently and were quickly sold, in fact, a number of people are anxious to secure light horses and are waiting the next carload with interest.

This brings us up to where the colt becomes a horse. Now, what are you going to do with him? Begin carefully, slowly and patiently to educate him to work. Don't crowd him. Don't try to teach him more than one thing at a time. Don't expect him to understand too much at the start. Don't get careless with him; don't abuse him, and don't trust him too far. And if he is at all likely don't sell him until he is thoroughly educated, so that you may know his real value.

Itching Piles

If you are acquainted with anyone who is troubled with this distressing ailment, you can do him no greater favor than to tell him to try Chamberlain's Salve. It gives instant relief. his salve also cures sore nipples, tetter and salt rheum. Price 25 cents. To be had at R. Templeton's drug store.

Dead as a Doornail.

"As dead as a doornail" at first seems utterly senseless, but becomes lively and picturesque when we remember that knockers were once universally used. Beneath the knocker, in order to prevent disfiguring the door, a large nail or bolt was driven. An impatient caller, waiting for the door to be opened, would frequently use the knocker with great force, and the irresponsiveness of the nail gave rise to this expression.

Not Uncanny.

'Arry—I've brought yer a ring, 'Arriet. Ain't it a beauty? 'Arriet—Why, it's a opal, 'Arry, and opals is awful onlucky, so they sez. 'Arry—You needn't worry yerself over that, cos it ain't a real un.—London Express.

PAPER TREES.

Work For Little Girls Who Make Doll Houses Out of Boxes.

Many girls enjoy making paper dolls' houses out of boxes, and so we will tell you how to make cunning trees, to have your house in a nice shady grove. Fold in two, lengthwise, a piece of green paper about four inches wide and fourteen inches long. Cut this paper very regularly through the fold as shown in Fig. 1, making a sort of paper comb.

Then roll the band between the thumb and finger, as in Fig. 2, until the cut paper forms a large mass. When it is as tight as it will go, fasten together the tube part with a little paste and make the paper puff out by running the finger between each strip or paper ring. Stick the tube in the end of a flat mustard cork in which a hole has been cut, or you can use a large spool.

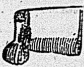

FIG. 2

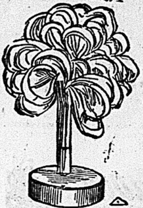
FIG. 1



THE PAPER TREE.

Paint the tube brown for the trunk of the tree, and, if you like, you can color the cork to make it look like one of the great standards in which evergreen trees are now often set.

By making the paper larger or smaller you can have big trees or tiny saplings.—Exchange.

Our Funny First Engines.

If our modern railway engines had the same power to laugh that they have to scream they might, as you children say, "nearly die" laughing over the way our first railway engines looked. Little, queerly shaped, puny things they were. The "Stourbridge Lion" didn't weigh one twenty-fifth part of the weight of an engine of today, and it looked as if people might well hesitate about risking their lives behind it. It was first used at Honesdale, in Pennsylvania, and it ran on wooden rails with a thin layer of iron on them. People gathered from near and from far that 8th of August, in the year 1829, when the little British lion of iron and steel was to make its first run. The wiseacres shook their heads and prophesied all sorts of probable disasters, and people said that "nothing on earth" could tempt them to ride across the bridge spanning the Lackawaxen river on "that thing." But the little lion went safely over the bridge and over the eight or nine miles of track, which was the entire length of this line of railroad.—St. Nicholas.

How to Catch a Rabbit.

A Lewiston man relates: "When I was a small boy somebody told me that if I saw a rabbit and shouted loud, running straight at him meanwhile, he would stand still and let me catch him. Not long afterward, while driving with my father one day, I spied a rabbit in the road ahead. Like a flash I was out of the wagon and, yelling at the top of my lungs, made for him. The creature actually stood stock still. I picked him up, took him home, built a hutch for him and had him for a playmate for a year or more."—Lewiston Journal.

Your P's and Q's.

All little girls and little boys
Should mind their P's and Q's,
Or else so many, many things
Of value they will lose.
For, while P stands for prompt and please
And prettiness and plays
And patience and politeness and
Propriety and praise,
It also stands for pinch and pry
And plague and pester; you
Will see it heads perversity
And pert and painful too.
Then, as for Q, it stands for quick
And quietness and queen,
Delicious quince and quarts and quill
And Quaker so serene,
Yet still it's at the head of quail
And quarrel, quip and quack
And quicksand, quinsy, quis and quake
And querulous, alack!

FACE CREAMS.

The Dangers That Sometimes Lurk in These Beautifiers.

"If women knew the danger that lurks in stale face creams they would exercise more caution in the use of these complexion aids," said a druggist. "People who would not think of employing rancid oil or stale fats of any kind singly as an application seem to lose all fear of the same elements when they have been melted together in the form of a toilet preparation.

"A cream, salve or ointment containing various oils and greases is allowed to remain on the dressing table for a space varying all the way from two months to a year to be applied at irregular intervals. Of course the temperature of the average house is not low enough to keep the preparation long fresh in winter, while in summer it will become unfit for use in a few hours.

"You know what a disagreeable flavor table oil takes on when kept long in a warm room or closet.

"Actual cases of face cream poisoning are by no means rare. The skin absorbs the rancid stuff, with all its germs, and the latter pass slowly but surely into the blood. If there happens to be an abrasion of the skin where the stale cream is applied bad results are much more rapidly developed. The proper place for all such preparations is the refrigerator or other cool spot where perishable provisions are kept. —New York Press.

SERVE MORE CURRANTS.

They Are Said to Contain More Nutriment Than Lean Beef.

Only a few years ago nobody knew that there was any food value to the little dried so called Greek currants. Since then food chemists have demonstrated that there is far more nutrition in them than in lean beef. Sir Francis Laking, physician to King Edward, says that nutrition in white bread is greatly increased by them and that thirty parts of currants should be added to seventy parts of dough. To add them to bread, wash, dry well and mix with the flour after sifting it with salt. They also make a good winter substitute in all bread and batter recipes that call for fresh huckleberries. The best variety to get are the Zanti currants, which come from the island of Zanti. They are really not currants, but are a small variety of seedless grape.

To use them with sour cream salt a cup of sour cream. Put in a little less than you believe to be just enough soda to neutralize the acid. Beat it until foamy. Sift a pint of flour with one cup of sugar and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Add one cup of dried currants or fresh blueberries and bake as muffins.—Exchange.

DRESS HINTS.

To take care of silk dresses properly they should never be brushed, but rubbed with a soft piece of merino.

White gloves cleaned promptly after each wearing will last indefinitely. If the stains are allowed to dry on they become permanent.

Blue linings for the bureau drawers or shirt waist boxes in which you keep your prettiest blouses keep them more daintily white.

Common seashore sand will greatly improve the appearance of old velvet and remove all the dust. Sprinkle the velvet well with the fine sand and then brush until none remains, always brushing the pile the wrong way.

A bit of that canvas or, better still, a bit of stiff buckram will repair the worst ravages of a hatpin. Slip it under the torn place and take a few strong stitches to keep it firmly set and then adjust the trimming to cover it.

Corsets and Comfort.

When a woman has to remove her corset to rest, something is the matter with it. There is a pinching that makes forgetfulness impossible, and when I find a woman addicted to the habit of removing her stays when safely intrenched within her chamber I know her for a victim of fashion. She is much more common than you may know. I never understood how anybody could find life endurable when every day held a measure of torture, fully known and appreciated at its real value beforehand. I am not an exponent of ugliness, but I dare believe that it is possible to combine comfort and grace with the happiest results. I have seen it done, I am sure.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

The Scalp.

The cleaning of the scalp should be very carefully and tenderly performed. It is best to use warm water with a mild soap, rubbing in gently and with the ends of the fingers, then rinsing with tepid water. Drying should be done by gently pressing the hair and scalp with a very dry towel, continuing until thoroughly dry. Fanning is another safe process. If any application is necessary to bring hair thus dried into shape, dampen with a solution of bichloride of mercury. Stiff brushes are especially injurious to the tender scalp, causing the hair to break and irritating the delicate skin covering of the head.

Little Red Spots.

If you see a tiny spot, bright red, that persists during many months and gets slightly larger, make up your mind to have it destroyed. If let alone it will enlarge and become a great blemish. Any surgeon can, by the use of caustics or electrolysis, remove the spot in a few minutes. These things are called "naevi," and they are made up of dilated capillaries, neither arteries nor veins, but the tiny vessels that unite the two.

A HORSE MISSING FROM DESERONTO.

ALLEGED INDIAN DOCTOR, WHO HAS BEEN HERE, BELIEVED TO HAVE STOLEN IT.

Brockville Times: Saturday noon Chief Burke was called up over the long distance telephone by Thomas Gault, liveryman of Deseronto, asking him to be on the look-out for a man giving the name of Prof. Seymour, travelling as an Indian doctor, who he wanted arrested on a charge of horse-stealing. Chief Burke was requested to notify liverymen and hotel-keepers with a view of locating the alleged thief and outfit.

Gault states that on Friday Seymour hired from him a horse and buggy to drive west of Deseronto, some ten or twelve miles, promising to return not later than Saturday. Soon after leaving Gault learned that the stranger had started east and at once took up the chase. He was tracked to Kingston and when the police there got wind of the affair Seymour had just fed the horse and put out for Gananoque and Brockville. He passed safely through the former place without being detected and reaching Brockville 5.30 Saturday afternoon made his headquarters at the Windsor Hotel, Perth street. He ordered the animal to the barn, took supper and went out. Returning about 8.30 he remained for a few minutes, then left again and from that time no trace of the stranger can be found, notwithstanding a vigilant search of the town by the police.

The officials were not definitely aware of Seymour's presence here until yesterday morning when the horse and buggy were identified in the Windsor hotel yards by Constable Jackson who dropped into the premises after disposing of a dog in the west end. About 11 o'clock Saturday night Sergt. Burns was stopped opposite the hotel and told of the arrival of a stranger with a horse and buggy but the barn being locked the officer could not get a look at the horse.

Chief Burke notified Mr. Gault of the finding of the stolen outfit and he immediately came to Brockville and identified it as belonging to him. A strange feature of the case is that the harness was removed from the stable Saturday evening and was not missed until after Seymour had departed. Mr. Gault shipped the horse and buggy back to Deseronto to-day. The animal appeared to be none the worse of its long drive of 80 miles.

HOUSE BURNED ON COMMERCIAL ST.

DWELLING OF MR. WM. CARNRITE DESTROYED BY FIRE LAST NIGHT.

Shortly after midnight last night a roughcast house, situated on West Dundas street, near Commercial street, was completely destroyed by fire. The building was occupied by Mr. Wm. Carnrite and family. Mr. Carnrite informed a representative of The Intelligencer that about midnight Mrs. Carnrite was awakened by smoke, which filled the bedroom. The family arose and had to leave the premises hurriedly. The fire appeared to have originated about the chimney and had gained considerable headway when discovered. Nothing of value was saved. When the brigade reached the scene the house was already doomed to destruction. Mr. Carnrite estimates his loss as over $1000. He had an insurance upon the contents of $800, in the Economical. The building was the property of a Mrs. Denike, who resides in Sidney. We were unable to ascertain what insurance, if any, there was.

Murder Attempted Near Campbellford

UNSUSPECTING FARMER WAS STRUCK WITH A CLUB AND THROWN INTO A CREEK TO DROWN — BELIEVED TO HAVE BEEN THE WORK OF TRAMPS.

One of the most villainous attempts to murder, in the history of the Midland district was made on Friday night upon Mr. Dewitt Stotts, a resident of Meyersberg, a small village a few miles beyond Campbellford.

Mr. Stotts, who is a farmer near Meyersberg, says the Peterboro Examiner, left his home on the evening of the attempted crime to go to the post office and store of the village for a gallon of coal oil and some tobacco. On his return home and a short distance from the post office he was met by two men, one of whom went to one side and one to the other of the road. Mr. Stotts said good evening to them to which salute they answered by a low mumbling sound. In passing he was struck on the head by something solid and that was the last he remembered until he regained consciousness a short time afterwards in the middle of a creek. He managed with a great deal of difficulty to crawl out and returned home about 8.30 with his face completely covered with blood and his clothes soaked in blood and water. Upon examination it was found he had been struck in four places, behind each ear and on the top and rear of the head, and apparently by a dull club. All his pockets had been searched, and the linings were left turned out. Mr. Stotts, however, had no money on him at the time. He took thirty-five cents with him this was expended in buying the coal oil and tobacco. There is some doubt, however, whether the criminals were merely in search of money as the circumstances above strongly indicate their intention was to murder the unfortunate man.

The Examiner learned the above story on Saturday night from a Peterborough man who at the time was in Meyersberg visiting his uncle. He together with a number of others visited the scene of the attempted crime on Saturday morning and discovered the spot on the road where Stott had fallen and near by were found the coal oil can, his hat, the tobacco, and a glove. Spots of blood were traced in one direction about ten feet as if he had been carried that distance by the highwaymen and then upon second thought they turned towards the creek. The blood stains in the road were followed to the brink of the water where Stott had been thrown in to drown. Although the creek was not deep yet there was sufficient water in it to easily cover a person's head were he lying down. Mr. Stotts must have awakened soon after touching the cool water, considering the time he arrived home, as he did not leave the store until about 8 o'clock.

As to the perpetrators of the dastardly deed nothing definite had been learned on Saturday night. Two suspicious characters were seen by the gentleman who informed the Examiner of the crime. He, together with another man had driven from Campbellford that night. He got out of the vehicle and went down to the post office for his mail while the other waited. Both going and coming he saw two strangers who walked quite closely to him apparently to discover if he were the person they were after. In the dusky light he could only see in passing that one was quite tall and not very stout, and dressed, he considered, in a dark grey suit; he had no beard, at least none was visible in the dull light. The other was short and appeared to him to be only a boy. Another resident of Meyersberg, Augustus Bertrand, and a young lady passed along the same road shortly before, but did not see the strangers who evidently were then in hiding and knew from their concealment that neither of these was the one they were in search of.

As far as is known no others in the neighborhood saw the suspicious persons who in all probability have made their escape from the vicinity.

Mr. Stott was on Saturday afternoon still conscious and regaining strength. He is a man about 40 years of age and recently moved to Meyersberg from Norham. He is a much respected and successful farmer and is very much puzzled by the character of the assault upon him.

An investigation will at once be made by the authorities of Northumberland county and the daring bandits, who so brazenly attempted the murder of the unsuspecting man, will be diligently searched for, and if found, made to answer for their villainous work.

MANY DESERTING FROM KINGSTON.

DESERTIONS FROM BATTERY MORE NUMEROUS THIS SPRING THAN EVER BEFORE.

Kingston Whig: One of the battery sergeants declared, to-day, that there had been more desertions this year than any previous year in his memory. "It is easy money for any of the men to desert," he continued, "as little or no search is put up for them, unless some enemy peeps to the officers, or by accident they just happen to be stumbled upon. I have known of cases where deserters have remained in town several days merely changing to civilian clothes." He said he could not understand what prompted many of the men to desert and return in the fall when they knew they would have to spend a month or two in the toils. He remarked that it was a common occurrence among the English batterymen to save sufficient cash, take the first boat in the spring across to the United States and return to the old country in the fall when they would again come to Canada for the harvest season.

A Dangerous Practise

The Port Hope Guide thus condemns the habit among boys of jumping on moving trains, a practice by no means unknown in this city: "Yesterday's sad accident, by which a young life was blotted out, was the result of that dangerous practice of jumping on moving trains. Any Sunday afternoon crowds of young boys may be seen engaged in this same work, and it is miraculous that more accidents similar to yesterday's have not occurred. Nothing, however, seems to be a warning, and we are told that even last night a large number "bumped" their way to Cobourg. It might be well for some of the Grand Trunk railway officers to pay a visit to this overhead bridge and take the boys in hand who persist in this practice. Loss of life does not appear to serve as a warning, but probably a short term of imprisonment would have the desired effect."

THE DOG CASE.

The case of Robert Bennett, who is accused of keeping in his possession a dog the property of Mrs. Craddock, was called again this morning. As from the evidence adduced it seems clear that the dog is the property of Mrs. Craddock, the Magistrate ordered the defendant to produce the dog at the police station during to-day.

Port Hope is laying great plans to win the Central baseball championship this year. A catcher from New Brighton, Pa., is already in that town, and other players are expected within the next few weeks.

New York, April 9.—"You can tell the Cincinnati people for me that they did not win a game from me last year, and they won't this year, either. Tell them in Chicago that I will give the Nationals all the trouble they want this year, and if Cleveland asks anything tell that bunch if it should happen to win the American League championship, I will beat it out of the world's championship." So said Christy Matthewson, premier twirler of the New York Giants, the other day. "It is true I was laid up for ten days with diphtheria, but I am in tiptop condition again," he continued. "Owing to lack of work, my arm is not quite as strong as it will be in a week or two, but there is nothing the matter with me, and I anticipate as good a season as I had last year."

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MAY A. BELL MARKS.

It is about seven years since May A. Bell Marks appeared in Belleville, and the crowded house that greeted her last night, despite the rain, proved that she had not been forgotten. She is well supported by Marks Bros.' No. One Company, who presented "Lost in London." May A. Bell Marks, in the dual role of Annie Meadows and Nan, the flower girl, showed herself to be an accomplished actress. She had the support of a capable cast. The play was well staged, the light effects being good and the scenery among the best seen in the opera house in years. The vaudeville is first-class and up-to-date. To-night, "The Banker's Wife." Matinees will be put on Friday and Saturday.

JAPAN OPENING THE DOOR.

But Foreign Travelers Take Risks In Interior of Manchuria.

Washington, April 10.—The following statement was given out yesterday at the Japanese legation:

"Owing to the fact that the withdrawal of the troops from Manchuria not having sufficiently progressed, the Japanese Government hitherto has neither permitted citizens and vessels of foreign countries to enter the ports and regions of Manchuria, nor allowed foreign consuls to proceed to their posts therein. Considerable progress, however, having now been made in this respect, the Japanese Government has decided, in accordance with the principles of the open door and equal opportunity ever advocated by them, to permit citizens and vessels of foreign countries to enter from May 1 at Antunghsien and Tatungkao, and to allow foreign consuls to proceed to their posts at Antunghsien. From June 1 foreign consuls shall be allowed to proceed to their posts at Mukden and the traveling of foreigners in the interior of Manchuria will be permitted in so far as military exigencies do not prevent it. It has further been decided that the Japanese Government will open Dalny (Talienwan) to the commerce of the world in as near future as possible.

"Judging from the present condition of the interior of Manchuria, it is impossible for the Japanese authorities to afford such foreign travelers adequate protection and facilities in housing and other matters. Those, therefore, who enter the interior of Manchuria do so entirely at their own risk, and the Japanese Government do not hold themselves responsible for any injury or damage which may suffer from bandits or other marauders."

Year For Bigamist.

Brantford, April 10.—The case of Jas. McConnell, for bigamy, was heard at the Police Court yesterday. Prisoner pleaded guilty to being married twice. The two women were present in court and gave evidence as to their marriage, and McConnell would not support them. Prisoner was sentenced to one year in the Central Prison.

Railway Wreck Near Buffalo.

Buffalo, N.Y., April 10.—An eastbound passenger train on the Erie Railroad was wrecked ten miles west of here last night. Engineer Wallage Russell of Buffalo was caught beneath his overturned engine and crushed to death. Fireman George Griffith, also of Buffalo, was badly scalded.

Yankee Dealers Responsible.

Ottawa, April 10.—British wheat men are here opposing the lowering of grain grades as suggested in Manitoba. They argue that such action would result in a lot of inferior grain being mixed with grain of good quality, and that Yankee dealers are responsible for the agitation.

The Barometer.

That the barometer should be so important a factor in indicating meteorological conditions is to many an unsolvable mystery. There should, however, be no difficulty in understanding that the simple principle underlying the construction is that the free and unfettered air balances a column of mercury varying in height, according to the circumstances of the moment, whose average elevation at the level of the sea is thirty inches. It is known, because directly ascertainable, that thirty cubic inches of mercury weigh close upon fifteen pounds avoirdupois, and therefore, as commonly expressed, the pressure of the atmosphere is, under normal conditions, fifteen pounds on every square inch—equivalent to nearly a ton on a square foot, more than eight and a half tons on a square yard and of 100 tons on a square of ten and a quarter feet side. Scientific calculation also places the aggregate weight of the atmospheric envelope surrounding the world at about 5,000,000,000,000 of tons, and this may be represented as the weight of a solid leaden ball having a diameter of sixty miles. Such figures are really beyond human comprehension.

Finger Nails.

In the healthy adult the average growth of the finger nails is one thirty-second part of an inch per week. They grow faster in health than in sickness, in summer than in winter, on the right hand than on the left; fastest on the middle finger and slowest on the thumb and little finger. The finger nails are, therefore, all renewed in from 120 to 140 days. The toenails are four times longer in growing than the finger nails.

Some years ago many learned Asiatics let their finger nails grow to such an extent that it was said they often exceeded the length of the fingers, under which they sometimes bent in the strangest curves and folds. Travelers gave the length as three inches and even more. The best authorities give the extreme length to which the finger nails grow as just upon two inches, when they become corrugated and break off.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Operators to Propose New Plan of Arbitration—Soft Coal Miners Win In Western Pennsylvania.

New York, April 10.—At the joint conference of the sub-committees of the anthracite coal mine owners and their employes to be held here to-day, the operators will decline to accept the arbitration plan as presented last week by the mine workers, and will present a counter proposition, which, if agreed to by the miners, will bind each side for more than two years.

The operators have been working on the new plan ever since the adjournment of the joint conference of last Saturday, and the inability of the presidents of the hard coal carrying railroads to complete minor details caused a postponement of 24 hours of the conference scheduled for yesterday.

The operators' representatives conferred yesterday, and promise that unless something unforeseen should occur they will be ready with their answer to the miners arbitration plan today.

President Mitchell announced last night that the last of the bituminous coal operators in the Pittsburg district, who had held out against the 1903 wage agreement, signed the scale yesterday. This action, he said, clears up the Western Pennsylvania territory, and means that 40,000 men in that territory, who produce from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 tons of soft coal a year, will receive an increase of 5.55 per cent. in wages.

DOMINION PARLIAMENT.

Adulteration of Maple Syrup In Quebec Subject of Debate.

Ottawa, April 10.—The adulteration of maple syrup was discussed in the House yesterday by the members from Quebec, and a resolution passed, calling upon the Government to suppress it. The discussion was not political, but on both sides of the House there was a sentiment freely expressed that the law had not been enforced with a sufficient degree of vigor.

Mr. Brodeur, lately Minister of Inland Revenue, was a trifle nettled at the criticisms directed against his former department, but declared himself in accord with the resolution.

Preceding this there had been a debate upon the exposure by Mr. Smith of a transaction in Britain in russet apples, and the publication of the member's name by the Government, as committing a fraud although there had been no fraud. In no other case had any shipper's name been published, although the department had received many complaints, based on actual fraud. Was it an effort to punish him for defeating the Liberal candidate at the bye-election?

Sir Wilfrid Laurier scouted the idea that there was any malice towards Mr. Smith.

Rigid Enquiry Into Tower Fall.

Ottawa, April 10.—The instructions isued yesterday to Architect S. G. Curry and A. C. Hutchinson require them to investigate and report, not only upon the tower, but also as to the entire addition. They are authorized to examine witnesses under oath, and are to determine: (1) Whether the plans and specifications have been carefully followed. (2) Whether the material was of the quality and kind specified. (3) Whether the workmanship was such as was called for by the contract. (4) Whether the inspection of the work by the department was sufficient in all respects. (5) Whether the work, if otherwise properly done, was unsuitable work to be done during the winter weather. (6) Where the responsibility lies for the accident.

WANTS IT HURRIED.

Fitzpatrick's Intimation to Sabbath Observance Bill Committee.

Ottawa, April 10.—Dr. Daniel, St. John, N. B., was appointed chairman of the special committee on the Sabbath observance bill, which met yesterday morning.

Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick intimated that he was very anxious that the proceedings of the committee should not be protracted, and in view of the fact that the bill had already received its second reading in the House, one or two meetings of the committee would be sufficient.

Thursday, April 19, was fixed for the first meeting, when the objections and claims of interested parties will be heard in reference to the bill.

SIR WM. RALPH MEREDITH.

May Be the Chairman of the Provincial Railway Commission.

Toronto, April 10.—It is said that the Whitney Government will offer the post of chairman of the new Provincial Railway Commission to Chief Justice Sir William Ralph Meredith, and, that the chief justice will accept.

There are indications that he will welcome the opportunity of retiring from the bench.

His retention of his place on the North American Life directorate adds credence to the story that he will go on the Railway Commission.

VESUVIUS TAKES LIVES

Latest Information Says as Many as 500 Lives Were Lost.

Day of Terror In Cities and Country Around the Angry Volcano—Damage Done by Cinders and Ashes Almost as Great as Devastation Wrought by Lava—One Hundred and Fifty Thousand Refugees.

Naples, April 10.—According to information received late to-night, probably as many as 500 lives were lost. It is said that more than 200 persons in the district of San Guiseppe perished while from the ruins of a church, which collapsed owing to the weight of ashes on the roof, forty-nine corpses were extricated. It is asserted that at San Guiseppe thirty-seven persons were killed by falling houses.

Ashes are still falling in great quantities.

Ashes Crush San Guiseppe.

Yesterday was a day of terror for the cities, towns and country about Mount Vesuvius. Unconfirmed reports place the number of dead and injured at several hundred, but not many facts can be obtained upon which to base an accurate estimate. At midnight the situation appears more assuring, the lava streams having diminished in volume, and in some directions having stopped altogether, while copious rainfall is cooling the lava where it lies stationary.

Almost equally with the devastation wrought by the lava is the damage done by cinders and ashes, which in incredible quantities have been carried great distances. This has caused the practical destruction of San Guiseppe, a village of 6,000 inhabitants. All but 200 people had fled from the village, and these assembled in the church to attend mass. While the priest was performing his sacred office the roof fell, and about 60 persons were badly injured.

150,000 Refuges In Naples.

The shower of ashes ceased to fall over Naples for a time yesterday morning, but began again later in the day. There are 150,000 refugees gathered in this city. When the last train was leaving Boscotrecase, a fresh crater opened near the station. The refugees from Ottajane say five houses and five churches collapsed from the wave of ashes. An excursion steamer, attempting to reach Naples from the Island of Capri, had to return as the passengers were being suffocated by the cinders.

In an interview with Lieut. Clarrocchi, commanding a detachment of troops, who witnessed the destruction of Boscotrecase as a result of the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, the lieutenant is quoted as follows:

A Story of the Day.

"All was quiet in the town just before its destruction, the people believing that they were safe from the stream of lava, but after midnight terrific rumblings were heard, followed by violent earth shocks, which shattered the windows and cracked the walls. The lava then began flowing from Mount Ciramella near where a fresh fissure opened a few days ago. A wild panic ensued, the people rushing about in the streets, shrieking with terror. The Ciramella crater was by that time hurling forth masses of incandescent rock and a current of fire was sweeping down the mountain with terrific speed, flowing in two streams. One of them, 200 yards broad, was moving towards the centre of the town.

"The population fled in terror to Torre Annunziata, while the soldiers visited the houses in order to see that all the inhabitants escaped. In so doing they rescued several bedridden people who had been left behind by their terrified relatives. Indescribable scenes of panic were witnessed.

River of Fire.

"The people seemed to have lost all control over themselves. The town was hardly evacuated when a river of fire invaded the houses, and soon afterwards Boscotrecase seemed to be enveloped in flames. After passing Boscotrecase the two small streams flowed to Torre Annunziata."

VICTORY IS ONLY HALF

Justice Burbridge's Decision in Ontario v. Canada.

Dominion Must Pay 5 Per Cent. On the School and Land Improvement Funds, But May Pay Off the Debt at Any Time—This Last Part of the Decision Will Be Appealed to Supreme Court and Privy Council.

Toronto, April 10.—Hon. Mr. Matheson made an announcement in the Legislature yesterday that he had just received advice from Aemilius Irving, K. C., who was of the Ontario Government's legal counsel, of a decision by Judge Burbridge of the Court of Exchequer, which conveyed the meaning that the province had won a partial victory over the Dominion Government in litigation over the trust funds.

Since Confederation these funds had been held up till two years ago at a five per cent. interest rate. The funds are made up of a common school fund of $1,469,000 and a land improvement and an Upper Canada College fund, the grammar school and building fund totalling $1,910,000. Two years ago the Dominion Government claimed the right to pay off the whole amount, and on this being refused, reduced the interest on other than the common school fund to four per cent, entailing a loss to the province of $19,000 yearly.

The decision, while fixing five per cent. as the uniform rate and compelling the Dominion Government to make up the lapse, also gives the Dominion the right to pay off the whole at any time.

Hon. Mr. Matheson stated that this ruling would be appealed through the Supreme Court, and if necessary, through the Privy Council. He figures that, as a perpetual asset at five per cent. it would be worth $400,000 or $500,000 more to the province than if otherwise invested.

Too Many Judges.

Should the bill by Mr. Clark, which received its second reading yesterday, become law, it will result in a considerable reduction in the number of judicial appointments for the province.

The bill provides that in any county only one judge should hold office. Mr. Clark pointed out that up till 1896 the unit was 40,000. In that year the Liberal Government of Ontario was considering asking the Dominion Government to make the unit 80,000, when a change in Government then prompted a change in the request, whereby the Dominion Government might appoint two judges to a county on stating in issuing the commission that the population was 80,000. This, Mr. Clark declared, made it possible for an extra judge to be appointed through a lie in the issuing of a commission.

Hon. Mr. Foy agreed with the speaker's views that in many counties there were now two judges where one could easily do the work.

Hon. Mr. Ross thought the legal machinery of the province had improved. In the High Court, where there were now four divisions, the work was done more expeditiously than ever before. However, there might be too many judges.

"There are a large number of counties where two judges aren't necessary," ruled Premier Whitney. "The question should form part of anything in the nature of law reform which may be taken up."

Mr. Whitney's opinion was that the proposed measure could do no harm, while a good deal of good might come from it. He referred it to a select legal committee.

Telephone Regulation.

Mr. Lucas, in withdrawing his bill to allow any telephone line to be connected with any other line, said he did so because of legislation recently introduced at Ottawa, which made it unnecessary. He made the suggestion, however, that the new railway board be given authority to regulate the telephones operating in Ontario. He hoped the importance of having uniform standards for all the small rural lines would be seen.

A second reading was given Mr. Lennox's auto bill, with the clause relating to revenue eliminated.

Bills Passed.

The order paper was decorated with no less than 48 bills, which were presented for their final readings, giving a rather striking evidence of the heavy routine work of the present session. The following bills were passed through the final stages:

Mr. Cochrane—Respecting the Department of Lands, Forests and Mines.

Mr. Cochrane—To amend the act to preserve the forests from destruction by fire.

Mr. Preston (Durham)—Respecting the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham.

Mr. Calder—Respecting the Town of Oshawa.

Mr. Lennox—To authorize the Law Society of Upper Canada to admit Henry Ernest Redman to practice as a barrister.

Mr. McCowan—To authorize the Law Society of Upper Canada to permit George Macgregor Gardner to practice as a barrister.

Mr. Crawford—Respecting the Anglo-American Fire Insurance Co.

Mr. Preston (Durham)—Respecting the Village of Campbellford.

Mr. Lucas—Respecting the Town of Thornbury and the Township of Collingwood.

As the House was rising Mr. Whitney announced that the education bills would be introduced to-morrow.

Hamilton Man Suicides.

Hamilton, April 10.—"I've done it now," remarked William Anderson, as he seated himself at the window of his brother's barber shop yesterday afternoon, after drinking a fatal dose of carbolic acid. In a short time he fell over unconscious, and he died on the way to the hospital. He had often threatened to end his life. He was 30 years of age, and leaves a widow and two children.

Prince Reaches Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, April 10.—Prince Arthur of Connaught arrived in the city yesterday morning and was greeted by a large assembly of citizens. In the evening his highness and suite attended a state dinner at Government house.

Vesuvius Calamity

Added to by the Collapse of the Market at Naples.

Twelve Dead and Over 100 Seriously Injured—Gay Spectacle In Market Place Suddenly Turned Into Scene of Horror—Volcanic Disturbances on the Increase—Fate of Children In Doubt—Brave Soldiers.

Naples, April 11.—As a result of the terrible collapse of the Mount Olliveto market yesterday morning 12 are dead, 24 are mortally wounded, and over 100 are seriously injured.

When morning broke yesterday, the outlook was promising for an amelioration of the conditions consequent upon the activity of Mount Vesuvius. The hopefulness of the populace, however, was short-lived, and the Neapolitans were plunged into a condition bordering on frenzy by the collapse of the Mount Oliveto market, from the weight of cinders from Mount Vesuvius.

From Life to Death.

The courtyard covers 600 feet square and was roofed. The space within was unusually crowded with buyers and their children, the accident happening at the hour of the day when trade is most brisk. Rival displays of flowers, fruits and vegetables contended for buyers, while market-women screamed their wares and joked with their customers. Little children played about the stands, adding gaiety to the scene, the line of which is not to be witnessed outside of Naples.

Suddenly, with scarcely a tremor of warning, there was a terrifying crash and the brilliant sight disappeared in a cloud of dust, while shrieks of agony rent the air.

Identification Impossible.

The identification of the bodies of a number of those killed by the collapse of the market roof was found to be impossible, owing to their being absolutely unrecognizable, in some cases being reduced to pulp, while others were horribly mutilated, giving rise to scenes which are better undescribed. Among the dead are many children who had been sent by their parents to do the morning's marketing.

Indignation of the people as a result of the disaster increased as each additional body was taken out, and disturbances approaching a riot in importance occurred. The people loudly insisted that the authorities were aware that the roof of the market was unsafe, and that they were so excessively economical that they would not appropriate the funds necessary to repair the building.

Terrifying news reached the city yesterday morning from points throughout the district surrounding Ottajano. The reports indicate that an enormous area is buried beneath ashes and cinders. The present disaster is looked upon as a repetition of the catastrophes to Pompeii and Herculaneum, except in this instance the loss of life is less.

Efforts on the part of the press representatives and the authorities to ascertain the exact number of those who have already fallen victims to the eruptions of Vesuvius are almost fruitless, from the fact that the buried villages are impossible of access, and, further, because the people who fled when their houses began to fall have scattered throughout the country districts.

Fate of Children Unknown.

The fate of many children at Ottajano is unknown. When the military carts arrived at the scene of the disaster Monday night the soldiers arranged to have the children and aged people get into the carts, but when the vehicles had gone a few hundred feet it was found that, although there were four horses harnessed to each wagon, they could not pull their loads through the deep ashes. This caused a panic among the children, who expected to be buried in the ashes from the volcano, and they fled in all directions in the darkness and blinding rain, and have not since been heard of.

Several lads in Boscotrecase, who were unharmed when the danger following the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius seemed most imminent, subsequently ventured to walk on the cooling lava. They went too far and the crust broke under their weight. They were swallowed up before the helpless onlookers.

Lava Flows Again.

The flow of lava from the volcano which had almost ceased during the night, recommenced early yesterday, and the fall of volcanic ejecta in the Vesuvian communes has been enormous. It is feared that the weight of ashes on roofs will cause the collapse of many more buildings, both here and in the towns and villages near the volcano.

Director Matteucci, who continues at his post in the observatory, telegraphed last night that the volcano was generally calm Monday night, with occasional sharp explosions, these becoming more violent towards morning. Director Matteucci says his seismic instruments indicates great subterranean agitation.

King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena have forwarded to Premier Sonnino, who is here, $20,000 to be applied towards the relief of the sufferers by the volcano.

Finding the Victims.

The scenes at Ottajano when the first victims were unearthed there were most horrible. The positions of the bodies showed that the victims had died while in a state of great terror, the faces being convulsed with fear.

Many tales are told of heroic rescues on the part of the soldiers sent to the assistance of the sufferers at Ottajano and elsewhere. One man rode his horse through the ashes, reaching up to its flanks, at Ottajano, calling out, "Who wants help? Who wants help?" He was rewarded by hearing a woman's voice reply in weak tones, and, springing from his horse, found her in a ruined house, with three children dead beside her. The soldier picked the woman up in his arms and carried her to a place of safety, where it was found that both her legs were broken and that she had been badly crushed about the body.

The number of dead taken from the church at San Giuseppe, which collapsed Monday, while a congregation of about 200 persons were attending mass, is 26. There were 79 severely injured.

Coal Steamer Ashore.

Amherstburg, April 11.—The first marine mishap of the season occurred here yesterday when the big steel steamer L. C. Waldo, up-bound with a cargo of coal, ran on to the Jagged Rocks, at the lower end of Bois Blanc Island. A hole was punched in the boat, and one compartment is full of water. She will be lightered off.

Wood Alcohol Suicide.

Toronto, April 11.—Despondent because her health was troubling her, Miss Nellie Cavanagh committed suicide at 50 Elm Grove avenue, by taking a large dose of wood alcohol. Coroner Greig will hold an inquest to-day.

2,500 Sail For Canada.

London, April 11.—(C. A. P.)—As a result of the active emigration propaganda in Belgium the steamer Lake Michigan sailed from Antwerp for Canada yesterday with 2,500 emigrants, a record for the port.

Freak Legislation.

The student of freak legislation has only to look at the State Legislatures of the United States to have food for thought. It is the inherent privilege, dear as a square meal to the appetite of the private member, to introduce any legislation he is inclined to. Nothing is sacred or secluded from the legislative mania of the state legislator. He has all sorts and conditions of folk in his constituency. He has promised some man to introduce a bill to turn back the hands of the clock. And he does. Besides he may have freakish notions of his own, and away he scurries to grind out a bill. What matters it if his bills are all buried before they reach maturity. His argument on the stump is the more effective than it would be had his legislation been acceptable. The virtue is in introducing the bill, not in having had it solidified in the statute books.

One is constrained, says the London Free Press, to view A. C. Pratt's bill in the Ontario Legislature from this viewpoint. Mr. Pratt is one of the rising legislators of Canada, a clever speaker, well and generally wisely informed and mentally alert. Doubtless he has been watching events across the line. His chosen vocation would compel him, even if he were not a law-maker. He sees that in nearly all the state legislatures bills have been introduced which seek to compel manufacturers of proprietary and patent medicines to make public the formulas and private processes by which their preparations are made. But is that all? Does Mr. Pratt observe the apparent spontaneity of these measures and the noisy clamor of their advocates? Is there not a suspicion that this organized effort in all directions, and the rhetoric spent in its advocacy, have their source in certain interests that are not always in line with the public interest? A keen American observer says, "there is no real demand from the general public for this legislation, except such as has been, by false representations, created by certain selfish interests."

The National Druggist of St. Louis, Mo., under the caption of "A Conspiracy to Establish a Physicians' Trust," attempts to show the real significance of the movement in the United States. They have there an organization of doctors known as the American Medical Association. With the industrial trust movement there arose a plan to organize all the doctors of the United States into one gigantic medical trust. All small, independent medical societies were to be merged into the A.M.A. The organ of the association proclaimed the merits of such a combine. The contagion spread. The A.M.A., from a membership of 5,000, now musters 20,000, and still grows. Each state society is encouraged to establish a journal of its own, but all to work out the one idea, the trust idea. The independent medical press was blacklisted. The California state medical journal makes no bones about it, and says: "The day of the private-owned medical journal is passing away and its place will be taken by the journal of the A.M.A. and the various state journals."

Now, with foundation well laid, what was the next step? Let Truthful James, the National Druggist, say:

"About a year ago these medical autocrats started out on a project to regulate and control the drug industries of the country, and their initial move was the issuance of an edict to the manufacturers of that class of proprietaries intended exclusively for physicians' prescriptions, notifying them that they must forthwith furnish to the association's council on chemistry and pharmacy the names and exact quantities of the ingredients which enter into the composition of their several remedies, together with their methods and secret processes of manufacture, all of which should be so complete as to enable the council to verify them; that is, to reproduce the preparations, and to determine their future status from time to time. It was at the same time declared, that unless the manufacturers acceded to these demands, their remedies should be refused admission into a volume which it was proposed to publish, that would contain all remedies of the kind that members of the American Medical Association could 'ethically' prescribe or use in their practice."

RHEUMATISM
Price 25c.
I will refund your money if it fails.
Munyon's Rheumatism Cure seldom fails to relieve pains in legs, arms, back, stiff or swollen joints in a few hours. Positively cures in a few days. It does not put the disease to sleep, but drives it from the system. —MUNYON.

But this move did not increase the revenues of the trust medical journal. The manufacturers withdrew their advertisements from "the organs." The situation was serious. Something had to be done. What was done? Truthful James deposes that,

"A few months ago, as if by concerted action, the journal of the American Medical Association and the auxiliary state journals began to teem with articles on the danger to the public from patent medicines, and various suggestions were proposed to overcome the great evil. The idea of educating the general public to the danger to which it was thus exposed was first proposed, but immediately abandoned as too slow and difficult, and it was finally determined to strike at the manufacturers of these articles through Congress and the State."

Now, the National Druggist seems to think that it has proven its charge of conspiracy against the A. M. A. Perhaps it has, but that has nothing to do with conditions in Ontario. Oh dear, no! Certainly not.

It was noted recently, with considerable satisfaction, that the Hastings County branch of the Fish and Game Protective Association had decided to offer a reward for the conviction of persons who destroyed robins and other song and insectivorous birds. In this connection the following, from the St. Catharines Star-Journal, is apropos; "A singular and deplorable manifestation of the boyish instinct of destruction seems to present itself concurrently with the first song of the robin. Immediately, the impulse of the boyish heart is to become possessed with a catapult, and the beautiful red-breast is singled out for a mark. Already boys with these infernal weapons may be seen going to and from school, peering to discover from what tree or house-top the robin call is being made, and then a sneak is made in the effort to get "a shot." It is the privilege of any citizen to arrest a boy on sight who may be using one of these catapults, and the lovers of birds should be on the keen lookout and make an example of any catapult fiends they may come across. It is understood the police will be actively alert this spring, and their efforts should be assisted in every way by residents generally. The sparrow has driven away our smaller song birds; let us unite to save the robin from the small boy. The parent may have to suffer for the boy's misdeeds, but it will be father's privilege to have a quiet reckoning with the boy in the woodshed afterwards."

It will be remembered that, not long ago, an article appeared in The Intelligencer in relation to the difference in the price of bread in Belleville as compared with London, Eng. The Ottawa Journal printed The Intelligencer's article, and now publishes the following communication in regard to it;

Editor Journal — An item is going the rounds to the effect that a 4-lb. loaf of bread costs 11c in London, England. It is a good many years since bread was that price in London. At present it is 3 1-2 pence or 7c for 4 lbs.

In Ottawa the same quantity costs 13 1-2c. Many account for the difference in price by asserting that bakers' wages in Ottawa are double the wages paid in London.

Ottawa bakers get $12 per week. London bakers get $10 per week.

The main reason for the difference in price here and in London is due to the fact that everything excepting wages that enters into the cost of production of bread in Canada is exalted in price about 40 per cent. by our protective tariff. Thus the government in so far as it supports protection, nullifies the very bounty of the Creator, as manifested in good crops.

H. WASHINGTON,
Sec. "British Colonial Free Trade League."

How H. Washington, whoever he may be, figures that the tariff has anything to do with an article grown, milled and made into bread in this country is more than most people will comprehend. Much free trade talk has made him mad.

MOTHER AND CHILD.

Let the mother take Scott's Emulsion for the two; it never fails to benefit them both. One can eat for two, but nourishing two is a different thing. It calls for a degree of internal strength that the average woman lacks. People of luxury are not very strong by habit; overworked people are weak in some functions from exhaustion or their surroundings. Scott's Emulsion can be depended upon to overcome such conditions. It is a wonderful food for a mother and child.

ANTHRACITE COAL HAS QUITE A HISTORY.

DEVELOPMENT HAS BEEN RESULT OF 115 YEARS' HEART-BREAKING TRIALS,

Anthracite coal has a history which few people know. It is particularly suitable to mention it just now when we are watching the progress of the coal strike negotiations.

In a recent statement, President Baer, of the operators, issued the following statement of the output of anthracite coal for 1905, according to size. He puts the prepared coal at 65 per cent. and the steam coal at 35 per cent. of the total output of 61,410,200 tons. The sizes he distributes as follows;

	Tons.	P.C.
Lump	1,609,887	2,62
Broken	4,238,069	6.90
Egg	7,562,411	12.13
Stove	11,765,419	16.16
Chestnut	12,249,398	19.95
Pea	8,419,097	13.71
Buckwheat No 1	8,979,273	14.62
Smaller than Buckwheat No. 1	6,586,614	10.73
Total	61,410,200	100.00

The development of the fuel to this enormous extent has been the growth of 115 years, and it has not been obtained without heart-breaking trials of the discoverers.

In 1791 the mountains around Lehigh River in Pennsylvania were clothed in primeval forests and on the eastern side there lived a hunter named Philip Ginther, with his wife and child. In the year named he stumbled over a fallen tree and a large black stone. He had heard of "stone coal" existing in the mountains, and concluded that this stone must be a specimen. He took a piece with him, and later gave it to a Colonel Jacob Weiss, who sent the specimen for examination to Philadelphia, where it was passed upon by many alleged scientists. It remained for Charles Cist, a printer, to declare that the specimen was anthracite coal. He asked Colonel Weiss to reward Ginther, and at the same time to secure as much land in the vicinity of the find as possible.

From the Blue Mountains to the Susquehanna was then an unbroken wilderness, and little difficulty was experienced in securing several thousand acres of land, through the Land Office. The following year the "Lehigh Coal Mine Company" was organized. In May an expedition was formed to explore and work the mine. This consisted of one of the members of the company as mining expert, and four laborers.

There is something pathetic in the mind's eye picture of this little forlorn hope as it marched into the wilderness to start one of the greatest industries that the world's history has ever known. They required no scientific skill; the coal was found at the root of the fallen tree, with but a thin covering of soil above the seam. A few small pits were sunk and a few tons taken out. Then the most serious questions arose: "What was to be done with it? Where was a market to be had for the produst, now that it had been found?"

Colonel Weiss used to fill his saddle-bags with the coal and ride through the country, beseeching the blacksmiths to test the fuel. Most of the people regarded the Lehigh Coal Mine Company as a humbug, if no worse, and tried their wit and sarcasm upon the association.

The Coal Mine Company still held to its faith, and had a fleet of "arks" built, to be sent down loaded with coal to Philadelphia by the earliest freshet. Of these but two lived to reach Philadelphia, the others being lost on the voyage down the rushing steam. Their crews appear to have escaped, however. But there were no purchasers for the coal, except for specimen lots.

The authorities had a steam pump in Broad street, for raising water into elevated tanks for the city's use. They were induced to try the coal, but all efforts to use it failed. Finally, the supply was broken up and used to macadamize some footpaths. This terminated the operations of the Coal Mine Company for a period of fourteen years.

This ought to have checked the enthusiasm of the adventurers, but it did not. When coal was found at Pottsville the mining was taken up again. Blacksmiths found that the anthracite actually would burn, and a Philadelphia chemist discovered that it had great heat producing properties. In 1814 a charter was granted for the improvement of the Schuylkill River, and the success of the village blacksmiths with the coal drew attention to its possibilities once more.

A Colonel Shoemaker, of Pottsville, sunk some shafts and started out with a dozen wagon loads. The failure of the Lehigh coal was not forgotten, and he was scoffed at by the multitude. He finally succeeded in selling a few tons to the nail works at Fairmount, and smaller lots to blacksmiths. All failed to ignite the coal, and Shoemaker was called every kind of a knave, and writs were issued for his arrest, and he only escaped the officers by making a detour of fifteen miles on his return home.

But the turning point had been reached, and in curious wise. Every effort had been made to burn the coal at the Fairmount nail works. A furnace filled with it had been poked and stirred and raked and blown upon until proprietor and workmen were alike disgusted and heartily cursed Shoemaker and his black stones. Dinner time came, the men shut the furnace door and abandoned the experiment in despair.

Their surprise may be imagined when, upon their return, they found the furnace doors red hot and the furnace a mass of fire. The secret was out; the anthracite only required to be let alone and neither stirred, poked or raked. Then the newspapers got hold of the story, and the character of the coal was established for good and all.

A SPRING DANGER.

MANY PEOPLE WEAKEN THEIR SYSTEMS BY DOSING WITH PURGATIVE MEDICINES.

A spring medicine seems to be a necessity. Nature demands it as an aid to enriching the blood and carrying off the impurities that have accumulated during the indoor life of the winter months. Thousands of people, recognizing the necessity for a spring medicine, dose themselves with harsh, griping purgatives. This is a mistake. Ask any doctor and he will tell you that the use of purgative medicines weakens the system and cannot possibly cure disease. In the spring the system needs building up—purgatives weaken. The blood should be made rich, red and pure—purgatives cannot do this. What is needed is a tonic, and the best tonic medical science has yet devised is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose of this medicine actually makes new, rich blood, and this new blood strengthens every organ and every part of the body. That is why these pills banish pimples and unsightly skin eruptions. That is why they cure headaches and backaches, rheumatism, and neuralgia and a host of other troubles that come from poor, watery blood. That is why the men and women who use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills eat well and sleep well and feel active and strong. Mrs. Albert E. Sampson, L'Ardoise, N. S., says; "I have used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with the greatest benefit. I know of no medicine that can equal them in building up people who are weak or run down."

When buying these pills see that the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, is printed on the wrapper around the box. You can get the pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HEROES HONOR A DEAD HERO.

JAP SAILORS AT TOMB OF NELSON, THE GREATEST OF SEA FIGHTERS.

The London papers to hand give stories of the visit to London of the Japanese sailors sent over to man the great new warships recently built and now going into commission. The Express thus describes the visit of the crew of the Kashima to St. Paul's Cathedral;

At a little before 8.30 in the morning the cry of "Here they come!" was raised among the mass of spectators who had gathered outside Liverpool St. Station. As the dapper little bluejackets emerged into the street a hearty cheer swept through the watching ranks, followed by a confused chorus of "Banzais." The sailors broke into an answering roar of "Hello!" With that promptitude which is bred of a naval training, they climbed into the string of primrose-colored brakes awaiting them. When they arrived at St. Paul's Cathedral the visitors showed the utmost solicitude to be conducted forthwith to Nelson's tomb, which had already been described to them by their comrades of the Katori's crew. Their mien as they stood around the tomb was a most impressive study. The sentiment of veneration, almost of awe, was plainly expressed in every countenance. The tradition of ancestor-worship is still strong in the Japanese nature.

A most pleasing, half pathetic incident of this visit was the coming of Dean Gregory to welcome the band of silent, bare-headed guests. Venerable under the burden of his 87 years, he stood before these heroes of a mighty strife, and addressed them in silvery, though slightly quavering tones.

"We in England," said he, pausing that the interpreter might translate his speech, "look on the Japanese as our friends. I am sure the Japanese feel this same sentiment towards us. The Japanese are a brave race, and it is the earnest hope of all Englishmen that their destiny among the nations of the earth may prove as great as their valor, their chivalry and their humanity merit."

Archdeacon Sinclair followed with a few kindly words. Captain Ijichi returned thanks on behalf of his men for the warmth of their reception.

SPRINGBROOK.

The Epworth League meeting here last Friday was very interesting. The programme was taken charge of by the Bethesda League, who were out in large numbers. Mr. Ernest Timmon called the meeting to order stating the object of their visit was to carry out a system of campaign, which had been inaugurated at their last district conference. This campaign was to be under the forward movement of the society, and their battle cry was, "Pray, Study, Give." The Rev. Mr. Weatherill took the subject of "Prayer." His address was enthusiastic and inspiring. Mr. Howard McConnell gave a short but concise history of the forward movement, very instructive, and introducing the second subject "Study." Miss Flora Martin gave an interesting paper on this important feature of the programme. Mr. Ramsay then introduced the third heading, "Give." He gave some figures which were startling in their comparisons, and left much food for thought. Mr. Sherwood also spoke on this latter theme, and, in his own inimitable manner, kept the close attention of the audience for thirty minutes. The singing was unusually good, two selections by male voices being out of the ordinary. The writer has no hesitation in saying the talent exhibited, both in speaking and music, by the members of Bethesda League is far above the average. Mr. Timmon is an excellent leader. The whole league is the right sort. Please call again. The ladies of Springbrook provided a lunch for the occasion, which was served at the close of the meeting.

HIS MOTHER'S OPINION.

(From "The Brighter Day.")

Whilst walking down a crowded city street the other day
I heard a little urchin to a comrade turn and say:
"Say, Chimmy, lemme tell youse I'd be happy as a clam
If I only was de feller dat me mudder t'inks I am.

"She t'inks I am a wonder, an' she knows her little lad
Could never mix wit nuttin' dat was ugly, mean or bad
Oh, lots o' times I sit and t'ink how nice 'twould be, gee whiz!
If a feller was de feller dat his mudder t'inks he is."

My friend, be yours a life of toil or undiluted joy,
You still can learn a lesson from this small, unlettered boy,
Don't aim to be an earthly saint,
with eyes fixed on a star,
Just try to be the fellow that your mother thinks you are.

Speaking of the question of Sabbath Observance, Goldwin Smith says: "The subject is one on which reason and mutual toleration ought especially to prevail. An attempt violently to enforce the religious observance of the Lord's Day may imperil the observance of the day of rest." There is much truth in that. We do not have it too well protected now; if extremists provoke hostility to reasonable laws for its preservation we may find that instead of helping to save it, they are its worst enemies. It is a time for caution, toleration and education.

According to the eminent physician and surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves, we ought not to complain of sneezing, catarrh, coughing and the general discomforts that ordinarily accompany a common cold. They are not symptoms of disease, but proofs that the system is defending itself. The efforts of the sufferer, says the distinguished authority, should not be directed to stopping them directly, but to aiding nature, which is putting up a brave fight against dangerous bacteria. Indeed, a cold would in the majority of cases, prove fatal if these symptoms of resistance were not present. The presence of infection would not be discovered until the bacteria were so numerous that a fight would be hopeless. A medicine which merely stops coughing or allays inflammation may be thwarting nature's efforts to cure.

HANDED TO YORK LOAN.

Liszt Piano Co.'s Assets Assigned to Liquidators For the Benefit of Creditors — The Investigation.

Toronto, April 11.—"The Liszt Piano Co. have quietly assigned their assets to us for the benefit of the York Loan, and we are now in possession," was the statement made by an official of the National Trust Co., liquidators for the York Loan, yesterday afternoon.

The Phillips' investigation went on until nearly 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and was adjourned until this morning.

Couldn't Serve Writ on Phillips.

An officer of the National Trust Co., liquidators of the York Loan, made an unsuccessful attempt to serve notice on Joseph Phillips of the writ that has been issued, asking that he be restrained from disposing of his Toronto Life stock. The court intimated that the writ must be served on Phillips only through his counsel.

C. E. Stacey, an inspector of the York Loan and Toronto Life, acknowledged that Phillips had given him permission to write up Toronto Life insurance as a "side line," while traveling for the York Loan. From August, 1903, to December, 1904, witness received $2,000 to $3,000 for writing up insurance. From Nov 1, 1904, up to the present he had received $3,000 as commissions from the Toronto Life, besides $20 a week salary.

Commissions Paid Stock.

The 60 shares of stock on which he had paid $1,720 had been paid out of commissions he had from the York Loan and Toronto Life, and on the 10 per cent. of his salary that had been held back by the York Loan. Witness denied that he had got any cheques in favor of Phillips or the Misses Hudson.

Mrs. Mary Jane West, superintendent of the York Loan, deposed that she had sold National Monthlies under the instructions of Phillips.

"If," she added, "we sold two Monthlies and two York Loan shares, we were paid the regular commission by the York Loan. Also, if we sold three Monthlies and one share."

Witness had also sold pianos and Toronto Life insurance. One week she had written up from $10,000 to $15,000 insurance, and got a prize of $10 or $15.

"Was this paid by the York Loan?"

"Yes, I guess so. It was cashed there, too."

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Burt and the Hudson girls are subpoenaed for to-day.

Insurance Bills Pass.

Albany, N. Y., April 11.—The Senate yesterday passed unanimously and without debate, two of the insurance bills, which had not been amended. One amends the general corporation law as to acquisition of real property by life insurance companies, the other amends the penal code so as to prohibit the giving of rebates in life insurance business.

To Tan Fur Skins.

A formula often used to tan skins with hair or fur on is this: Wash the skin and scrape off any flesh that may be sticking to it. Then wash the hair side with water and soap and rinse well. Take one pound each of salt and pulverized alum, two ounces of borax dissolved in hot water, add enough rye meal (cornmeal may answer as well) to make a thick paste and spread all over flesh side. Then fold lengthwise, with the hair side out. Let remain two weeks in an airy but shaded place; then unfold, shake well and wash flesh side with water and scrape with some sort of dull scraper. Pull and stretch and work till dry. The quantity of ingredients must be in the proportions given, but the size of the skin must determine the quantity used. The quantities named probably would be enough for two or three sheepskins.

The Play in Paris.

By a fortnight all Paris is supposed to have seen a new play. It is not considered smart to be seen at a play after it has been running for more than that time.—London Bystander.

A Difference.

He—Don't you think that some of her sayings are smart? She—They aren't, but they do.—Brooklyn Life.

WOMEN'S SENSES.

They Are, It Is Said, Less Acute Than Those of Men.

The man, when his tooth was pulled, yelled hoarsely. The next patient, a woman, bore the pain of three extractions with silent fortitude.

"Yes," said the dentist, "women endure the pangs of tooth pulling better than men, but they deserve no praise on this account. They feel the pain less. Experiments have frequently been made to test the acuteness of the masculine and feminine senses. A series of experiments were made in New York city, and they were interesting and conclusive.

"First, taste was tried. The male subjects could detect in water the presence of the sixtieth part of a grain of gall. The women couldn't distinguish the gall in a smaller quantity than the twentieth of a grain. The men's taste was three times keener than the women's.

"Next, smell. The men smelled the presence of the hundredth part of a grain of prussic acid. The women were unconscious of the acid till a quantity five times greater was set before them. In smell the men were five times the women's superiors.

"Men heard a watch ticking at a distance of ten yards; women could only hear it at a distance of two yards. The males again, you see, were five times the better. It was the same thing with sight and with touch. The men saw five times better. They felt five times more keenly and delicately.

"These experiments explain in a way the apparent anomaly of woman's wondrous fortitude to pain. Woman's senses being less acute, she is less affected by pain than man."—Exchange.

THE OYSTER.

It Was Eaten by Riparian Man Thousands of Years Ago.

It was Dean Swift who remarked that "he was a bold man that first ate an oyster," but neither Dean Swift nor any other lover of good eating has been able to find records of any time, however ancient, when oysters were not eaten, while there is ample proof that thousands of years ago riparian man not only consumed these bivalves, but was very fond of them. Thus the "kjoekkenmoeddinger" or "kitchen refuse" along the Scandinavian coasts exhibits huge hills of oyster shells from which prehistoric men ate this succulent mollusk at their feasts in the days of Thor and Odin. There is, of course, an interesting tradition which relates how, in those prehistoric days a man clad in the skins of wild beasts ran barefooted along the shore of the sea. Suddenly he caught his foot in an oyster shell, which, as it instantly closed upon him, caused him so much pain that he seized a stone to dislodge the strange foe that clung to him so tenaciously. After accomplishing his purpose he raised his hand, moist with the juice of the oyster, to his lips, with results that were so pleasing to his palate that he promptly proceeded to eat the entire bivalve. Thus, it is said, did man first discover the gustatory delights contained within an oyster shell.

The Stomach Ache.

For genuine stomach ache—that is, pain in the true stomach—you must blame the digestion. If the pain often occurs one may be sure that a serious state of chronic indigestion obtains. Then of course it is very necessary to take advice directed to that one case. But for a solitary attack there is nothing better than getting rid of the stomach contents. They cannot possibly do good and may greatly upset the system. Warm salt and water is a simple domestic emetic. When there are acid risings and burnings in the throat a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of sodium in water, taken in divided doses, may be tried.

The Adirondack Lakes.

One of the most striking phenomena of the Adirondack region is the carrying power of the human voice in still weather upon the lakes great and small. Persons ashore easily hear the ordinary conversation of others who are so far out upon the lake as to be indistinguishable, and as a great many Adirondack visitors habitually violate the law touching the slaughter of deer all such offenders are extremely careful not even to whisper a word that might betray their guilt when rowing upon the lakes.

A "Gold Brick" of Old Time.

In one of the Tell-el-Amarna letters, written during the eighteenth dynasty, the king of Babylon accuses Amenophis III. of Egypt of sending him a mass of base metal for gold. He says, "The twenty minas of gold you sent me contained, when melted down, only five minas of pure gold."—London Post.

No Competition.

"What do you consider the most memorable occasion in your career?"

"Once, at an evening performance," answered the great tenor, with emotion, "all the boxes were occupied by mutes. I shall never forget that night."

Her Cooking.

Young Wife—How do you like my cooking? Don't you think I've begun well? Husband—Um—yes. I've often heard that well begun is half done.—Punch.

Sarcastic Swift.

It was Swift who warned a friend who was extolling the air of overtaxed Ireland: "Hush! If they hear you say that, they'll certainly tax the air."

A Bad Combination.

Seads—You say he left no money? Baggs—No. You see, he lost his health getting wealthy, and then lost his wealth trying to get healthy.

TALE OF AN ANTIQUE RUG

By Edith M. Doane

Copyright, 1905, by E. C. Parcells

I am a prayer rug—an "antique Gheordez" my master calls me—and I lie in a corner of the library before the shelves that hold his choicest books.

The morning sunshine envelops me in a rich flood of yellow splendor; in the evening the blazing logs in the fireplace caress me with flickering shafts of golden light; at night I lie in the soft darkness and dream happily of the days of my youth.

Allah is good. I am content.

I was an old rug, worn smooth by the bare feet of the faithful, even before I was taken from the temple and brought to this strange country across the seas. For months I lay in dark, evil smelling places, before that day when I found myself once more in the blessed sunlight amid a babel of strange sights and sounds. The worshipers in this new temple swayed and jostled each other noisily; the priest waved his arms madly. "Going, going, gone!" he cried. "Going, going, gone!"

Aside from the crowd, in the corner where I lay, two men were standing. One talked earnestly to the other, who listened with a certain embarrassment.

"Tell her what you have told me," said the first. "Go home to her now. Get down on your knees and tell her that you've made all kinds of an ass of yourself and you know it. Beg for her forgiveness. Beg for one more chance. Beg for the boy's sake, to be allowed to try again."

The other man flushed dully. "I have not been home for weeks," he said huskily. "I couldn't. I've done about all the evil a man can do—except that. I couldn't go from that other crowd to her and the boy."

"But you are done with all that now," protested the first eagerly. "You have had your fling, and you've found it yields nothing but Dead sea fruit in the end. It isn't too late to go back. She will forgive you."

"ELIZABETH," HE SAID ALMOST FIERCELY, "I LOVE YOU!"

"How can I ask her to?" said the other wearily. "Think of the grievous wrong"—

Just here I was taken up and carried over to the priest, who held me aloft in his arms, while all the people craned their necks and jostled each other in their effort to get a better view.

"An antique Gheordez prayer rug," chanted the priest. "A sapphire on an opal ground. A rug that is to other rugs what rubies are to other precious stones—rarer, more brilliant, more costly. Notice the harmony of the contrasting colors—the mosaics of the borders—the splendor of the design. How much am I offered for this superb antique prayer rug?"

Then the tide of the shouts of the devout broke against the priest's chant, and in its midst I found myself carried once more to the corner where the two men stood. They examined me carefully. The face of the one who had held back was flushed and eager.

"This is the anniversary of our wedding day," he said to the other, "and I will do it. I will go now. I will take her this rug as a thought of the anniversary and on it, where so many prayers for forgiveness have been offered, I will offer mine."

"Oh, Allah, be merciful!" he added under his breath.

So I went with him to his home, and he let himself in gently with his latchkey and tiptoed softly to the library and laid me before the fire. Then he touched a bell.

"Is Mrs. Wharton at home?" he asked the man who answered his ring, and his voice trembled in spite of his efforts to steady it.

The man eyed him curiously. "No, sir," he said respectfully. "Mrs. Wharton and Master Edward 'as been gone, sir, some days."

"Mrs. Wharton left a note, and there is other mail," he added, placing a sheaf of letters on the table and retiring with a bow.

My master tore open the small square envelope on top, and his face went ashen gray. "I have warned and prayed and entreated," he read dully, "and now I have gone where I shall at least be spared the insult of your presence. You have ruined my life and your own, but the boy shall be saved."

Under the small square envelope was a long white one. "Her lawyers," he repeated monotonously, opening it and stumbling mechanically through its legal phrasing.

Then he threw himself in a chair and buried his face in his arms on the table.

"Oh, my God!" he sobbed brokenly. "Oh, my God!"

After that night I did not see the master for many months; then one evening he came into the library, looking older and sterner, with deep lines in his face. After that he spent nearly all his evenings in the library, sometimes with friends, but oftener alone, reading or just staring straight ahead into the fire. So the days rolled into weeks and the weeks into months and years until one evening the master came and stood for a long time looking at the picture of a woman and a boy on the mantel. "Three years tonight," he said slowly; "three long years."

The curtains of the doorway parted, and a woman came forward part way into the room, a slender, graceful woman who carried her head haughtily, although her lips quivered with nervousness.

The master turned abruptly.

"Elizabeth!" he cried.

"You are surprised to see me here?"

"Elizabeth!" he said again in dazed astonishment, then: "The boy? What is wrong with the boy?" he cried sharply.

She flushed painfully. "It is because of him I am here. He has some claim on you still, even though I—have none."

She stopped abruptly and walked over to the fireplace, then turned and looked at him with proud, appealing eyes.

"I have not money enough to educate the boy properly," she said simply, "and there is no one I could come to but you—his father."

He did not answer her, but with one quick step forward took her hands in his.

"Elizabeth," he said almost fiercely. "I love you! I want you!"

Trembling, she leaned against the table.

"Love me? After all I did—the divorce—the boy"—

"The fault was mine. I loved you through it all. I have always loved you. I love you now"—

He looked searchingly at the sweet, averted face, then, with a quick, happy movement, drew her close.

"It was not until afterward that I knew how dearly I loved you," she said, with a little catch like a sob in her voice.

That was the dawn of a new era. The old silence is gone, and laughter and the soft sound of happy voices echo through the house. I am fond of them all, the master with his merry laugh, the mistress with her soft dark eyes and gracious ways, the boy who brings in troops of his admiring friends to see me.

If I sometimes long for the days of my youth—for the silence of the temple and the prayers of the faithful—what would you?

Allah alone is perfect.

I am content.

If Tom Had Been There.

The great Nelson's sovereignty was confined to the seas. On shore his valet, old Tom, ruled him completely. He was no hero to Tom, but a boy to be governed kindly, but firmly. To the end of his days the faithful old servant ascribed his master's fate to the fact that he was not aboard Nelson's ship at Trafalgar. Tom had been everywhere with Nelson until the time of Trafalgar, says a contributor to St. James' Budget. On that occasion he was detained in London too late to go to sea with Nelson, and ever afterward he used to say:

"If I had only been there Lord Nelson would not have been killed, for he should not have put on that coat!

"He would mind me like a child," the old fellow would go on, "and when I found him bent on wearing his finery before a battle I always prevented him.

"'Tom,' he would say, 'I'll fight this battle in my best coat.'

"'Oh, no, my lord, you shaun't,' I'd say.

"'But why, Tom?' he'd say.

"'Why, my lord? You just ask no questions, but fight the battle first,' I'd say, 'and then I'll dress you up in all your stars and garters, and you'll look something like. But after the battle, not before, my lord.' He got on his best coat at Trafalgar because I wasn't there to prevent him, and it was the end of him!"

She Rebuked Gladstone.

Laura Hain Friswell, in her book, tells this amusing anecdote of William E. Gladstone. Miss Friswell had been to the wedding of Sir Edward and Lady Ermyntrude Malet and was trying hard to get out of the crush. "I heard a voice saying: 'It's 4 o'clock! It's 4 o'clock! We shall be late for the house, Harcourt. We must get out.' The speaker was just at the back of me and pushing dreadfully; but I, grasping my friend's arm, stood back; then I turned my head and saw Gladstone and Sir William Harcourt.

"'What do you mean by this ungentlemanly behavior?' I asked indignantly. 'We are late for the house, madam,' returned the 'Grand Old Man.' 'And is that any reason why we should be killed by those horses? If you were men, you would keep the crowd back.'

"'She's right there,' whispered Harcourt. 'We must keep the crowd back. I beg your pardon, madam.' Gladstone looked very cross, but did as he was requested and muttered something which I took for an apology. They kept back the crowd."

AN HOUR'S WALK.

You Would Hardly Think It Meant Traveling 85,253 Miles.

Have you ever thought of the distance you travel when you are out on an hour's stroll? Possibly you walk three miles within the hour, but that does not by any means represent the distance you travel. The earth turns on its axis every twenty-four hours. For the sake of round figures, we will call the earth's circumference 24,000 miles, and so you must have traveled during the hour's stroll 1,000 miles in the axial turn of the earth.

But this is not all. The earth makes a journey around the sun every year, and a long but rapid trip it is. The distance of our planet from the sun we will put at 92,000,000 miles. This is the radius of the earth's orbit—half the diameter of the circle, as we call it. The whole diameter is therefore 184,000,000 miles, and the circumference, being the diameter multiplied by 3.1416, is about 578,000,000.

This amazing distance the earth travels in its yearly journey, and dividing it by 365 we find the daily speed about 1,586,000. Then we get the distance you rode around the sun during your hour's walk, divide again by twenty-four, and the result is about 66,000 miles. But this is not the end of your hour's trip. The sun, with its entire brood of planets, is moving in space at the rate of 160,000,000 miles in a year. That is at the rate of a little more than 438,000 miles a day, or 18,250 miles an hour.

So, adding your three miles of leg travel to the hour's axial movement of the earth, this to the earth's orbital journey and that again to the earth's excursion with the sun, and you find you have traveled in the hour 85,253 miles.

CRUDE HOUSEKEEPING.

Domestic Methods In England In the Fourteenth Century.

Carpets were unknown luxuries in England in the fourteenth century, but the fashion of strewing the apartments with rushes was being gradually abandoned. Rushes were still used in the retainers' hall, but for the better rooms sweet scented herbs and fragrant twigs were usually employed.

Windows were apertures filled with glass so as to admit light, but to exclude wind. The walls also were frequently hung with cloth or tapestry to protect the inmates of the room from the many currents of air that penetrated the strong but badly built walls. We learn from various ancient documents that it was the duty of the serving men and pages to sweep out the principal apartments, but as the use of water is rarely mentioned damp and fragrant leaves and twigs must have aided not only in collecting the dust, but also toward refreshing the atmosphere in such constantly closed rooms, fresh air being only admitted through the doors opening on to the battlements or balconies.

From old inventories at Thurleigh and elsewhere we ascertain how scantily furnished were these ancient mansions, although they seem to have been abundantly supplied with flagons and drinking cups in gold, silver and finely engraved pewter, besides an infinite number of black jacks or cups made of leather.—London Standard.

Gems and Disease.

Many curious stories of the healing of blindness and diseases by gems are to be found in ancient works, and it is said that the Emperor Theodosius was cured of blindness by a stone of great brilliancy which was laid on his eyes. What this stone was history unfortunately does not say. The diamond, ruby, emerald and opal were supposed to warn the owner of danger by changing color. Pliny says of the diamond that it is not only an antidote to poison, but that it has the power to free the mind from vain fears and to give bravery. Worn in the ephod of the high priest it determined innocence or guilt and was used to detect accused persons. This gem is dedicated to April, and, worn by those born in that month, is lucky.

There Is Plenty of Coal.

Every now and then some statistician with too much liver utters figures showing that the world's coal supply will last only a few hundreds of years. Make it many, many thousands. China has coal to burn—400,000 square miles of coal fields, some say. Japan has plenty more. Roumania has enough for the Balkan states if ever they stop burning powder and one another's houses. America's bin will be full for centuries on centuries. Great Britain and Germany will not be coalless soon. Let us worry about something else.

Tennyson's Prediction.

Tennyson predicted the day of his death. Just a year before his death friends of the poet were visiting Aldworth House. The late Lord Selborne turned to Tennyson and remarked, "You ought to be happy here." "Ah," sighed the poet, "I have only a year to live!" His hearers laughed at the remark, but it was a prophetic assertion that was verified to the minute.

A Girl's Way.

Have you noticed that when a girl has short skirts she is always teasing to have them lower, and the very day she gets them lowered she starts to hold them up?

Its Finish.

The Governess — What happened when the man killed the goose that laid the golden egg, Margie? Little Margie —Why, I guess his goose was cooked.

A man of integrity will never listen to any plea against conscience.—Tome.

A GOOD IDEA OF SPACE.

It Is Given by a Contemplation of the Star Sigma Draconis.

Stars or planets are said to be "fixed" when they are separated from us by a distance so great that a change in their orbits makes no perceptible difference in their positions, even though such "fixed" bodies may travel an orbit 100,000,000 miles in circumference in the course of a year. These "fixed" stars may be only a few paltry millions of miles away or they may be billions or even trillions of miles from the pygmy planet upon which we have our being. The most distant of all the orbs, as far as astronomers know, is the fixed star Sigma Draconis, which is separated from us by a distance so great that millions and billions of miles are only as inches and feet compared to the miles which intervene between our earth and the sun. Astronomers are noted for their propensities for indicating stellar distances with robust and well developed strings of figures, but in the case of Sigma Draconis the distance is so great that figures fail to give any conception whatever.

Light travels at the rate of 186,330 miles per second, and, reckoning the day at twenty-three hours fifty-six minutes and four seconds in length and the year at 365¼ days, an astronomical light year will equal 5,864,060,148,330 miles. The above figures, which represent the distance which light will travel in a year, when multiplied by 129 give us the distance to Sigma Draconis, or, in other words and figures, that star is 129 light years, or 756,000,000,000,000,000 miles, from us! If Sigma had been blotted out of existence before our Revolutionary war began, its light would still be shining as though the star were yet in place!

THEY ARE VERY UGLY.

The Korean Women Are the Homeliest In the World.

I think the assertion may safely be made that the women of Korea are the most unattractive in the world. One of my chief occupations during my stay in the little Hermit Kingdom has been making a diligent search for a passably pretty face. I have failed to find one. It is not that they haven't pretty eyes. They have—eyes of softest brown and gentlest expression. It is not that their features are coarse or irregular, for, while this may be true of many, it is not by any means true of all, and I have caught glimpses of as delicately molded features at Seoul as in any other part of the world.

But the Korean woman is just ugly. She may have fine eyes, she may have a pretty little nose and mouth and other features that in themselves are not at all unattractive, but as she is put together and as her mental life has made her she is ugly.

One doesn't ordinarily see much of the women of the better class in this strange little land; but, being admitted, as I have been, to the imperial palaces and several houses of high degree, I have been at least able to receive impressions. The women who are to be seen on the streets of the cities are usually slaves or servants of a low order; but, whatever they are, they, each and every one of them, look as if they had hurried out into the street without taking time to dress themselves properly.

A Moorish Legend.

A certain sultan one morning commanded his prime minister to take a census of all the stupid people in his empire and let him have the correct list. The vizier set to work, and at the head of the list, which was a very long one, he placed the name of his sovereign. The latter happened to be in a good humor and merely inquired how he came to merit that distinction.

"Sire," the minister replied, "I have entered you on the list because only two days ago you intrusted large sums of money, for the alleged purpose of buying horses abroad, to a couple of men who are entire strangers and who will never come back again."

"Is that your opinion? But suppose they do?"

"Then I will erase your name and place theirs at the head of the list."

The Turk.

The Turk practices no trade, engages in no commerce. They have a proverb which says, "The Frank has science, the American commerce, the Osmanli majesty." But, as majesty won't fill stomachs, those who do not serve as soldiers strive to become functionaries, and the men of the small villages, failing in this, do nothing, and the work of the fields and house falls upon the shoulders of the women. One chronicle states that occasionally the man of the house crochets a stocking or minds the baby for a short period.

LOST RECORDS TRACED.

Dominion Archivist Discovers Important Documents in the South.

Dr. A. G. Doughty, C. M. G., has returned to Ottawa from his visit to Louisiana and Mexico, with an exceptionally good haul of archivistic information. The ancient connection between New France and the Mississippi Valley has resulted in a remarkably large number of documents of interest to the former finding their resting-place in the latter region. Some of these are of such importance that it is a subject for some surprise that they were allowed to leave Canada. From Louisiana a flow of documents seems to have taken place; many of these are ecclesiastical, referring to affairs connected with the see of Quebec. Dr. Doughty spent most of his time in Louisiana, but paid a brief visit to Mexico, got an idea of the nature of the Mexican Archives—which comprise 70,000 volumes.

The results are most valuable. Letters exist there from Frontenac, Laval, LaSalle, Tonti, La Forest, Allonez, Hocquart, Vaudreuil, Bigot; even from King Louis himself, as well as from Sir Guy Carleton and Murray. One interesting document is a petition containing the signatures of Abraham Martin, Couillard and Hebert, three out of the eight original settlers who came out with Champlain. Hebert was the first man to cultivate the soil in New France. No specimens of the signatures of these pioneers has hitherto been known to exist. Another is La Salle's last letter to Tonti. Among the documents discovered are a number of Nova Scotia Church records, taken away by the Acadians, at the time of their expulsion. Many of these will be of great value in the researches which the Department is prosecuting into Acadian genealogies.

Important discoveries were also made among the three thousand Kaskaskia documents, of which Dr. Doughty examined a thousand. One thing which he found was a register of sentences passed by Governor Clark, which throw much light on the administration of justice in his time, and go to show that the general impression as to the absence of law and order in that era is incorrect. Many of the papers on Indian affairs properly belong to Canadian affairs; indeed, one letter from Sir Guy Carleton actually belongs to the series of letters on Indian affairs, published in the last volume of Archives, and the place in which it should be inserted can be seen on examination. An odd find was a project for the Government of Illinois, a proposal for an elementary form of administration, which is written in French, but on English paper and in an English handwriting; it is unsigned and undated. Copyist are already at work on many of these finds.

A feature of Dr. Doughty's work was his arrangement of a network of reciprocal services. At Tulane University in Louisiana, for example, he found that the authorities have forty boxes of papers which have never been examined, and he has induced them to have these looked over and such of them as refer to Canada copied and forwarded here. From St. Louis will come in due time a catalogue of documents in the hands of the Historical Society of that city. In Detroit, where there are many records of interest to Canada, and in many other places he has engaged the co-operation of local workers in the field of research. So far as the Mexican Archives are concerned Dr. Doughty has secured the aid of the Carnegie Institution and the University of Texas in extracting such portions as are of Canadian interest. These arrangements are reciprocal, Dr. Doughty being able to assist these investigators in many matters, especially with regard to documents in London and Paris, where the Canadian Archives Bureau maintains staffs of copyists, who, at no extra trouble can render valuable assistance to investigators on this side of the Atlantic.

Canned Goods.

Never forget when buying canned goods that when once the can is opened the contents should be immediately turned out. As long as the can was tightly closed—air tight—there was no danger, but it is unsafe to use food that has stood in open cans.

Corn Griddlecakes.

For corn griddlecakes take one cupful of buttermilk, one cupful of sweet cream, two eggs, salt and sugar to taste and a level teaspoonful of soda. Thicken with cornmeal and bake on the griddle.

Fashion's Echoes.

The tailor made is once more the garment of the day.

Broadcloth will be in the lead for dressy tailor gowns.

Men's overcoats are being cut shorter, less full and more form fitting.

A black broadcloth suit looks handsome with the panels of the skirt finely braided.

A revival of the deep oblong buckle is noticeable among the attractive styles of the hour.

Velvet collars are seen on many of the coats this season, and some of the more dressy ones have pipings of velvet on the front.

The "one night" represents a bag novelty. It carries gown, neckwear, necessary brushes and combs and has space for a few other articles.

Cleverly "blended" furs are the recourse of the economically disposed these days. So skillful is the manipulation of fur skins that only the expert can say whether imperial sable is what it seems or merely artfully handled marten.

The Oily Menhaden.

The oily character of the menhaden is familiar. It is caught for its oil, which is tried out in factories. Menhaden fishermen use purse nets, which are tarred to preserve them. To keep their hands from sticking to the tarred nets they rub on them a freshly caught menhaden, handling it somewhat as they would a cake of soap. So oily is the menhaden that the simple pressure thus applied is enough to bring through the scales oil sufficient for the purpose.

IN CANADIAN ROCKIES

CLIMBING THE "GREAT" CANADIAN GLACIER IN B. C.

Twenty-Five Miles Across the Snow Field, Five Miles of an Ice River 1,800 Feet In Thickness—"Great" Glacier Is More Explored Than Any Other In America Because of Its Convenience to Reach.

The word glacier is naturally associated in one's mind with Switzerland, yet this great North American continent, which has within its limits mountains, rivers, waterfalls, and other natural beauties, excelling in size and grandeur similar attractions in the Old World, possesses also among the heavily wooded Selkirks and the Rocky Mountains of the Pacific slope glaciers, which in size, beauty, and majesty surpass anything to be seen in the better known country of the Alps.

Along the Pacific coast flows the warm Japan current. The evaporation from this stream of warm water is very rapid, and, as the prevailing winds blow eastward, the heavily laden clouds pass over the low Coast and Gold ranges which skirt the shore, but on striking the higher and more rugged Selkirks and Rockies, cooling takes place rapidly, and the precipitation takes the form of snow during the greater part of the year. In the short northern summer there is not time for the snow which has fallen to melt and flow away. Consequently, conditions are most favorable for the formation of lakes of snow and rivers of ice, and this is exactly what glaciers are.

One of the largest of the Rocky Mountain glaciers in British Columbia, says The Montreal Standard, is the "Great" or "Illecillewaet" glacier. It is twenty-five miles across the snow field or neve, and the lower part or ice river is estimated to be from one to five miles in width, and 1,800 feet in thickness. This glacier is more often explored than any other in America, because it can be reached so conveniently. The foot of the glacier is only about two and a half miles distant from Glacier Station, on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. At that place are several Alpine guides brought over every year from Switzerland to conduct parties of tourists across these great ice fields.

Exploring the "Great" Glacier.

The ascent of one of these vast ice rivers is an experience well worth the while, although a trying one to the novice in the science of mountain climbing. The outfit consists of heavy woollen underclothing, a knickerbocker suit, a pair of stout hobnailed shoes, woollen stockings, a thick sweater, a pair of rough doeskin gloves, a combination alpenstock and axe, and a coil of rope, several cakes of chocolate, and, most likely, a flask of general comfort and encouragement. It is an easy journey to the foot of the glacier, over trees and rocks. As the glacier is approached, one comes to the moraine, or stretch of rocks and stones, which, in ages gone by, has been carried down by the glacier and left there as it melted. For a couple of hundred yards the mountain climber makes his way jumping from rock to rock. Then he comes face to face with the great sheet of ice.

Full of Perilous Chasms.

The glistening track which looked so smooth and easy through the telescope on the observatory of the hotel, is now seen to be full of chasms and crevasses, often of great width and of a depth past finding out. Just at the foot of the glacier, ice caves and green grottos stretch inward, out of which trickled clear, cold, blue-green streams, the water of the slowly melting glacier. Hundreds of these take their rise from under the mass of ice, and, uniting, form foaming mountain torrents which rush pell-mell down the slope to become tributaries of the larger rivers.

At the foot of the glacier the ice wall looks to be only twenty or thirty feet thick, but during the ascent, if one lies flat to hang for a moment over the edge of some chasm in an attempt to penetrate the icy depths, the thickness of the glacier appears to be hundreds of feet. These chasms or crevasses have been at one time but mere cracks, no wider than the blade of a knife. The cracks gradually increase in size, until at times they are a thousand feet in length, a hundred feet wide, and of a depth interminable.

Cautiously making one's way, by the support of the alpenstock, one of the most interesting sights is that of rivers of water, caused by the melting of the glacier, flowing over this river of ice. The water flows for some distance on the surface until a crevasse is reached. Down these chasms the water leaps, making in many cases beautiful waterfalls. Sometimes deep wells or moulins are formed, filled with water. In other cases the giant aperture is, to all appearances, dry, but on listening the sounds of subterranean streams are heard echoing through icy tunnels far below.

Chopping an Ice Stairway.

When a particularly steep place on the glacier side is reached, steps in the slopes are chopped out by the guide. The rope is fastened round his waist, and then around the waists of the remaining members of his party, who are "strung on the line," like beads on a necklace, at intervals of about twenty feet. This is done in order that any unfortunate who "takes a tumble" may be hauled up into place again on the perilous path. The slant on the glacier side is sometimes 50 per cent., and for short distances more. A wall of ice rises in front, and bit by bit, placing the feet carefully in the niches cut by the guide, the daring climber surmounts the obstacles and comes out finally on the snow field or neve, which is in itself the course of the glacier.

The moisture of the air is precipitated on the tops of the high mountains during practically the whole year in the form of a fine, granulated, sandlike snow. Under the influence of cold and pressure this is compacted into the hard, clear ice of the glacier proper. Layer upon layer of this forms under the newly-fallen snow, and in the lower tracts the snow disappears entirely, the solid ice reaching the surface.

Over the neve or snow region it is difficult, but not so dangerous climbing. The snow is perhaps fifteen to eighteen inches deep, and it is just a case of patient plodding in the footsteps of the burly guide till the highest point is reached, where a short rest is taken and a snack of the aforesaid comfort. The ascent has occupied perhaps seven or eight hours. There are no hospices on the summits of these mountains, as there are in Switzerland, and perforce the return journey must be immediately begun. The descent is, of course, easier, but it must be made none the less carefully. In a sense, it is more tiring, as every one can vouch who has attempted to hold himself back from being precipitated down hill for a duration of several hours. In the late evening the hotel is reached after a day of strenuous toil, but one which has, nevertheless, paid for itself in new experience, in wonderful views of snow and ice.

Moves 180 Feet a Year.

The rate or flow of each glacier varies according to the steepness of the mountain slope and the pressure of the ice mass. The Great Glacier flows about 180 feet in the year. Some flow more rapidly. The great Agassiz, sixty years ago, explained to the world this hitherto mysterious phenomenon, and since that time observations have been made by means of scientific instruments which prove that glaciers move slowly.

The glacier not only moves onward down the valley till the melting point is reached, where the heat of the sun is sufficient to counteract the movement of snow and ice, but the "foot" of the glacier recedes or advances according as the summer is long or short, hot or cold. If a hot summer, the foot of the glacier will recede perhaps 50 or 60 feet. If the melting has not been as great as usual, the foot of the glacier will reach a point further down the valley.

Senator George A. Cox.

Senator George A. Cox, president of the Canada Life Assurance Co., is, says The Globe, one of the outstanding figures in the financial life of Canada. Senator Cox is a Canadian, having been born in Colborne, Northumberland County, May 7, 1840. His parentage is English. He attended the public and grammar schools of Colborne until February, 1856, when he entered the service of the Montreal Telegraph Co. After two years' service, and when only eighteen years of age, he was placed in charge of the agency at Peterboro'. He remained there for thirty years, and has still extensive interests in that city. He was Mayor of Peterboro' for seven years, being returned four times by acclamation. In 1871 he stepped into the Provincial Parliamentary field and won West Peterboro' from W. H. Scott. The election was set aside, however, and in the following year he was defeated by a majority of one. In 1887 he again contested the same riding for the House of Commons, but was defeated by 16 by James Stevenson. In 1878 he became president of the Midland Railway, holding the position until 1884. During his term the amalgamation of the Grand Junction, Whitby & Port Perry, Victoria & Toronto and Nipissing Railways was effected, and the consolidated roads sold to the Grand Trunk. It was in 1884 that Mr. Cox became president of the Central Canada Loan & Savings Co., and in 1885 a director of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. In 1890 he became president of the latter. He is president of the Western Fire and Marine Insurance Co. and the British America Fire and Marine Insurance Co. Senator Cox is a Methodist, a temperance man, Bursar of Victoria University, and President of the Ontario Ladies' College.

Mark Twain's Indecision.

Mark Twain in his earlier days did not enjoy the prosperity which came later in his career. In a conversation with William Dean Howells on one occasion, the subject of literary vicissitudes was broached by the humorist.

"My difficulties taught me some thrift," he observed. "But I never knew whether it was wiser to spend my last nickel for a cigar to smoke or for an apple to devour."

"I am astounded," observed Mr. Howells, "that a person of so little decision should meet with so much worldly success."

Mark Twain nodded very gravely.

"Indecision about spending money," he said, "is worthy of cultivation. When I couldn't decide what to buy with my last nickel, I kept it, and so became rich."

His Head Saved.

In the House of Commons no incident is greeted with more hearty laughter than that of a member who, after an eloquent oration, plumps down on his silk hat on the bench behind him. A young member who had just made his maiden speech sat upon his new silk hat. There were roars of laughter. An Irish member immediately arose and gravely said: "Mr. Speaker, permit me to congratulate the honorable gentleman upon the happy circumstance that when he sat on his hat his head was not in it!" This remark upset the dignity of the House, and the Speaker called "Order, Order," amid roars of laughter.

Tycho Brahe.

It was the great eclipse of Aug. 21, 1560, that turned Tycho Brahe into an astronomer. He was in his fourteenth year at the time, a Danish boy of noble origin, and had been destined first for the army and then for the law. But the accuracy with which the eclipse was predicted impressed him with the belief that astronomy was a divine thing, and thenceforward he devoted his life to it. The debt of astronomy to Tycho Brahe not only for his own work, but as the man who shaped the genius of Kepler, can scarcely be overestimated.

Dinner In a Bell.

In the tower of Erfurt cathedral hangs a huge bell ten feet high and thirty feet in circumference, weighing thirteen tons. Within this in July, 1713, dined ten of the town's most opulent burghers on dishes cooked in a kitchen temporarily erected on the beam that supported the ponderous mass of tintinnabulary metal. To celebrate this repast medals were struck, having on the obverse the portraits of the guests and on the reverse the representation of the curious scene.

Tired Doctoring

How many people in Canada are tired doctoring? How many have gone from one doctor to another searching for the health they cannot find? How many, disheartened and hopeless, are wondering today if all the sunshine and pleasure has gone out of life forever? They are the ones to whom Psychine is recommended by people who were once as they are but who today are healthy and happy. We can only mention a very few of the many here, but listen to what they say. It's the grandest news ever given to suffering men and women:—

MR. JAMES HERRELL, Springhill, N.S.—

"I was taken down with La Grippe, then Pneumonia and Typhoid Fever, which soon affected my lungs. I was under the care of several physicians, who regarded my case as hopeless. I found a cure in Psychine."

MISS ELLA WOOD, Brownsville, Ont.—

"I was so weak I could hardly drag myself across the floor. I could not sweep the carpet under any consideration. Many times I dropped utterly helpless from fatigue. I found a cure in Psychine."

MR. ALEX. MATHESON, Braemar, Ont.—

"My physician advised me to go to another climate. He told me that my lungs were seriously affected, and that I could only live a short time. I found a cure in Psychine."

MISS ADA M. CHILDS, Florence, Ont.—

"For many months my father had a very bad cough and rheumatism through his chest. He suffered great tortures, and had given up all hope of recovery. He found a cure in Psychine."

MR. BRYCE ALLEN, Jarvis, Ont.—

"I tried medicines, and doctors prescribed for me, but I got no relief. With lungs and stomach diseased, nervous, weak and wasted, I began to use Psychine. With two months' treatment I found a cure in Psychine."

These people were tired doctoring, just as you are. They thought life held nothing for them but pain and suffering and that terrible feeling of weakness and despondency. They found new life in Psychine, and what the great tonic and germ killer has done for them it will do for you. It stops the ravages of disease and repairs the damage done. The greatest builder-up of weak men and women ever given to the public, the greatest of all spring medicines is

CLOSING PEKING'S GATES.

Noisy Ceremony Performed Daily at the Chinese Capital.

The closing of the gates in Peking just because it goes on daily and may apparently go on daily for centuries to come is probably one of the "sights" least witnessed and talked of save by those foreigners who may have chanced to "run for it" near closing time. The daily performance is marked with a due ceremony which is quaint and full of interest to the intelligent onlooker, as the closing by no means signifies the mere bringing together of the heavy wooden doors and barring the emperor's highway against all comers.

At the appointed hour a preliminary signal is given by a large gong or iron shield being struck with a big iron bar fifty times in such quick succession as almost to defy calculation. This is followed by a signal of 100 blows repeated in precisely the same fashion three times. When the third and last cycle of gong strokes is entered on a number of old and at this season very much bewadded and muffled up old "Charlies" start a series of discordant yells to all and sundry to "hasten" or they will be shut out. This combination of signals is followed by a jostling stream of people in both directions.

Presently the rush slackens until only a solitary pedestrian or possibly a man on a donkey, full tilt, a belated rickshaw or a heavily laden cart struggles through. Then a movement is made with the gates, yelling bursts out afresh and another rush ensues, the gates being meanwhile half closed and occasionally opened a little way again until, the outgoers having meanwhile ceased, there is a final scrimmage to get into the city, and the process of closing, which has taken some half hour in all, is concluded.

The huge iron plated doors having clanged to, a monster iron pole is dragged up and placed across them on iron supports, being retained in position by a padlock of enormous proportions and of the well known Chinese type. There are in all nineteen gates, and the same ceremony is observed at each, but at such thoroughfares as the Hatamen there is naturally more traffic, and the process is probably proportionately longer.

Trifles.

We are often reminded of what Mrs. Chillingly said when asked who managed her household. Her reply was, "My husband has agreed that I may decide upon all the small questions if I will let him decide the large ones." As small ones arose many times each day and large ones only at intervals of months, it ended in her "ruling the roost."

The Baroness Macdonald.

The Island of Jamaica is the birthplace of three distinguished women, including Lady Holland, the Empress Josephine and the Baroness Macdonald of Earnscliffe, widow of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. Perhaps this accounts to a degree for the political affinity that at times manifests itself between Canada and Jamaica. Lady Macdonald is a daughter of the late Hon. F. J. Bernard, a member of the Privy Council. She was born, as stated, in Jamaica in 1836, and at an early age was taken to England, where she was educated. Her first visit to Canada was at the age of eighteen, when, with her mother, she came to Ottawa on a visit to her brothers, Messrs. Hewitt and Richard Bernard, then young lawyers at the capital. There she met Sir John A. Macdonald, and in the year of Confederation, 1867, they were married. During many critical moments of his career as Premier Lady Macdonald was at his side. It was after her husband's death that Queen Victoria created her a Peeress in her own right, with the title Baroness Macdonald of Earnscliffe.

Canadians Eat of Catalo.

In serving as the principal feature of its recent annual dinner at the Hotel Astor, New York, a giant roast of catalo, a hybrid of the American bison and domestic cattle, the Canadian Camp achieved a double victory in supplying its guests and members with an entirely novel dish and at the same time one which all gladly partook of even after learning what it was. Dr. G. Lennox Curtis, president of the camp, was toastmaster, and speeches were made by Col. Jones, Hon. Dr. Reaume, Commissioner of Public Works for Ontario; Jean Prevost, the Quebec Minister of Fisheries, and others. Dr. Curtis read a letter from Lord Minto, Viceroy of India, and former Governor-General of Canada, expressing regret that he had been unable to find during his brief residence in India anything sufficiently rare to send for the camp's feast.

Oxford's Oldest Woman.

One hundred and twelve years is the age that was claimed for Aunt Dinah, as Mrs. Hannah Stewart, the centenarian colored woman of this county, was affectionately called by her many friends. She passed away at the House of Refuge at Woodstock recently. Where she came from originally is not known. It is believed she was a slave for many years in the southern States. About sixty years ago she ran away and came to this, the free country, settling in East Zorra. There she lived until the House of Refuge was built, twelve years ago, when she took up her residence there. At that time it was generally conceded that she was a centenarian. In spite of her extreme age she was bright and active. She was very reticent about herself, and no person could learn from her the eventful story of her life.

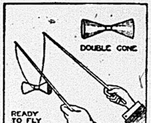
THE FLYING CONE.

An Odd Chinese Toy and How to Make and Work It.

This interesting and in many respects remarkable toy had its origin in China, where the peddlers use it to announce their coming by the humming sound that it produces. Of course it was made of heavier material and of a larger size in its original farm, but when it was introduced into Europe it became so popular that men, women and children played with it and an eminent scientist, a professor in the University of Cambridge, spent much time in studying its movements and finally succeeded in explaining it mathematically.

To make the toy fit together two cones at their points. Then get two small, light sticks about two feet long each and fasten a string a yard long to an end of each.



THE FLYING CONE.

The player holds the other ends of the sticks, one in each hand, allowing the string to rest on a table. He then places the double cone near the right hand stick at the middle joint, where the cones are joined. The illustration will show you how they are joined.

The cone having been placed near the stick on the right, the player lifts that stick steadily, and the cone begins to revolve and run down the string. Now toss the cone up a little way and bring the string back to its original position, and the cone will continue to revolve. Repeat this slight movement until the cone is revolving rapidly.

As you acquire skill with it you may toss the cone high into the air and catch it spinning on the taut string or you may make it run up the stick to your arm.

Don't be discouraged if you cannot do this at first. Keep at it, and it will give you more fun than spinning a top ever did when you become expert. Various other feats with it will suggest themselves when you have become sufficiently skillful.

Tuning Church Bells.

The bellmakers were finishing a huge bell for a magnificent church. Beside them stood a piano. One struck a note of music from the instrument; the other struck the bell a blow with a hammer.

"Cla-a-ng!" sounded the mellow metal, and the man beside the bell took up his tools and chipped a small piece from its edge.

"Still too high," he said. "Now, once more, George."

Again the piano was struck, and again the bell was struck.

"Still high," said the workman, and he carefully chipped off another piece of metal.

"Won't you ruin that bell, chipping it so?" a clergyman stopped to ask.

"Why, bless you, no sir," said the bellmaker. "You always have to chip a bell to bring it to the required tone. Every bell, after it's done, has to be tuned, and the only way to tune it is to chip it this way."

"GOOD GROWING WEATHER."

When the New Scalp Antiseptic Is Used.

A good head of hair is as much a "crown of glory," for man as it is for woman, notwithstanding all the poetry on the subject applied to the female sex exclusively. In the season when flies bite, the bald-headed man can sympathize with the Egyptians who were so sorely plagued on account of the children of Israel. Why not try Newbro's Herpicide? Others have been benefited and are loud in its praise. It cleanses the scalp, kills the germ at the root of the hair and by keeping the scalp sweet, pure and wholesome, the hair is bound to grow as nature intended, regardless of the temperature. Try it and be convinced.

Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

CZAR PAUL'S WIG.

An Officer Tweaked It and Won a Bet and Promotion.

Paul, the eccentric czar of Russia assassinated in 1801, was very particular as to his dress and considered trifling matters as of supreme importance. This peculiarity was once taken advantage of by an officer of the guards, Major Vaksel, to win a bet. The major, the wildest joker in the army, wagered several hundred rubles that he would tweak the tail of the emperor's wig on parade.

The very next day the emperor happened to be present at an early parade and, as destiny ruled it, took a position for a moment immediately in front of the daring major. Breathless with excitement and terror, Vaksel's companions beheld that rash officer's right hand steal slowly from his side, rise to the level of the czar's neck and give the wig's hanging tail a most decided tweak.

In an instant the emperor's face, pale with fury, was turned upon Vaksel's countenance, which, however, only reflected an expression of childlike innocence, mingled with the most deferential astonishment.

"Who dared to do that?" asked the enraged czar, his eyes giving flashing evidence that his most dangerous mood was upon him.

"I did, your majesty," said Vaksel, who, however his heart may have fluttered, managed to preserve outwardly an unruffled calm, together with an expression of innocent surprise. "It was crooked, your majesty," he added, in a confidential undertone. "I straightened it for fear the younger officers should see."

Paul's countenance cleared at once. He stared fixedly, however, at Vaksel's innocent looking face for some seconds. Vaksel admitted afterward that this was the trying moment, and he had said to himself, "If I waver I'm lost!" Then the czar spoke, and spoke so that all might hear.

"I thank you, colonel," he said.

If ever a step in rank was gained by the purest effrontery it was so acquired on this occasion, and Vaksel left the field, not only promoted to a coveted position in the guards, but richer by many hundred rubles as the result of his wager.

THE SACRED LOTUS.

There Are Pretty Legends of Song and Story About Its Fruit.

Concerning the rich fruit of the lotus, which grew luxuriantly in the Nile, many charming legends have been told. It was believed that it was so delightful that those who ate of it would never leave the spot where it grew, but for it would abandon home and friends to spend their lives in a dream of serene delight. Homer, in the "Odyssey," mentions the lotus eaters who lived on the northern coast of Africa and records their attempts to detain the followers of Ulysses by giving them the fruits of the lotus to eat, so that they should never wish to leave the spot where it grew.

The same poetical idea is known to the Arabs, who call it the "fruit of destiny," which is to be eaten in paradise, and it is on this foundation that Tennyson built his charming poem of the "Lotus Eaters." This mythical lotus has been identified by several botanists with that indigenous to Tunis, which is a thorny shrub, with berries of the size of an olive.

Mungo Park found a species of lotus in Central America bearing berries of a delicious taste, which, on being dried and pounded, made very wholesome and pleasant bread. The lotus fruit found in Tunis has a stimulating, almost intoxicating effect, and it is therefore probable that this plant furnished the foundation of the ancient legends.

The sacred lotus of the Egyptians was a fine aquatic plant, dedicated to Osiris and Isis and regarded in Egyptian delineations as signifying the creation of the world. Distinct from this lotus was that known as the blue lotus of the Nile, also a sacred plant. Both these species of lotus occur frequently as religious symbols and decorations in the temples.

The Name of the Vatican.

The Mons Vaticanus is sometimes said to have received its name from vaticinium, an oracle or prophecy, for tradition says that Numa chose the Vatican hill as a sacred place from which to declare to the people the messages he received from the gods. It is not, however, one of the seven hills on which ancient Rome was built, but forms a part of the ridge beginning with the Janiculus and ending with Monte Mario, all of which was outside the ancient limits of the city. In our day the name is applied only to the immense pontifical palace adjacent to and connected with the basilica of St. Peter's.

Alleged Grain Robbery Is Being Investigated.

WALTER AND JOHN LUCAS ON TRIAL BEFORE MAGISTRATE FLINT — CAR FROM WHICH CORN WAS SAID TO HAVE BEEN TAKEN WAS 1400 POUNDS SHORT IN WEIGHT.

The police court room was this morning filled with people who appeared to be interested in the proceedings against Walter and John Lucas, two brothers, who were jointly charged with theft of flour, grain, etc., from bonded G. T. R. cars, at the station yard here.

Mr. Anderson, County Attorney, represented the Crown, and Mr. W. Carnew looked after the prisoners' interests.

Mr. Carnew stated that Walter Lucas pleaded not guilty and elected to be tried by Magistrate Flint.

THE TALE OF AN AUGER.

Mr. Shorey, sworn, said he was a general merchant at Canifton, and on the 3rd of March sold to Walter Lucas an auger and some other goods. Lucas did not tell him what he wanted the auger for. It was a 2-inch auger. A few days after John Lucas was arrested Walter Lucas saw witness and asked him if any parties had asked him (witness) about the auger. Witness answered no. The auger produced resembled the one he sold to Lucas. Never bought flour or grain from either of the Lucas'. Witness knew Mrs. Bruce Foster, whose daughter, Grace, came to his place with a message.

Mr. Carnew — "I object to anything that may have been said between the daughter and witness, relating to my client, Walter Lucas."

Mr. Anderson — "I will stop. You can take the witness."

Cross-examined — Walter Lucas was at witness' place of business sometimes twice a week. Lucas' account, in less than a year, was about $75. Never knew of Walter Lucas having bought any hardware except the auger. A detective was at witness' place, and he told him about the conversation in reference to the auger. The sale of the auger was not an unusual occurrence.

Re-examined—Witness had known Walter Lucas for some time and had never known him to have been in trouble before.

OFFICER HAYES TESTIFIES.

Police Officer Hayes, sworn, said that, in company with Detective Harnett, she visited Walter Lucas' place. They found two augers. The [illegible] Canifton for the purpose of boring holes in a hay rack. Witness examined the hay rack but there were no holes bored in it. This was on the 3rd of April. Mrs. John Lucas was at the place at the time. Witness had a conversation with Miss Callery, postmistress at Canifton, in reference to the case in question. Some coupling pins used on the G.T.R. and a hammer bearing the G. T. R. mark were found on the premises occupied by Walter Lucas.

Cross-examined — The G. T. R. detective appeared on the scene on the 29th of March, and Walter Lucas was arrested that day. They made the search of the house that day and in the evening placed Walter Lucas under arrest. He was arrested on the road between his home and Holloway. Walter did not make any explanation as to when or how the coupling pin and other articles which they found came into his possession. The bolts were in a trunk and a number of articles were on top. A search was made for two-inch auger holes, but none were found. On the Saturday evening previous to the arrest of Walter Lucas some loose corn, in considerable quantity, was found in the river on the Canifton road.

Re-examined — On the 3rd of April there were no holes bored in the hay rack.

DETECTIVE HARNETT.

Mr. James H. Harnett, sworn, said he was a G. T. T. officer and came here to look into the matter of car-breaking. He was here a day or two before he laid any information. Witness saw Mrs. John Lucas and had some conversation with her. Walter Lucas and his father were there at the time. This was at the father's residence, in Thurlow. This was on the 28th of March. Before Walter Lucas was arrested, witness, in company with Officer Hayes, made a search of the premises where Walter made his home. The auger produced was found up over a door in a shed, and was partially covered up with straw. They also found some fish bolts, and a large chisel stamped "G. T. R." They arrested Walter Lucas whilst he was riding upon a load of hay, on the road leading to Holloway. Constable Hayes questioned Lucas as to what he wanted with the auger, and he said he purchased it to bore some holes in a hay rack. Lucas did not tell, when he was arrested, where he purchased the auger.

After the arrest witness and Officer Hayes examined the hay rack and there were some small holes in the rack, but no two-inch auger holes. Witness received from Mr. Coppin a large wooden plug which had been used in plugging a hole in the bottom of a car.

Cross-examined — Walter Lucas, when arrested, said that the auger was purchased for the purpose of boring holes in the hay rack he was driving. The auger at that time had not been shown to Lucas. Lucas told the truth as to where he purchased the auger. Witness was positive that the auger was hidden, being covered with straw. Made a search about the premises for two-inch auger holes, but could not find any.

A CORBYVILLE WITNESS.

James Hume testified that he resided at Corbyville. He remembered a car of corn coming to that village. He weighed the grain and car, and 58,600 pounds was the weight. The number of the car was 5286. The gross weight of the car and corn when shipped was 60,000 pounds. Witness examined the car. The seals were all right and had not been broken. In the under part of the car he found a large plug, which showed that the car had been bored. The corn was loose in the car. It was about a two inch hole.

Cross-examined — Could not say that cars had before come short of weight, as he does not receive the invoice. Witness weighs the car and contents and sends the weight to the Corby Company's office at Belleville. Witness never made a minute examination of the plug or hole in the car. He made no measurement of the hole.

MRS. JOHN LUCAS.

Mrs. John Lucas testified that Walter Lucas was a brother of her husband, John Lucas. She had some conversation with the post-mistress at Canifton about this matter; also had a conversation with Detective Harnett and Police Officer Hayes. She pointed out to the officers the wagon that belonged to Walter. Told them where Walter was the afternoon before the robbery occurred. On the night of March 21st, when she went to bed, there was no flour or grain in their house. Walter was there that afternoon. Walter and Smily, another brother, left in the early evening and later John went away. She got up later in the night and let her husband in. Witness did not remember telling the post-mistress that some one was putting grain in their house during the night. In her bedroom were four bags of flour. She saw printed marks on the bags, but could not tell what the marks were. She took the flour out of the bags. When she got up in the morning her husband was already up. Did not hear him when he arose. Did not see any person come in with her husband. She had no idea of the time when he came in. When she saw the four bags of flour in her bedroom she was surprised. Did not see Walter again until after John had been arrested. This was two days after. He asked her if she would like to move down to his place, and she subsequently went down Walter never mentioned anything to her about the flour or grain being in the house. Never saw the auger produced. The trunk in which the bolts were found, belonged to her, but she was unable to state how they came in it. When John was arrested witness never told Officer Hayes that the four bags of flour had been in her house for two months. Never told Moorman that such was the case. Walter moved her down to his place two days before he was arrested. She did not see any sacks of flour or grain at Walter's place.

At this stage of the proceedings the court adjourned until 3 o'clock.

GRIT LIE NAILED.

MR R R. GAMEY, M. P. P., WILL NOT BE APPOINTED CHAIRMAN OF THE TEMISKAMING MINING COMMISSION.

It was stated yesterday by certain Grit papers that Mr. R. R. Gamey, M.P.P., for Manitoulin, was to be appointed chairman of a certain mythical mining commission. To-day's Globe contains the following pretty effectual denial of the rumor:

"The revival of the rumor that Mr. R. R. Gamey, M.P.P. for Manitoulin, will be appointed upon the Temiskaming Mining Commission, was referred to Hon. Mr. Cochrane last night. He emphatically stated that the appointment of a commission of the nature mentioned had not been considered by the Government, consequently no person or persons had been named or thought of for positions on any such body, should one eventually be appointed.

"Mr. Gamey himself sent a written denial to the Press Gallery of the Legislature.

"It would not be surprising if a commission of the nature mentioned was not appointed by the Government. There is a strong inclination, The Globe understands, in favor of dealing with the limit and the lease of mineral sections on the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario right of way through officials of the Mining Bureau."

A Small Fire.

The explosion of a lamp in a bedroom at Mr. Gordon's, opposite the G. T. R. station, gave the Fire Brigade a run at 3.50 this afternoon. Little damage was done.

There was introduced in the Legislature, on April 3rd, 1906, "An Act to Amend the Public Schools Act," the sponsor of the Act being Mr. Craig, M.P.P. It provides that:

65a.—(1.) (2) Every such school board may by resolution appoint a duly qualified dental surgeon to be dental school inspector for such city, town or incorporated village at such salary as such school board may see fit, and it shall be the duty of such inspector to visit the public schools of such city, town or incorporated village for which he is appointed every six months and to make an examination and inspection of the teeth of all public school pupils attending such public schools who shall not have produced the certificate in subsection 1 of this section provided for.

(3) It shall be the duty of every teacher of a school so visited by such dental inspector to require every pupil so to be examined to submit to such examination and for such purpose shall direct that such pupil accompany such dental inspector to the hall of such school room or other convenient part thereof apart from the other pupils, there to be so examined by such dental inspector.

(4) Such inspector upon such examination being made shall forthwith report to such teacher in writing whether the teeth of such pupil are sound and healthy or whether they require treatment by a dental surgeon.

(5) It shall be the duty of the parent or guardian of every pupil whose teeth are found to be in such condition as to injure the health of the pupil or other children attending by a dental surgeon, and no such pupil shall be permitted to attend such school until he has produced a certificate to the teacher from a dental surgeon stating that the teeth of such pupil have been properly treated and cared for.

The New York Giants still seem able to go a few. They beat the Providence Greys 11—0 in an exhibition game yesterday.

The Cincinnati National Leaguers did not do so well, being beaten by the Buffalo Eastern Leaguers by 4—0.

At the Readville, Mass., trotting meeting, whose early closing stakes amount to $27,000, there is no deduction from money winners, all entries paying 5 per cent. whether they get into the money or not. Every one of the six early closing stakes will be contested on the three-heat plan, or practically the dash system.

Racing at Yarmouth, England, is conducted by the municipality, which owns the course. The meeting yielded sufficient profit to enable £500 to be allocated to the relief of the poor rates. Formerly the bulk of the profits, when the races were under private management, were given to local hospitals and other charities. This is the second year the corporation has managed the races, but the first year's profits were devoted to course improvements.

Presented Gold Locket To Departing Member.

At the regular meeting of the Brotherhood in connection with Holloway street church last night a presentation took place. One of its members, Mr. Albert H. Woodley, who, since the inception of the society has held the position of treasurer, resigned, owing to the fact that in a few days he leaves the city for Detroit, Mich., where he intends to reside. At a suitable time during the evening Mr. Woodley was called to the front and Mr Wm. Embury read an address expressive of regret at the departure of Mr. Woodley, but wishing him every success in his new field of labor. On behalf of the Brotherhood, Mr. Charles Wills made the presentation, which took the form of a handsome gold locket. Upon one side of the locket was the recipient's monogram in raised letters, A H W., and upon the reverse side was the inscription "Presented to A. H Woodley by the Brotherhood of Holloway St. church, Belleville, April 10th, 1906." Although taken by surprise Mr. Woodley replied in a feeling and appropriate manner. The Brotherhood feel keenly the loss of such a valued member.

WRECK OF THE VALENCIA

Grounds For Censure Expressed in House of Commons.

Liberal Members Call Upon Government For Better Coast Protection — Hon. Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Marine, In Reply, Tells What Government Is Going to Do—Mr. Borden Shows Inefficiency From Liberals Statements.

Ottawa, April 11.—In the afternoon session of the House yesterday Mr. Macpherson (Vancouver) called attention to the serious wrecks that have occurred of late off the coast of British Columbia. He instanced the Balfour, the King David and the Valencia. The Government had furnished no chart to mariners, and they were still relying upon one made by Great Britain in 1859. The inspection of ships was superficial and insufficient, and the system of lights and signals along the coast obsolete. He recommended additional and more up-to-date lighthouses and that whistling buoys and gas buoys should be installed. He also recommended that Government vessels be fitted up to patrol the dangerous portions of the coast.

Mr. Smith (Nanaimo) said the Government was not responsible for natural causes that brought on disaster. Still, he thought the Government was to blame for careless inspection of vessels and for accepting the certificates of inspection from officers of the United States, as they were notoriously unreliable. He urged compulsory pilotage and the establishment of a wireless telegraph system on the Pacific Coast, under Government ownership.

Mr. Sloan (Comox, Atlin) urged a thorough hydrographic survey of the waters of British Columbia.

Mr. Brodeur's Reply.

Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Marine, said a report has just been received which attributes the loss of the Valencia to the inefficiency of the captain. The same finding was made by the American commission. He admitted that a chart was badly needed. The Government of Canada was at work upon a new chart. A large vessel was being built for that purpose, and surf boats for patrol and rescue purposes. A wireless telegraph system would be installed as soon as possible. The United States Government accepted our certificates, and it was necessary to give and take. He intended to readjust and increase the pay to lighthouse keepers, and declared himself entirely willing to appoint a member of the lighthouse board from British Columbia. He would visit British Columbia the coming summer.

Mr. Borden's Criticism.

Mr. Borden thought it peculiar that the report upon the loss of the Valencia should only just have been received by the Minister, when he found, from a brief visit to the library, that it had been published three weeks ago in the newspaper owned by the Min the Government showed gross inefficiency on the port of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Smith (Nanaimo) had charged inefficiency and incompetency upon subordinate officers, which had been tantamount, in certain cases, to manslaughter.

Mr. Borden commented upon the wreck of the Valencia. Had the Salvor been supplied with proper boats and appliances, 75 people could have been saved. He quoted from an address by Mr. Smith (Nanaimo), defending the Government on the ground that the Salvor was subsidized for the salvage of property, and only incidentally for the saving of life.

A number of bills were introduced and read a first time.

In answer to a query by Mr. Borden, it was announced that the contracts for building the eastern section of the G. T. P. will be awarded by the council on Thursday.

A Yukon Scandal.

Hon. N. A. Belcourt (Ottawa) and Hon. Clifford Sifton (Brandon) were under the limelight at the evening session, in connection with a valuable hydraulic mining concession in the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. Belcourt admitted that he was to receive $100,000 in stock for legal services rendered and to be rendered his old friends and clients, but he disclaimed any improper act or intent. The company had received no favors from the Dominion Government.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said there had been rumors to the effect that members of Parliament were accepting employment to use their influence in Parliament with the Government. He thought these practices should be discountenanced and a bill had been brought down with that end in view. He knew nothing personally about the accusation against Mr. Belcourt. These hydraulic concessions were necessary to develop the country. Some should be cancelled. The present Minister was rapidly weeding them out.

Mr. Lennox (S. Simcoe) said that Mr. Belcourt personally was not so much to blame. The Government had encouraged this sort of thing.

An interested auditor of the debate last evening was W. W. B. McInnes, commissioner for the Yuko

Exporters.

Two or three loads of exporters sold at $4.75 to $5 per cwt. Export bulls sold at $3.75 to $4.12½ per cwt.

This lamb weighed 70 lbs. and cost $8.50, and was cheap considering that it was the best lamb seen on the market this season.

THE EDUCATION BILLS

Hon. Dr. Pyne Presents Two "Non-Contentious" Measures.

Recommendations That Will Appeal to the General Public—To Inaugurate Many Reforms—Call For a Superintendent and An Elective Advisory Council—Commission to Investigate Text Books.

Toronto, April 11.—The feature of yesterday's session of the Legislature was the bringing down of two educational bills by Hon. Dr. Payne. The first refers to the Education Department, the second amends the present Public Schools' Act. A full explanation of the bills was given by the Minister, and both Messrs. Harcourt and Ross on one side and Mr. Whitney took part in the discussion. While the legislation was commended by the Opposition it was claimed that there was no new principle in either bill.

Hon. Dr. Pyne expressed confidence that the House would clearly recognize that it was the desire and object of the Government to do something for the cause of education that would commend itself to the masses of the province. He had pleasure in introducing a bill which was non-contentious. Dr. Pyne explained that in using the term he made no reflection on the former administration of the Department. The bills were outlined as follows:

Department of Education.

Appointment of superintendent of education and establishment of advisory council subject to the Minister.

The superintendent to have general supervision of all classes of provincial high, public and separate schools, professional training schools and examinations for teachers of said schools, art schools, public libraries and the inspectors of schools and libraries, and may make recommendations to the Minister.

Advisory council to consist of seventeen members, fifteen being elective and two ex-officio. The latter will be the president of the University of Toronto, who will be chairman, and the superintendent of education, who will represent the Minister, but without vote. The other representatives will be: three from University of Toronto, one each from Queen's, McMaster and Ottawa Universities, university representatives to be members of their senates; two elected by high school teachers; four elected by public school teachers; one elected by separate school teachers; two elected by public school inspectors. School representatives to be elected by closed ballot. First election to be held in October next.

Advisory council to be consultative committee to confer with Minister, and their advice he may either accept or reject. Will exercise executive powers in connection with university and departmental examinations as may be conferred by university and Department of Education. Present educational council to remain in office till this year's ex- [illegible] grants to be distributed as heretofore, except that no account be taken of average attendance. Legislature to be asked to give special grant to the rural public and separate schools. Grants to be made first, among municipalities according to population; second, between public and separate schools, according to average attendance. Further sub-division of grants to public and separate schools to be on similar basis to that of high schools, namely, the salaries paid the teachers (percentage on all over minimum), character of accommodations and value of equipment. Provision is also made for distribution to territorial schools, poor schools and continuation classes.

Government asks power to appoint commissions of enquiry into management of any institution under its control, question of school books and any other educational question. This has immediate reference to text-book question.

Public Schools' Bill.

Trustees of any number of schools may determine that continuation classes shall be conducted. School rate for maintenance. Qualifications of teachers to be settled by regulation.

Powers given boards of urban municipalities to acquire and expropriate land for school sites.

Municipal councils required to collect a sum at least equivalent to special grants made by the Legislature to the rural schools. Township levy of $150 raised to $250, and an additional $150 for every assistant teacher. To be applied exclusively to teachers' salaries. In addition to sum provided township council towards each teacher's salary, the trustees of every rural school shall pay to the teacher where there is only one, and to the head teacher where more than one at least the following sums: $250, where assessed property of public school supporters is at least $160,000; $200, between $80,000 and $160,000; $150, between $40,000 and $80,000; $100, between $30,000 and $40,000; $50, less than $30,000, and $150 to every assistant teacher. Minimum salaries will not come into operation till next year, but county grants and additional township grants will be payable this year. If teachers accept smaller salary the inspector may suspend certificate.

Public school inspectors cannot be dismissed except by a majority vote, and then only with approval of the Lieutenant-Governor. Allowance for postage and stationery increased $1 for each school section, provided total over his allowances shall not exceed $1,800. Reorganization of system of public school inspection promised next session.

Abolition of present county and city model schools and establishment by September, 1907, of additional normal schools. Number not decided yet; to provide each year for training about 200 students. District model schools retained, and possibly model schools in one or two of the less advanced counties. No more third-class certificates to be issued, and products of normal schools to hold interim second-class certificates to become permanent after probation. Limitation of lower grades of certificates to certain classes of schools.

Cost of the New Normals.

Speaking of the proposed additional normal schools, the Minister said that in case there were four the capital expenditure would be about $200,000 and there would be necessary about $75,000 a year for maintenance.

Concluding, Dr. Pyne said he hoped the members would carry a copy of the bills away with them so as to thoroughly acquaint themselves with their provisions.

Not New, Says Harcourt.

Mr. Harcourt, speaking for the Opposition, said that while the bill was not non-contentious, it would certainly be dealt with in a non-partizan way. The bill provided for the expansion of the present system, but there was no new principle, except probably, the feature fixing the minimum salary of teachers. He was not speaking in a hypercritical way. He assured the Government that if the evolution of the bill proved to be upward the bill would commend itself to the people.

Mr. Harcourt hoped that there would be no partizan considerations in discussion of the bill.

Cheap School Books.

The Premier agreed with this last sentiment, and asserted that the new consultative council would mean a great change from the old, whose members were appointed by Government, whereas the body would now be elective.

The text book question wasn't in abeyance as Mr. Harcourt had suggested. The question was the first educational one that the Government would have taken up, but for the large number of contracts, still unexpired, made by the late Government. A commission had been appointed because the Government would have great trouble in getting the information wanted. It was proposed to dive down to the foundation.

"We propose to find out what will be a proper, reasonable price for such school books in this province, and, when we find that out, we propose to see to it no matter what the difficulties may be, that the people of the province shall receive text books at that price," declared Mr. Whitney.

What Ross Did.

Mr. Ross claimed that during the last 20 years of the late Government's regime a revolution in the school system had taken place. He cited the abolition of third-class certificates, the establishment of Normal schools, and public school inspectors, and the extension of school libraries to cover the whole province.

"The bill in many respects commends itself to this side of the House," admitted Mr. Ross. The consultative council was not a new idea. It would probably have the same authority as the old. No doubt, it would prove useful. Mr. Ross didn't think a superintendent of education was necessary. He was doubtful if it would work well, and foresaw a possibility of friction.

Revision of the Ballot

Premier Whitney has introduced in the Legislature a bill to do away with the printed number on the Ontario ballot.

The Opposition objected to the stipulation in the Toronto General Hospital bill that medical students other than those of Toronto University be admitted only by the giving of special permission by the board of trustees of the hospital. The debate arose out of the reading. The Premier said that the clause would be reconsidered.

There was a grist of bills up for a third reading, which was given to 13 of them.

The appointment of a railway and municipal board by the Government was discussed when Hon. J. S. Hendrie's bill was in committee.

OPERATORS' ALTERNATIVE.

Arbitration Scheme Proposed by Them —Independents Express Views.

New York, April 11.—A counter proposition was made by the anthracite coal operators at their meeting yesterday with the representatives of the United Mine Workers of America. This proposition rejects the arbitration plan offered by John Mitchell, president of the United Mine Workers, and suggests the following instead:

The anthracite coal commission of 1902 should be requested to reconvene and consider, whether any circumstances have arisen since April 1, 1903, which would justify a modification of its award of that date, in respect only to the following subjects:

(1) Wages.

(2) As to adjustments of complaints through the conciliation board, or otherwise.

Award to Bind For Three Years.

Any new award of the commission shall be binding for a period of three years.

The joint conference adjourned after having been in session about half an hour, to meet again on Thursday, at 1.30 p. m.

President Mitchell would not comment on the answer of the operators, but said the meeting of the scale committee, held last night, would consider it.

At the close of the meeting, a copy of a letter from independent operators who held a meeting at Wilkes-Barre yesterday, to the operators' committee, was made public. The letter expressed the conviction of the independent operators, that any agreement to arbitrate with the United Mine Workers would be an unjustifiable surrender to anarchy and mob violence.

Make Consumers Pay.

The independents also suggested that any increase in the cost of production could be added at once to the market price of coal. On this point, the letter said:

"If consumers (naturally, perhaps, thinking only of their own comfort and convenience) are so indifferent to the demands of law and order as to compel us to abandon a contest for right and decent government, that we are ready, if necessary, to undertake, they should pay the cost of the surrender that they compel."

To Bring Body Home.

Toronto, April 11.—John Turner, aged 21 years, son of John Turner, 85 Essex street, of this city, was killed last Sunday morning in the switching yards of Jajunta, Cal. He was struck by a train and died instantly. The parents were notified by wire, and ordered the forwarding of the body to Toronto.

Montreal Snow-Covered.

Montreal, April 11.—An exceptionally heavy fall of snow for this season of the year took place Monday night. Over seven inches of damp snow falling in eleven hours.

Substitutes For Tobacco.

Sailors on long cruises sometimes exhaust their tobacco. Thence untold misery and many ingenious efforts to create a tobacco substitute. Tea and coffee make the best tobacco substitutes. They smoke freely in pipe or cigarettes, and their taste and aroma are not unpleasant. But they burn the mouth and rack the nerves. Rope yarn—the untwisted parts of rope and oakum—is smoked by sailors as a last resort. Bark, peeled from the hoops of salt beef and pork barrels, is also smoked when the limit is reached. These things smoke abominably, and the black fumes that they give forth from the sailors' mouths are always accompanied by oaths and imprecations. Yet many a desperate sailor has smoked them in the hope of appeasing his tobacco hunger.

Property Loss From This Outbrea the Volcano's Temper Is Estimated at $20,00,0—Thousands Are In Dire Distress, and It, problem Is Their Relief—Army of 100,Men and Millions Requirec

Naples, April 12.—The whole of the Vesuvius district, as far as Naples, Caserta and Castellemarie, is one vast saharan desert. Reports last night from all sides state that the fall of ashes is not so heavy as it has been for the last few days, and that the ashes are much finer, and from this it is argued that the prospects are much brighter.

Yesterday was a disquieting day in Naples. The people, alarmed by what has happened, have deserted their shops, and the manufactories are nearly all closed. The crowds are in a temper for any excess. It would only require a spark to start a conflagration.

Worst Is Over.

Conditions last night in the section affected by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius are greatly ameliorated. The fall of volcanic ashes has diminished, and scientists express the opinion that the volcano has spent itself. All the papers recommend that the public be calm, pointing out the improved condition of affairs. The papers also eulogize Director Matteucci for his courage in returning to the ruined observatory on Mount Vesuvius, and sending thence messages of encouragement and expressions of confidence that Vesuvius soon will quiet down.

San Gennaro Partly Buried.

The Village of San Gennaro has been partially buried in sand and ashes, and several houses have collapsed. At that place three persons were killed and more than twenty wounded.

In the road at Torre del Greco three persons were found dead from suffocation.

The people who remain at Torre Annuziata are in danger of perishing from starvation, the shops having been closed. Rations for 200 persons have been sent thither.

The distress among the tens of thousands of fugitives is appalling. The Government has forwarded supplies of food and money.

Although the report that Sarano has been destroyed is denied, it now is officially admitte Ottajano has been buried.

3,000 Been Killed.

The numbkilled there, and in the surroundfages, is not known, but 3,000, it eved, will be a low estimate.

The loss terty by the volcanic outbreak is ated at $20,000,000, and it is ared that 50,000 persons have bendered homeless.

So widespis the catastropho caused by thption of Vesuvius, it is estimated it will require an organized bod100,000 men and the expenditure ny millions of dollars to raze housade unsafe for habitation by thcumulation of ashes and cinders he roofs; erect temporary huts fuge for the thousands who have tobliged to flee from their homesar the roofs of buildings that met be saved; extricate from the ruf fallen structures and bury the de:

Gaynor-Greene to the Jury.

Savannah, Ga., April 12.—Judge Emory Speer, at 12 o'clock last night, concluded his charge to the Greene and Gaynor jury, and the fate of the contractors charged by the Government with frauds amounting to more than $1,500,000 now rests with the twelve jurors, who, for three months, have listened to evidence and arguments.

Circus Man Bailey Dead.

New York, April 12.—James A Bailey, 59 years of age, died at Mount Vernon late yesterday. Mr. Bailey's name is familiar as a showman, and in the later years of his life he was managing director of the Barnum & Bailey circus.

Seeding Acreage Increased.

Winnipeg, April 12.—The first report of seeding shows the average increase in acreage will be from 10 to 15 per cent., although many districts have 20 to 30 per cent. increase, and a number as high as 50 per cent. and over.

A Formal Demand.

According to the statement made by Phillip's counsel yesterday, it was nearly nine miles of frontage and is worth over a million dollars.

The National Trust got an order from Master-in-Chambers Cartwright stating that service of injunction on J. E. Jones, counsel for Phillips was sufficient, and this was carried out.

"Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before."

When Canadians look abroad and contrast the conditions in their own country with those of many other lands they are perfectly justified in concluding that their lot is an enviable one. No civil commotions disturb the country's peace: wars or invasions do not cause the loss of a moment's sleep to any citizen. The crops are gathered; the cattle graze in our fields with no thought of marauders. Of severe, destructive tempests, typhoons, cyclones, what have we to do with them or they with us?! Our people from one end of the Dominion to the other may lie down in peace each night, undisturbed by such thoughts. Of "burning mountains," casting out red glowing boulders over the landscape, filling the air with fetid gases, and threating destruction for miles around, we know nothing, save by hearsay or by a visit to foreign lands. And yet there is much to disconcert our people, and cause them anxiety, if not in their physical welfare, then in their pockets.

Our ruling politicians at Ottawa are having a high time with the public wealth while the prosperity lasts, spending and contriving to spend with an easy conscience, as if the good times were to last forever. The day of reckoning will surely come, and is not far off, when those gentlemen, if they are still in power, will stare aghast at the problems before them. If they are not in power the same problems will rise for others to solve.

But students of public affairs in Canada may well, when they have time to sit down calmly and think it over, ask themselves, "Do the men now at the head of the country's affairs ever stop to think of coming years, of the tremendous financial responsibilities which they are soon to take up and for ten years to continuously carry, whether this country be prosperous financially or whether it be in depression. Do they know they are marching into the teeth of a financial problem which should make every staid and shrewd financier almost tremble at the thought of the weight and magnitude of the obligations?"

As has been time and again pointed out by Conservative members of Parliament, the Government is not only heaping up ordinary expenditures by millions every year, but they are marching in the teeth of five or seven years to come, when they shall be obliged to borrow $147,000,000 to take up old and maturing debts and at least $100,000,000 for extraordinary capital expenditure on railway account. No provision has been made for this time of trial in the ten prosperous years we have had, nothing but increasing prodigality in laying about for methods upon which money can be spent in great amounts.

In 1896 the Liberal-Conservatives took $28,000,000 of taxation out of the country, last year the Laurier Government took $54,000,000. Whereas in 1896 the total Conservative expenditure was some $41,000,000, last year the total expenditure was $78,000,000 The Hon. Mr. Patterson, when reminded of these enlarged figures, says the people don't feel the tax; "they have so much more to spend." But there will come a time when they will feel it, when there will come a tightening of the financial reins, and a stern examination of the public credit. You cannot take $71,000,000 to six millions of people and they not feel it. It comes directly out of their pockets. It makes $15 per head of the population, or nearly $90 for every family in the country.

Truly, if we have no wars or natural convulsions to contend with in Canada, we have "troubles of our own" to look forward to at no very distant day, when the old world bankers come to be appealed to to tide over the financial problems that will be ours.

What this will mean for the Dominion we have had a glimpse of in Ontario. A province out of debt, with incalculable natural resources, found it difficult to float a few millions of debentures to cover the debt on a railway yielding large profits. It does not mean that the credit of Ontario is not good, for it is undoubted. It means that money is hard to get, unless at a sacrifice.

The Dominion Government will be confronted witht his difficulty when in a few years hence it will fall to their lot to negotiate loans for some hundreds of millions of dollars upon most probably a falling revenue and the inevitable su poor crops in the cou rosperity does not last alw ur rulers seem to act as a permanent attendan ir administration.

London, Ont., will have 95-cent. gas after July next, and in five years will have 90-cent. gas. The rent of meters will be cut in two. They are now $2.40 per annum. The Postmaster-General's position becomes the more startling when his own rule for the conduct of officials is considered. Mr. Aylesworth dismissed the Cannington postmaster, whose salary was $700 or $800 a year, on the ground that no officer must engage in any business outside of the public service. This offender had been forced, through circumstances which he could not control, into a small interest in a store, and the situation did not in the slightest degree interfere with his work. Nevertheless, out he had to go for his crime. Surely if a $700 official is required to give his time exclusively to the country, the $9,500 official who makes the rule ought to be called upon to respect his own principles.

Ever since the news of the first Japanese victory over Rusian troops was printed in the naive press of China the Chinese have been discussing among themselves their chances of being delivered from the humiliation of foreign interference. And behind all the chatter of newspapers and teashop habitues there has been an example of effort for the attainment of the national desire set by powerful leaders of the people of whom Viceroy Yuan Shih Kai is the chief representative. In a few short months an efficient army of 50,000 soldiers has been drafted from the undisciplined, badly trained bodies of men masquerading a year or two ago as the military defenders of the country, and this army is but the nucleus of one which it is intended shall be large and strong enough to meet all the requirements of defence from whatever quarter they may come. And with the development of the inexhaustible and varied mineral resources of the country will ensue a cessation of orders for armaments from the European markets. Already arsenals employing thousands of hands supply the Government with guns, rifles and powder, and their white managers are gradually disappearing, one by one, as the foreign instructors did from Japanese warships.

Annual Report of Game Commission.

SEVERAL SUGGESTIONS MADE—CHIEF GAME WARDEN SAYS SPECIAL PRIVILEGES TO INDIANS SHOULD BE ABOLISHED.

The annual report of the Ontario Game Commission has just been issued, and contains some interesting information particularly in view of the present movement towards the further protection of game in the province.

The Chief Game Warden in his report refers to Mr. Fitzgerald's appointment as follows:

Changes have been made in staff of wardens in charge of districts. Mr. H. K. Smith, of Belleville, having had charge of the eastern district, has been succeeded by Mr. Geo. W. Fitzgerald, of Peterborough. Mr. Fitzgerald has had the misfortune to be laid up from a severe attack of paralysis, with, I regret to say, the prospect of his being able to resume the duties of the position very remote.

The warden speaking of the necessity for further protection of the game says:

I regret the causes necessitating my drawing your attention to the imperative necessity for more stringent laws being enacted for the purpose of curtailing—or even abolishing—the special privileges at present accorded Indians and so-called settlers, trappers and poachers in general, who locate in the back woods of the Province, not for the alleged purpose of clearing land and farming, but for the purpose of enabling them to lead a lazy, loafing life, supplying lumber camps, summer hotels and tourists with game during the respective close season.

I regret the necessity of again drawing your attention to the continued abuse and misuse of settlers' hunting permits. When the system of resident deer hunters' licenses was introduced—the Government realizing that it might be a hardship to many of the poor settlers in the back townships, compelling them to procure a $2 license—authorized by order-in-council the issuing of hunting permits, presumably only for men actually residing on and working their farms in the exempted districts. Complaints are made that professional men, storekeepers and artisans residing in towns and villages in the exempted districts claim to be settlers, and claim the right to hunt and kill deer on settlers' permits. Most of these men are better able to buy licenses than many hunters living in older settled portions of the Province who make strong complaints of the injustice. I respectfully suggest that the word farmer be substituted for settler, to prevent an agitation ensuing amongst the thousands of licenses for the abolition of these permits.

5,595 deer hunters' licenses, 230 moose licenses, and 413 non-resident licenses; also 2,495 settlers' permits were issued. These returns are not complete, several issuers having failed to make returns.

Eggs vs. Beef as the Basis of Bodily Power.

(London Free Press.)

The Cambridge crew won an easy victory over Oxford in the 'Varsity boat race on the Thames on Saturday. From the start to finish they gave a display of wonderful physical endurance in deep contrast with the fagged and exhausted condition of their rivals. The Oxford men stuck to their work in a most plucky and persevering manner, but were overborne by sheer superior energy and physical fitness. Not for a moment was the issue of the great race in doubt. It is quite possible that the result was one of merely unequal strength, that Cambridge had the pick of a class of men of higher natural stamina. But it is very remarkable that so great a disparity should be exhibited where in most years the contest has been of a keener edge and more equal measure. Why was it that this year the one kept on a magnificent stretch, playing with their rivals as a cat with a mouse, coming in an easy winner unblown, still intensely "fit" and able to have made their own distance, where the other "showed evident signs of distance" and "collapsed at the finish?"

We are likely to hear more of this in connection with the new principles of dietary of which the Cambridge men have become noted disciples. While one-half of the British nation seems "all torn up" over the meat question, there is a large and rapidly-growing class who have forsaken a meat diet altogether. Among these is a band of athletes who are said to be breaking record after record on a diet which contains none of the staples which but a few years ago were deemed essential to the nation's greatness. That the "roast beef of old England" is the underlying cause of her world power, once accepted as a Gospel truth, is now seriously and by many vehemently disputed. Shakespeare's saying that "beef is bad for the wits," is quoted as merely broaching the subject of its dietetic imprudence.

One learned medical man, Dr. Haig, of London, gives strong testimony on the point based on his own conversion. He turns to Nature's teaching, and regards man as a frugivorous animal, who has been making the terrible mistake of eating the foods which are right and proper only for a carnivorous animal. He has thus no difficulty in understanding that some 75 per cent. of what are called the most terrible "diseases" under which the race suffers, its increasing insanity, increasing cancer, debility and deterioration may be due to this neglect of Nature's laws. These, in the doctor's opinion, are not diseases at all, but poisonings by unnatural foods. He finds in this a simple and complete explanation of the fact that these "diseases," and the sorrows and suffering attendant upon them, have been increasing by leaps and bounds during the past thirty years, as people have tended to take more and more meat with the other stimulants and poisons it has brought in its train.

Dr. Haig maintains that if anything is to be done for the physical improvement of our race, it will not be by attending to exercises alone, and neglecting that from which muscle power is obtained, namely food. "If alcoholism is to be conquered it can only be done by attacking its cause; and the same for our ever-increasing mental, moral and physical debility, and decay; we must look and see that these things have a meaning and an explanation; that their increase is the result of a change in the national foods which, during the last thirty years (coincidently with the increasing prosperity of the people), has become so much more marked."

The adherents of this doctrine are likely to seize upon the glorious physical triumph of the Cambridge rowing crew as an expression of its truth, since it has been given out that they have relied upon their strict vegetarianism to "pull them through."

SCIENCE PREVENTS BALDNESS.

The Fatal Germ and Its Remedy Now Facts of Science.

It is the rarest thing in the world for a man to be necessarily bald. No man whose hair is not dead at the roots, need be bald if he will use Newbro's Herpicide, the new scalp antiseptic. Herpicide destroys the germ that cuts the hair off at the root, and cleans the scalp of dandruff and leaves it in a perfectly healthy condition. Mr. Mannett, in the Maryland Block, Butte, Mont., was entirely bald. In less than a month Herpicide had removed the enemies of hair growth, and nature did its work by covering his head with thick hair an inch long, and in six weeks he had a normal suit of hair. Death Calls Away A Noted Showman.

Mount Vernon, N.Y., April 11.—Jas. A. Bailey, owner of Barnum and Bailey's circus, died at his home, "The Knolls," Corcoran Manor, Mount Vernon, at 5.20 o'clock this afternoon. Mr. Bailey was suffering from erysipelas. The attack was a virulent one, although four physicians and a corps of trained nurses worked over him until the last minute, they could not save his life.

Mr. Bailey, who was 59 years of age, was taken ill last Thursday night, after returning from Madison Square Garden. He was a remarkably strong man, and there was every hope of his recovery until Monday, when the disease spread to his arms. It is believed that he knew he was going to die yesterday, because he called Mrs. Bailey to his bedside and communicated a message to her. Soon after he sank into a coma, and was lucid only at times.

The last of Mr. Bailey's family, a brother, died at Holly, Mich., on Jan. 12th last.

The late Mr. Bailey was born in Detroit in 1847. Orphaned in childhood, he worked for some time on a farm and then became connected with a show and later with a theatre in Nashville, Tenn. He served as Guller's clerk in the rebellion, and at its conclusion re-entered the show business. In 1878 he became partner in the Argue and Bailey circus, which became consolidated with the Barnum show in 1881. After Barnum's death deceased became the proprietor, and bought the Forepaugh show. He visited all the cities of Europe at different times with his circus.

SECRETARY SHAW PAYS FOR TWINS.

TOOK COMPASSION ON A MEMBER OF HIS DEPARTMENT WHO WAS BEHIND DOMESTICALLY.

Washington, April 11—Some months ago Secretary Shaw undertook a statistical investigation of the financial condition of the employees of the Treasury Department. They were asked under assurance of privacy to fill out blanks showing their debts and other items. Among those to reply was an excellent employee who was behind in his account and Secretary Shaw called him into his office and asked him what the trouble was.

"Well," explained the employee, "I kept even till the last pair, and since then I haven't been able to square up."

"Last pair? What's that—pair of shoes, pair of jacks, or what?"

"The last pair of twins," explained the man.

"For goodness sake, how many pairs have you?"

"Oh, they come in pairs at our house; we've had three pairs now. I managed to keep even with the doctor till the last pair came."

The Secretary reached down into his pocket. "How much did that last pair cost?"

The man estimated the figure.

"Well," declared the head of the department, "I guess you're entitled to have the slate cleared. I'll pay for the last pair." And he did.

How May Better Church Singing Be Brought About?

With the idea of training his church choir and congregation to sing sacred music with greater intelligence, and incidentally to develop the musical talent of the church members, the pastor of a Methodist church in Indianapolis has established a "chair of ecclesiastical music" in the church. A well-known music teacher of Indianapolis will be in charge of this school, and attention will be given to the elementary studies, such as time, tune and pitch, and to articulation, transposition, theory, hymnology, etc.

This school for training churchgoers to sing will probably meet with favor, and there are few who would deny the necessity for it, says the Woodstock Express. In Canada, choirs are regarded as knowing much about singing, but a far different condition exists in the average congregation. Those who have given the matter any thought must have noticed that in any church the choir produces more than half the volume of sound in the singing of hymns. This condition might be expected in the singing of hymns with which the congregation are unfamiliar, but it is much the same whether the hymns are not well known or are quite familiar. "Let all the people sing" is the expression of a hope rather than a command or even a request. Ministers at times bewail the conditions in singing, but few of them have done anything practical to bring about a remedy. It would be impossible for many of them to follow the example of the Indianapolis pastor, but something could be done to improve the singing. Some of those who long to be useful in church work, but who find little to do might undertake to teach singing or might meet the expense of having a singing master give a few lessons. Those who can't sing, but could sing, if trained, should be given a chance, and the result would be brighter services in the church.

Another matter in regard to church singing, which might well claim attention, is getting a congregation to sing the words of the hymns correctly. Several examples of singing a wrong meaning into the words of a hymn might be given. These mistakes are not in the unfamiliar hymns, but are in hymns which have been sung till they are so familiar that congregations have them almost by heart. In one hymn congregations everywhere may be heard singing, "For Christ counts everything but loss." This is a meaningless statement, and a glance at the hymn in which it is supposed to appear shows that the writer did not make such a statement, but gave the command, "For Christ count everything but loss." A stanza of another hymn is sung as though written:

"Jesus keep me near the cross,
There's a precious fountain,
Free to all a healing stream,
Flows from Calvary's mountain."

Practically all of those who attempt to sing may be heard rendering this stanza as given here, although many of them would see a mistake in the second line if they took the trouble to examine it. It may be argued that such mistakes are not of great importance, but they spoil the effect of the hymn for some people, and a congregation could soon be broken of the habit of making such mistakes. Also, the person who made a list of such mistakes would do churches a favor.

SPRING SIGN.

(Chicago Record-Herald.)

In the spring a woman's fancy always starts her on the scent,
And her dauntless heart is gladdened by each sign that reads "For Rent."

She may know before she enters that the price will be too great,
That's a trifle, though, that never causes her to hesitate.

From the cellar to the garret she examines and explores,
Peering into every closet; looking back of all the doors.

With unmeasured satisfaction she goes tripping through the halls,
Making side remarks concerning the cheap paper on the walls.

If upstairs somewhere somebody on a bed of anguish lies,
Does she leave the room unentered which the sick one occupies?

If you think so you're mistaken. She must step inside and see,
For to her it doesn't matter much how bad the case may be.

"Is the landlord," she asks sweetly as she steps upon the stairs,
"Likely, if he gets good tenants in the house, to make repairs?

"Is he one whom cultured people could have dealings with? If so,
Are the neighbors folks that people of refinement ought to know?"

And when going she takes pleasure, as she makes a sad grimace,
In declaring that she couldn't live in such a dingy place.

What a joy to gentle woman each returning springtime gives
As she sets out to discover how each other woman lives!

50,000 H.P. IS WANTED

Says Hydro-Electric Report Covering Western Ontario.

Requirements Will Be Increased to 100,000 Horse-Power Within Five Years—Prices For Power Based on $12 Cost at the Falls For Various Places in District Groups Adopted—Sources of Hydro-Electric Power.

Toronto, April 12.—The first instalment of the report of the hydro-electric power commission of Ontario, dealing with the southwestern section of the province from Toronto to Sarnia, described as the Niagara district, has been made public. Yesterday the Provincial Secretary laid a copy on the table of the Legislature.

At the moment that it was tabled the chairman of the commission, Hon. Adam Beck, rose to say that it did not deal with points east of Toronto that may be supplied with power from Niagara Falls. A second report, dealing with these localities, would, Mr. Beck said, be submitted during the next week.

Makes No Recommendations.

No recommendations are made; the commissioners were not asked to devise a scheme by which consumers may be supplied at the lowest possible cost. The presentation of the report lays the charge at the door of the Government, and it will be for Mr. Whitney and the assembled wisdom of his Cabinet to proceed with the data that is now before them.

50,000 Horse-Power.

The report is a mass of figures and data dealing with the Niagara district. It shows that the demand for electric power will be regulated by the prices as compared with steam, and that plants which use exhaust steam for purposes of heating could not be expected to use electricity for manufacture only. It shows that at least 50,000 horse-power could be obtained within a reasonable radius of Niagara Falls as soon as transmission lines can be laid, and this will be increased to 100,000 in five years. The reports says that the trend of private corporations has not been to compete for business and reduce prices, but to amalgamate or otherwise destroy competition, and then fix the price to suit the circumstances. This has led to many smaller concerns being forced to instal steam plants to make their own power, and "specific illustrations of this are found in Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal."

Savings For Toronto.

In order to show the savings that will accrue to the municipality, and to individual consumers from the distribution of Niagara Falls power at the lowest cost price, Toronto is taken as typical of the other cities affected, and as shown in an appendix to the report.

It is understood that the price which the Toronto-Niagara Power Co. is to receive from the Toronto Railway Co. is about $35 per horse-power per year for stepped-down power at the receiving station, compared with a cost, under some municipal arrangement, say, of $18.10 per h. p., $217,200 is the saving in the cost of power to the Toronto Railway Co. The city could save $53,000 annually on the pumping service, and the Toronto Electric Light Co. could save about $145,000 per year. This latter sum the taxpayers must pay in profits to the companies delivering the power. The total annual savings to be made by the distribution of electrical energy from Niagara Falls, on a cost basis, aggregates $515,000.

Prices For Power.

Based on the assumption of power at at $12 at the Falls, the total cost of power delivered at Hamilton for a full load of 16,000 horse-power at the substations would be $15.36. At Toronto, with a full load 50,250, it would be $16.53, or $16.91 for three-quarter load, and for half load $17.15. This is for twenty-four horse-power per annum. Comparative prices for full load of twenty-four hours would be: St. Mary's, $25.86; Stratford, $20.48; Tavistock, $23.50; Berlin and Waterloo, $17.36; Guelph, $18.39; Galt, $17.35; Brantford, $16.87; St. George, $17.14; Brampton, $26; St. Thomas, $31.89; London, $19.51; Tillsonburg, $24.30; Ingersoll, $18.81; Woodstock, $18.26; Paris, $18.12; Chatham, $24.62; Sarnia, $29.28; Petrolea, $25.52; Strathroy, $27.82; Windsor, $27.18.

Groups of Power Centres.

The report of the chief engineer, Mr. Smith, follows the outline given by the commissioners themselves. He has selected certain groups of power centres as being independent of other groups, the transmission being distinct through the entire route from Niagara except as regards right of way and telephone lines, provision, however, being made by interswitching stations at Hamilton and St. George for interchanging loads for night repairs between these points and Niagara Falls. The groups decided upon are as follows:

Division 1—Hamilton and Dundas.

Division 2—Toronto, Milton, Brampton, Georgetown and Orangeville.

Division 3—Brantford St. George, Galt, Preston, Hespeler, Guelph, Waterloo, Baden, New Hamburg, Tavistock, Startford and St. Mary's.

Division 4—Paris, Woodstock, Ingersoll, Tillsonburg, London and St. Thomas.

Division 5 — Windsor, Walkerville, Wallaceburg, Dresden, Chatham, Thamesville, Bothwell, Glencoe, Strathroy, Alvinston, Oil Springs, Petrolea and Sarnia.

Respecting the last division it is doubtful, the engineer says, whether electrical distribution would be fully justified commercially at present owing to the small amount of power required and the great distance of transmission.

Sources of Hydro-Electrical Power.

In Southwestern Ontario there are a large number of small rivers possessing small water powers, most of which are already developed, but these are mostly suitable only for local purposes. These developments are found at Port Dover, Dunnville, York, Caledonia, Brantford, Paris, Galt, Elora, Ayr, New Hamburg, Preston, Hespeler, Guelph, Georgetown, Norval, Erindale, London and Springbank.

The only source of hydro-electric power considered in the report is the water of Lake Erie, utilized on the Niagara escarpment, which is feasible at various points extending 20 miles west of Niagara Falls.

The present Niagara companies, with their net effective development are as follows:

Cataract, 22,500 horse-power, 10-hour.

Canadian Niagara, 40,000 horse-power, 24-hour.

Ontario, 50,000 horse-power, 24-hour.

Electrical Development, 37,500 horse-power, 24-hour.

Cost of a Plant.

Mr. Smith deals with the purchase of power from one of the existing companies or as an alternative the construction of a new generating plant.

He estimates the cost of a generating plant at Niagara Falls as follows:

50,000 horse-power development, $5,786,560, or $116 per horse-power.

75,000 horse-power development, $7,019,584, or $94 per horse-power.

100,000 horse-power development, $8,631,168, or $86 per horse-power.

These figures are for 24-hour power.

The operating charges on such a plant would be as follows:

50,000 horse-power $544,300
75,000 horse-power 661,700
100,000 horse-power 811,100

Allowing for transforming losses of 2 1-2 per cent., the net amount would be as follows:

50,000 horse-power, net power, 48,750; yearly cost, $11.16; percentage of capital cost, 9.62.

75,000 horse-power, net power, 73,125; yearly cost, $9.05; percentage of capital cost, 9.63.

100,000 horse-power, net power, 97,500; yearly cost, $8.32; percentage of capital cost, 9.67.

These figures are based upon setting aside a sinking fund for replacements, and for rate of rental similar to that already in force in contracts between the park commissioners and existing companies.

Transmission of Power.

The estimates on transmission are based upon the purchase of a right of way over the entire district 100 feet wide between Niagara and Hamilton; 66 feet wide, between Hamilton and Toronto, and, 33 feet wide, alongside of highways or railways for the remainder. Steel towers similar to those of the Toronto-Niagara Power Co. are provided for. Estimates are also given on the cost of construction of cedar poles.

Routine In Legislature.

A number of bills were read a second time, among which was Premier Whitney's bill to abolish registration of manhood suffrage voters. Hon. Mr. Monteith's two bills covering horticultural societies and agricultural associations were read a second time. There was a lively debate on Mr. Hoyle's prospectuses bill, but it was left over to draft a clause to meet Mr. McKay's objections. A change was made in committee in the veterans land grants bill.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hanna an agreement with W. B. Converse for the manufacture of rope and cord at the Central Prison was ratified by the House.

A number of bills were read a third time.

The Legislature will adjourn this afternoon till Wednesday next.

Politeness of Children.

The politeness of children is only skin deep. One cannot help sympathizing with the little London girl who said sleepily to her hostess at a party she had not been old enough to enjoy, "Please, will you tell me which is the lady what's giving this party, 'cause I promised mummy to say, 'Goodby, thank you very much for the nice party,' and I can't go home till I've said it, and—and I do so want to get away from this horrible place!" But one's whole heart goes out to the little boy who, having greatly enjoyed one small insufficient chocolate, was asked sharply, "Well, Johnny, what do you say?" "More," answered Johnny.

Size of the Sun.

We sometimes see a huge ring or halo round the moon, occupying a space in the heavens so large that ninety moons' breadths would but just suffice to span it. Yet the body of the sun would fill all that space ere we had approached within 2,000,000 miles of him. Once on his apparent surface were we permitted to travel thereon and with the speed of an express train it would require five whole years of continuous journeying before we could make the circuit of this orb.

Superstition of the Turks.

The superstition of the Turks is nowhere so apparent as in their fear of the "evil eye." Jugs placed around the edge of the roof or an old shoe filled with garlic and blue beets (blue glass balls or rings) is a sure guard against the illusion. Whenever a pretty child is playing upon the street the passersby will say, "Oh, what an ugly child!" for fear of inciting the evil spirit against its beauty. The peasant classes in Turkey are of course the most superstitious because they are the most ignorant. They have no education whatever and can neither read nor write.

WHERE ENDICOTT FITTED

By BARRY PRESTON

Copyright, 1905, by E. S. McClure

Endicott was a duffer. There was no shadow of doubt about that. He could neither swim nor sail a boat; he played golf in a manner that set his caddy offering suggestions; his dancing was a cross between a prim walk and an awkward skip; he sat on a horse with as much grace as he would have straddled an elephant. Moreover, his lack of conversational powers had given him a reputation for taciturnity that was far from flattering.

"Why on earth Mrs. Saunders should ask him down for the month I can't see," one of the young women confided to a bronzed young fellow as they sat together in a vine made nook of the broad veranda one evening.

"Oh, that is the easiest part of the equation," he returned. "What sticks me is why the deuce he accepted the invitation." Whereat they both laughed.

"He's the death's head at the feast," said she.

"Oh, he's harmless enough," her companion said easily. "He doesn't attempt to do things unless some one sets him up to it. He'd never have gone in the water this morning if Vandecken hadn't kept at him for an hour to come along with us. He's game in a way, though. We didn't know he'd got beyond his depth until he was half drowned. Thought he was splashing about for the fun of it. Not a yip did he make."

"IT'S DREADFUL," SHE WAS SAYING. "WHAT IS IT?" ASKED MISS WILMOT.

"It makes you awfully uncomfortable to have such an incompetent person about," said she. "I'm always imagining things when he's late at luncheon or dinner."

"Providence has a watchful eye for a certain class of individuals," said he, and they both laughed once more.

Meanwhile, at the other end of the veranda, Endicott sat on the steps with Miss Wilmot. If Endicott had been a different sort of chap he would doubtless have made desperate love to the lady. But Endicott knew his limitations, and, therefore, instead of telling her all that was in his heart, he sat beside her on the top step, twirling his hat, watching covertly the changing expressions come and go on her pretty face, and wished most devoutly that he were less of a duffer.

He was a big, heavily built young fellow, with a frank, boyish face and a laugh that was very attractive in its genuineness, if you ever managed to get well enough acquainted with him to hear it. Miss Wilmot had heard it many times when she was alone with him, and it told her much of the real man that lay beneath the awkward reticent exterior.

Just now Endicott's troubled gaze was fixed on some ragged bits of red cloud, the aftermath of a gorgeous sunset.

"I think I shall leave in the morning," he said uneasily.

"But you haven't been here a week yet," she said in surprise.

"I know," said he, "but somehow I don't seem to fit. If a fellow's going to be a success at a house party he should do many things well. Now, I do everything badly. I simply slow up everything I enter into and spoil all the fun for the rest."

"Nonsense!" she declared.

"It's so," he maintained. "I'm just a duffer pure and simple, and there's an end of it. So long as I stay, of course, out of courtesy to me, they'll drag me into all these things, even if it does spoil their fun."

"You shan't talk so," she said. "Come, it's time we were getting ready for that moonlight sail."

"If there's so much as a ripple on the water I'm sure to be sick," he observed gloomily. "That makes it very cheerful for the rest."

"You have an attack of pessimism," she laughed as she arose. "Salt water is the best cure in the world for that malady."

They went down the veranda together. At the door they found Mrs. Saunders talking excitedly to her guests, who were grouped about her.

"It's dreadful," she was saying. "All the servants have left, even to the stable boy, and they're strictly quarantined. Poor Mrs. Browne is frightened nearly to death."

"What is it?" asked Miss Wilmot as they came up.

"Why, the youngest Bowne child has diphtheria."

At the door they found Mrs. Saunders.

Endicott was stroking his hair thoughtfully.

"Those the people that own that new place back by the pines?" he asked.

"Yes," said Mrs. Saunders. "Dreadful, isn't it? Her husband is in the west, and she's nearly frantic. There isn't a soul about here that they can induce to go there."

When the party started for the pier Endicott stepped up to Miss Wilmot.

"I don't believe I'll go back tomorrow," he whispered. "Perhaps I can fit, after all."

"Of course you can," she said and thought no more of his words until they had reached the end of the pier. It was then they found Endicott was missing. After much shouting and a hurried search about the immediate vicinity they started out without him.

It was nearly 11 when they returned. Mrs. Saunders met them on the veranda.

"Where do you suppose Ted Endicott has gone?" she cried.

"Where?" chorused several voices.

"To the Bownes'. He is going to stay there until they can get a trained nurse from the city."

Endicott stayed even longer than that. He stayed until little Bob Bowne died. Then when the quarantine of the house was at an end he came back to the Saunders cottage to get his traps before he went back to town.

The house party made a hero of him. The men spied him coming up the path and carried him, protesting loudly, on their shoulders into the hall, where all the other guests assembled. They gave him a round of cheers, and every one wanted to grasp him by his hand first.

Vandecken made a little speech and told them what the doctor had told him—all about what Endicott had done and how he had held little Bob Bowne in his arms the night the child died. They tried to get Endicott to say something about it himself, but he merely reddened up and shifted uneasily from one foot to the other and finally blurted out: "Oh, pshaw! It really wasn't anything!"

That evening he sat on the steps with Miss Wilmot. They were quite alone.

"I knew you were just like that," she said.

"Like what?" he asked.

"Oh, I knew you'd not be found wanting in a crisis," she explained. "And I knew, too, you'd be just as modest about it as you were."

"Any fellow could do that. That wasn't anything," he said uneasily.

"You're a dear, brave boy," she said heartily.

"If I were"— he began.

"What would you do?" she asked. Her eyes were tempting him.

"If I were," he repeated, "I'd—I'd—ask you—oh, hang it! I'm not," he ended in confusion.

"Ted, dear," she said softly, "I'll spare you the asking—and—and say 'yes' now."

He sat for a moment in dazed silence. He could not comprehend it all. Then his eyes lighted wonderfully.

"Thanks," he stammered, "thanks very much." Which was eminently like Endicott.

"Brought Up" In College.

One of the most original characters of the Welsh pulpit was the Rev. Lewis Powell, Cardiff. While on a visit to Carmarthentown on one occasion he called at the college, and the students were all for the first time to pay him homage.

"Can I have the help of two of you, my boys, for a minute?" asked Mr. Powell.

"Yes, dear Mr. Powell," answered half a dozen of them at the same time.

"Well, I want two lusty boys, if you please," he remarked, and two of the strongest students were chosen. "Now, my boys," said the old preacher, "let me lay a hand on the shoulder of each of you, and you put your arms around me."

This was done.

"Lift me, boys," said Mr. Powell, and the students lifted him until he was head and shoulders above all present in the room. "Thank you, my boys," he remarked. "Let me down now."

This was done. Then one of the boys asked:

"What is the meaning of this, Mr. Powell?"

The answer was: "Well, some people look down on the church in Cardiff because Mr. Powell, the minister, was not brought up in college. I can go back to Cardiff now and tell them that I was raised in Carmarthen college and that I stood higher than all the other students."—London Tit-Bits.

Swedish Rule In America.

New Sweden was established in 1638 on the bank of the South river, the Delaware, on territory now embraced in the city of Wilmington, Del. The first settlement was of some fifty pioneers from Gothenburg in the ship Key of Calmar and the tender Griffin, under the direction of Peter Minuit, a discharged director of the New Netherlands. For a kettle and some trumpery they bought all the land on the west bank of the river from Cape Henlopen to the falls near Santickan, now Trenton, running back "as much inwards from it in breadth as they might want." The Dutch, who claimed the territory, fulminated threats from Fort Nassau, but prudently refrained from blows. New Sweden prospered from the start and soon controlled the trade of the Delaware. This prosperity endured until 1655, when Peter Stuyvesant invested and reduced Fort Christina, thus putting an end to Swedish rule in America.

THE AGE OF AN OYSTER.

You Can Tell It by the Lines on the Hinge of the Shell.

In some ways an oyster is smarter than the man who eats him, but in one respect the consumer has his victim beaten in the matter of wisdom. The consumer has learned the art of "making up" to conceal his age; the oyster has not. Any one who wishes to do so can find out just how old an oyster is. The lines in the groove of the hinge of the shell tell the whole story. These lines are a true index to the number of layers composing the shell, being, in fact, nothing else than their attenuated tails. One of these layers grows each year, and, no matter how hard the sensitive oyster may try to keep it from showing, it is bound to overlap its predecessor and leave a ridge which, no doubt, is just as annoying to the oyster tribe as an annual wrinkle would be to the human race.

Up to the time of an oyster's maturity these layers are arranged with regularity, but after that they fairly pile over each other, just as if the little bivalve's birthplace had crowded upon each other so rapidly that he didn't have time to spread out one new plate before another was right at his heels.

An oyster comes of age when he is four years old. Coming of age in the oyster kingdom means that he is old enough to take care of a family and go to market. Going to market is a disastrous undertaking and is generally the last of him, for a four-year-old oyster is particularly palatable, and people do not hesitate to pay a pretty good price for a pint or a quart of him. By this it must not be inferred that after an oyster has passed the four layer period and has five, ten or even a dozen wrinkles on his shell he is a back number and fit for nothing but to keep on accumulating wrinkles until he dies of old age. Indeed, there are records of oysters being eaten just after celebrating their thirtieth birthday, and in most cases they formed quite a delicious meal. This is an unusual age for an oyster to attain, because few of them are given an opportunity to live so long. If left to enjoy life in his own quiet way it is quite probable that the oyster would live to become an octogenarian or even a centenarian.

BITS FROM THE WRITERS.

Progress isn't a passing fancy; it's the life principle.—Elizabeth Robins.

When we work because we love work, then the work is well done.—Marie Corelli.

There can be no journey more pleasant than that which carries us a stage upon the road to our ambitions.—Max Pemberton.

You mustn't mind what other people do. If their souls were your soul it would be different. You stand and fall by your own work.—Rudyard Kipling.

It is a curious contradiction that happiness is the one thing people really want and that it is the one thing nearly everybody misses.—Gertrude Atherton.

The kind of honesty that won't actually steal 's a kind of fool honesty that's common enough, but the kind that keeps a feller's mouth shut when he hadn't ought to talk 's about the scurcest thing goin'.—E. N. Westcott.

Parental Parsimony.

Everything is by comparison. Said a woman recently of a young married couple whose families are counted "immensely rich:" "They really cannot live on their income; it is shocking to pinch as they must. Why, you know, his father only gives him $10,000 a year. He has a salary of $5,000, and she has an allowance from her family of $10,000—only $25,000, with a $100,000 house to keep up. It's outrageous, with all the money there is in those two families!" Twenty-five thousand dollars income and a completely furnished house and yet counted paupers by the world in which they move! Better change the orbit and come into one of common sense.

A Railway Mixup.

Among those who have been complaining of the slow railways in Italy is a commercial traveler, who recently determined that the Milan express should end his life. Two minutes before the train was due at a certain station he laid himself stoically across the rails. After vainly awaiting the train's approach for fifty minutes the gentleman was compelled to relinquish the project. He threatened to sue the directorate for inconvenience caused him, in which case, it is said, the railway authorities will put in a counterclaim for services rendered.

One Comfort Left.

The retired merchant was looking over his old ledgers.

"What satisfaction does that afford you?" asked the caller.

"A heap," he answered. "When somebody calls me an old skinflint and a miser it does me good to look at the unpaid accounts of my forty years in business and reflect that I've given away in my time, without counting interest, $27,491.36."

Not Unlucky.

'Arry—I've brought yer a ring, 'Arriet. Ain't it a beauty? 'Arriet—Why, it's a opal, 'Arry, and opals is awful onlucky, so they ses. 'Arry—You needn't worry yerself over that, cos it ain't a real un.—London Express.

Poetic.

Diderot, the French poet, once said, "He who would write of women should dip his pen in rainbow dye and powder his lines with gold dust from butterflies' wings."

DON'T HAVE A FIRE.

Most Frequent Causes of This Household Disaster.

Carelessness is the human equation entering into nearly all fires. This and ignorance, either of the common causes of household fires or of what to do when an incipient blaze is discovered, are responsible for the destruction of hundreds of American homes annually. "Lose your head and you lose your home" is an aphorism which may well be quoted in time of fire, and this applies quite as much to the head of the house as to his better half. Asked what to do in case of fire, our fire chief promptly replied, "Don't have a fire." What he meant was this:

Don't empty hot ashes into a wooden barrel. It is better not to use a wooden barrel anyhow.

Don't shake the range or furnace and immediately take up the ashes. Clear the ash pit first and then shake down. It is the freshly shaken down ashes and coals that make the trouble.

Don't keep a hot fire continuously in an open fireplace for too long a time. The thickest wall of brick will heat through eventually.

Don't leave hot fat on the stove.

Don't have unprotected woodwork close to a furnace.

Don't allow paper or other light, inflammable stuff to accumulate in the cellar or elsewhere.

Don't allow greasy rags to lie in dark corners or closets.

Don't have lace curtains near unprotected gas jets.

These cover the more important and most frequent causes of fire. Leaky gas jets are not infrequently the occasion of bad outbreaks. Gas stoves possess elements of danger which all too frequently are overlooked. "Gas stoves break the monotony of life for us pretty often," said a fireman. Then he explained that a tiny hole often develops in the supply tube not far from the burner. Sooner or later a lighted match is passed over it or flame from the burner reaches it and a blaze so small as to escape notice is started. The stove is left for an hour or two, the flames eat a constantly increasing hole until the tube is burned off, and a full flow of gas starts a conflagration.

The common method of hunting with a lighted match for gas leaks is a dangerous practice, as the following incident shows: A householder, detecting the odor of gas in the cellar, examined all the pipes, going over them carefully with lighted matches. Nowhere could he detect a leak, and at last he gave up the search. A few hours later his house was seriously damaged by fire. Investigation showed that a lead gas pipe had been melted off. During the morning search for gas the match had passed over the leak, starting a flame so small that by daylight it was invisible. Gradually it had melted the lead, with the final disastrous results.

Just here let me offer an infallible test for leaking gas pipes given me by a veteran fire fighter. With a shaving brush or other small brush and an ordinary soap lather go over a suspected pipe. If there is a leak, no matter how tiny, it will blow bubbles in the lather. A leak too small to produce a flame will thus disclose its whereabouts.—T. W. Burgess in Good Housekeeping.

Celery Root Salad.

Wash and scrape celery roots, then cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain, sprinkle with salt and set aside covered to cool. When cold cut in half inch cubes. Pour over a pint of cubes about five tablespoonfuls of olive oil mixed with a little salt and pepper. Turn the pieces of vegetables over and over with a fork and spoon to cause them to take up the oil, then pour over about three tablespoonfuls of vinegar and mix again. Serve on lettuce leaves. The whites of two cooked eggs cut in small pieces and the yolks sifted may be mixed with the celery root before the addition of the oil. Mayonnaise dressing may be used instead of the simple oil and vinegar. A little grated onion may be added, or the salad fork and spoon may be rubbed with a clove of garlic cut in halves.—Boston Cooking School Magazine.

Mint Sherbet.

Boil together for five minutes a pound of sugar and a pint of water. Pound well the leaves from one large bunch of mint, pour over them the hot sirup and set away until cold, then strain. Add the strained juice of three lemons and freeze. When hard, remove the dasher, mix well with a spoon, repack the freezer and set aside for several hours.

Sweets For a Luncheon.

Fancy heart shaped boxes are filled with candied rose petals, strawberries, violets or mint leaves.

Pastry strips are rolled in chopped nuts and twisted into bowknots brushed with egg and baked, being dusted with sugar just before the baking is finished.—Delineator.

VALENTINE BONBONS.

To Clean Bottles.

To clean decanters and other narrow necked bottles put in half a cup of vinegar, then half as much tea leaves. Shake until clear, empty, put in warm soapsuds and shake again. Then rinse thoroughly.

WORKLESS AFRICAN SOLDIERS.

Hundreds of Boer War Veterans Tramping In England.

Many soldiers who were invalided out of the army after the Boer war are now on the tramp, the casual wards of Britain's workhouses being their only home.

The majority are disabled, and the remainder find it impossible to get work. Never before have ex-soldiers had so much difficulty in obtaining employment, even when they are in the best of health and have left the army with papers testifying to unblemished character.

"It has become a very serious matter," declared the secretary of the National Society for the Employment of Ex-Soldiers. "For instance, 140 men who have just left the service with the highest possible character applied here for work this morning. On the other hand, only three employers sent for help.

"The same tale is told at each of our 114 branches, and the condition of things is rapidly becoming worse.

"The reason of this difficulty in finding ex-soldiers employment is, in my opinion, due to the energy which is being devoted to finding work for the unemployed civilian. An ex-soldier who does not know a trade is, however, a much better man than a civilian without a trade. In the first place, he is more cleanly in his habits, and is used to thorough obedience. Then his wits have been brightened and his intelligence developed, especially under the new order of things.

"It is generally forgotten that a certificate of unblemished character means much more in the case of a soldier than a civilian. For whereas the military man is watched night and day, and the least peccadillo is recorded against him, the civilian has only to behave properly during working hours—what happens afterwards is his own business."

Tragedy In Thackeray's Life.

On the 20th of Aug., 1836, at the British embassy in Paris, Thackeray married Isabella Shawe of Doneraile, County Cork. Three daughters were born of this marriage, and after the birth of the third, May 28, 1840, Thackeray took a trip to Belgium, having arranged for the publication of a short book of travels. He had left his wife "nearly well," but returned to find her in a strange state of languor and mental inactivity, which became gradually more pronounced. For a long time there were gleams of hope. Thackeray himself attended to her exclusively for a time. He took her to her mother's in Ireland and afterwards to Paris. There she had to be placed in a maison de sante, Thackeray taking lodgings close by and seeing her as frequently as he could. A year later, as he wrote to FitzGerald, then very intimate with him, he thought her "all but well." He was then with her at a hydropathic establishment in Germany, where she seemed to be improving for a short time. The case, however, had become almost hopeless when in 1842 he went to Ireland. Yet he continued to write letters to her as late at 1844, hoping that she might understand them. She had finally to be placed with a trustworthy attendant. She was placid and gentle, though unfitted for any active duty and with little knowledge of anything around her. She survived till 1894.

Once Brilliant Surgeon.

Sir Patrick Heron Watson, who has just retired from the presidency of the Edinburgh Royal College of Surgeons, has also largely retired from active practice. He was at one time one of the most brilliant surgeons in Europe and has done a great deal for surgical science. His professional career began just about the time of the Crimean war, in which he was actively engaged as an assistant surgeon. He had the misfortune to be invalided home, and was so ill, indeed, that his life was despaired of. A return to the bracing air of his native city, however, restored him completely to good health, and he soon became engaged in active practice. He was the first surgeon to remove the thyroid gland for the condition known as goitre, so common among the natives of Derbyshire, and also of Switzerland. He was also the first to perform the operation for removal of the larynx for malignant disease, which operation, it will be remembered, the late Montagu Williams underwent. He is Surgeon in Ordinary to King Edward in Scotland, and in 1878 was attache to the special embassy sent to Spain on the marriage of the late King. Although considerably over seventy, Sir Patrick Watson bears his years lightly and few would be able to guess his age.

Dean Swift Did Marry Stella.

The discovery of an unpublished letter in the library of Christ Church, Oxford, clears up the literary mystery of Dean Swift's relations with Stella. The letter was written by the Rev. Dr. Evans, Bishop of Meath, to Archbishop Wake, and is dated July 27, 1723. The Bishop writes:

"There was reported to be a promise of marriage between a young woman named Miss Van Omrig and the Dean. She designed to give him all her fortune, which was about £5,000, but on discovering that the Dean had already been married to Mrs. Johnson, daughter of Sir William Temple, she became indignant and made a new will."

The letter corroborates in detail the information as to Stella's announcement of the marriage and her wish that the correspondence with Dean Swift should be published, a request with which her executors refused to comply. Altogether the letter makes the evidence of Dean Swift's marriage too strong to resist.

The Traveler's Tree.

In the island of Jamaica there is a tree that is greatly admired by all visitors; hence its name—traveler's tree. It is similar to the palm tree, but in shape is like a fan. A curious feature of this tree is that its plume-like leaves sway and bend with the sun and the rain. In rainy weather the leaves bend almost to the ground, but in sunshine they raise themselves to their upright and more graceful position. The effect is very curious, for the leaves of this tree are immense. Any place of consequence in Jamaica has one or more of these specimens, but it is necessary to travel there for a sight of them, for they will not grow in any other climate.

Antoine's Marie

By Virginia Leila Wentz

One August morning, with his high leather leggings, his easy costume, his fishing basket and tackle, Paul Blake strode along through the dew wet Canadian grass. He knew of a certain deep hollow in the brook which on such a gray moist day as this would be the haunt of juicy trout, and for the sheer joy of expectation he whistled. For equal to Blake's love for the art of painting was his love for the sport of fishing. He was not only enjoying his summer gathering French Canadian landscapes; he was reveling in his favorite sport as well.

After an hour of successful fishing in the quiet spot which he had selected he spied a splendid trout tucked cozily under a stone. But it was written in the book of fate that this fish and the frying pan should not lightly be brought together. Fly after fly was thrown in vain. Down through the crystal clear water he could see the sleek sides and the round, unspeculative eye of his intended victim, and he resolved to try the method of tickling.

So he undid his sleeve links, bared his arm and knelt upon the lichens, clinging with one hand to an overhanging birch. He was dipping cautiously toward the water when there in the pool before him, close to the reflection of his own, flashed another face.

It was a girl's face, and in its unusual loveliness it lay for a second like some magic picture. The next second Blake observed with a thrill that the vision was being changed by the current and that his own blond curls were made to trespass gently over the girl's dark ones. Then while he gazed at the reflection with Narcissus-like intentness the other face vanished as suddenly as it had come.

Springing to his feet, Blake perceived the bent trunk of an alder which projected across the stream from the top of the bank above, and he knew that the girl must have been leaning over the trunk from that higher bank, unconscious of his presence, until, like a startled deer, she fled.

"She was like one of Murillo's gypsy eyed Madonnas!" he exclaimed. And, though he went on for awhile longer with his trout fishing, the sport seemed to have lost a bit of flavor.

The next day Paul Blake drew up his horse before the kitchen door of a whitewashed farmhouse, and Antoine Martin rose to greet him.

"Bienvenue, m'sieu," said he, with old French hospitality. "And will m'sieu dismount?"

Blake did dismount, and as he stood in the wide doorway he tried to account for his presence. He was a painter, forsooth, and doing this section of Canada. He had already collected a good many views, but among them all there was not one more wonderful than that which could be obtained from the level plateau on which Antoine's farm stood. It was as if the hills had here withdrawn to leave an arena for some great spectacle, some ancient savage pageant. Might he, therefore, be permitted to fetch his easel and palette and to put upon canvas the harmony and beauty of it all?

Blake saw the lithe figure of a girl sitting opposite to him, her arms upon the table, her dimpled face with the Murillo eyes framed in both hands, her scarlet lips parted in breathless listening, hanging upon his words. Ah, luck was with him, to be sure. If he had lost the trout yesterday he had found the girl today.

"Come here, cherie," said old Antoine to the girl, and to the stranger, "My niece, Marie."

• • • • • • •

"But, you little water sprite, you little Undine, however did you get your face so mixed up with mine that day in the pool?" Blake asked one morning as Marie stood watching him at work on his canvas.

"Eh, bien, m'sieu, I had gone out for a pique-nique on the barrens, and—ramasse les granages—what you call pick berries," she answered in her quaint English speech, eked out with bits of patois here and there. Then she explained how she'd leaned over the trunk of the tree from the bank above to wash her stained fingers; how, just as she was in the act of dipping down, she had seen his reflection in the water and was startled.

Between the strokes of his brush Blake took surreptitious glances at the willowy figure, half holding back the apple boughs as she talked, half swinging on them. Rebel locks had broken out of confinement and were curling damply about her warm, white neck and that crumpled rose leaf of an ear. Ah, she was exquisitely delightful! That same day he said to Antoine:

"If you would permit Mlle. Marie to sit to me, and if Mlle. Marie will consent"—he questioned the Murillo eyes, which silently gave him his answer, then fell beneath his own—"I could do a painting that was worth while."

So the August days passed till the brief Canadian summer was over. Already they had started to burn the wood that Antoine had cut for winter use.

While the piled up logs sent red lights flickering about the plastered walls and shining floor, they would often show that Blake had joined the Martin home group and was reading to old Antoine, who listened soberly between long whiffs at his pipe. Marie would sit on the high backed bench near the clock, knitting, stealing a glance now and then at the volume which lay open on the table.

Antoine, good, sturdy old Antoine, had just been offered the position of foreman of a gang in the pineries at the headwaters of the Lievres. He had worked in the lumber camps for years, but never as foreman, forsooth. Nevertheless he hesitated about accepting it. There was poor little Marie, he pointed out to Blake. What would become of her?

"Poor little Marie!" For the next few days Blake did a good deal of thinking. Marie had never read Henry James or Meredith, it was true; she had never seen a poster lady, never heard "Camille," and yet in her setting she was perfect. Moreover, she was the sort to adapt herself readily to new environments. "And why not?" he argued finally to himself. "She is pure, beautiful and capable of the deepest, tenderest feelings. What she has not is the superficial gloss of society. That I do not want."

One evening, pushing his book aside, Blake glanced across at Marie, whose eyes, as usual, were bent on her knitting. She was humming softly to herself an old Canadian boat song:

"Descendez a l'ombre,
Ma jolie blonde."

Blake had often heard it above the blow of the oars in the rowlocks, but never had the words seemed so fitting as tonight. He rose suddenly and laid a hand on Antoine's shoulder.

"Let me take Mamselle Marie for a little stroll in the starlight," he said pleadingly. "It's warm in here. I will take good care of her."

"Eh, m'sieu!" The old man dropped his pipe and gauged him silently for a second with those black beaded eyes of his. What he read in the younger man's face must have satisfied him, for he said finally, with a little movement of his hand: "It must not be far. See you, m'sieu? And it cannot be for long."

Outside through the dusk there was a silvery glimmer. The woodland stir seemed like a sigh. Blake looked down closely into the little face beside him. In the mind of the girl something indefinable had arisen, something which had stolen away all her gay caprices and set her trembling.

"Ma petite blonde!" Blake used the soft provincial word for sweetheart that Marie had used in her song. His tone was one of gentle entreaty; his attitude was that of reverence.

"Ma petite blonde," he repeated, taking her hand and lifting it softly to his lips, "I want you for my little wife. Will you let me take care of you always?"

She looked at him with wide, surprised eyes and slightly parted lips.

"You, m'sieu?" she said breathlessly. "You to take care of me?" It seemed incredible.

For answer he drew her to him as a knight of old would have drawn a lady and looked into her lovely face. His blue eyes and her Murillo eyes met and pledged each other in deep drafts of gazing; then with a superb motion of surrender Marie reached up and put her arms about his head.

Thus in reality did his blond curls trespass gently over the girl's dark ones, even as once they had seemed to do in that reflection in the pool. And thus was brought about the winning of Antoine's Marie.

A King's Incognito.

Probably the most complete incognito on record was that adopted by King Charles of Roumania on his way to take possession of the Wallachian throne.

At the time the relations between Austria and Prussia were exceedingly strained—it was just before the outbreak of war between these two nations—and the Vienna government was known to be strongly opposed to a prince of the house of Hohenzollern ascending the throne of Roumania.

It was feared, therefore, that obstacles might be placed to the passage over Austrian territory of the newly elected sovereign of the Wallachs. Accordingly King Charles traveled down the Danube on board the Austrian steamboats disguised as a servant and in the second or third class cabin.

The two or three members of his suit, who of course were in the first class cabin, affected to treat him with the utmost severity and contempt and assailed him with loud reproaches for alleged negligence in his menial duties.

It was only on setting foot on Roumanian territory that the roles were reversed and that those who had remained on board the steamer were able to witness the ceremonious welcome accorded by the Wallachian authorities to the erstwhile valet and footman.

River Funerals In Germany.

The river Spree, which runs through Berlin, has a habit of almost continuously overflowing its banks. As a result the lowlands beyond the city, called Spreewald, are almost always under water in summer and covered with ice in winter. Much of the summer traffic is done on skates and with sledges. The postman delivers his mail either in a boat or on skates, the children skate to school, and the ladies go to market on the water wagon or on the ice.

Even the dead are carried along the river to their last resting place in a coffin resting on a bier in a boat covered with flowers. The hearse is paddled by two of the undertaker's assistants. In the first boat following are the clergymen and the family, and the usual long line of coaches is supplanted by a long line of boats. These are paddled sometimes by men, sometimes by women, but always by some of the friends of the deceased. These water funerals are very picturesque as they wend their way through the temporary channels caused by the overflowing Spree.

SAYS BOURASSA IS A JEW HATER.

TORONTO RABBI DEFENDS THE JEWISH RACE IN A SERMON.

Toronto, April 11.—The remarks of Henri Bourassa, M.P., in the House of Commons at Ottawa on March 15, on a resolution deprecating the massacre of Jews in Russia, when the member for Labelle referred to the Jews, on the authority of sober British papers, as being at the bottom of social troubles in that country and as obtaining the peasants' wealth by usury, were severely criticized by Rabbi S. Jacobs at the Feast of the Passover in Holy Blossom Synagogue yesterday morning. Rabbi Jacobs first stated that the statements of the member for Labelle did not contain one grain of truth. "The Jew," he said, "had no more to do with and was no more responsible for the present disturbed state in Russia than the spleenful, bombastic methods of the member for Labelle have affected the eruption of Vesuvius."

Continuing, the Rabbi stated that the troubles which threatened the Government of Russia were due to the sins of the aristocracy and the plutocracy. The funds being raised to help victims of the present atrocities were being distributed through sources which even commanded the respect of the Czar and his Government. The statement that the Jews had enriched themselves by oppression and usury was an ignorant, malicious and false statement, according to Rabbi Jacobs. He quoted an authority to the effect that Jews in Russia worked from fifteen to twenty hours a day, living in a state of semi-starvation, while only between ten and fifteen thousand Jews in that country possessed any certain means of existence.

"The charge was not true that the Jews did not assimilate to the country in which they lived or that they made an unworthy use of their citizenship. Loyalty to country was more than a civic duty with the Jew, it was a religious duty, continued Rabbi Jacobs. He said that the member for Labelle had only to open his eyes to see how well Jews were acquitting themselves in the duties of citizenship. Men of Jewish race and creed were filling responsible positions in almost every field of effort.

"The truth of the matter is," said the Rabbi, "the aspersions cast upon our race by the member for Labelle are the usual stock-in-trade, anti-Semitic utterances, which betray the workings of a mind warped by prejudice and envenomed by race hatred of the Jew." It was to be deplored that a member of Parliament should make statements devoid of truth, and give the color of justification to such deeds of cruelty and violence as had been perpetrated in Russia. The speaker concluded that the anti-Semitic utterances could not be talked down, nor wrote down, nor preached down, but they could be lived down. Each life should be a refutation of such charges.

SPORTS AND PASTIMES.

SPORTING NOTES.

The National Baseball League season opens to-day.

Exhibition games yesterday: New York National 9, Manhattan 4; New York American 6, Providence Eastern 2; Cincinnati National 8, Buffalo Eastern 1.

Lachance of Montreal, refuses to sign. He wants $500 a month; the club offers $300. Lachance pulls a great string with the "pea soup" fans, but he's hardly worth 500 plunks a month.

Jay Gould, second son of George J. Gould, who won the American national championship at court tennis on Saturday by defeating Charles E. Sands, will try for the English championship. He sailed on the Kron Prinz Wilhelm yesterday, and will go to London to prepare for the championship court tennis tournament, which is to be held at the Queen's Club, in West Kensington, on April 30. His entry was forwarded two weeks ago, and a cable message of acceptance has been received.

London, April 10.—August Belmont, of New York, has bought the race horse Rock Sand, winner of the Two Thousand Guineas, Derby and St. Leger of 1903, for £25,000. Mr. Belmont secured Rock Sand in competition with a French breeder, who offered £21,000. The executors of Sir J. Miller, the former owner of the horse, had previously refused £15,000 for the animal. Under the conditions of sale the horse will finish the stud duties already undertaken here. He will not be shipped to the United States before June. He has been insured meanwhile for £26,000.

If the Providence team wins the championship of the Eastern League this year the players will receive $250 in gold from the compapp.

If it ever started to rain money people would wear umbrellas, but they would be turned the other way.

A rush of dollars to the pocket frequently causes an ooze of sense from the head.

SPHERE OF WOMEN.

Miss Laura Rose's Address Before the Women's Institute.

An unique and unusually interesting address on "The Womanly Sphere of Woman" was delivered at the Women's Institute convention at the Guelph Model Farm on Wednesday, Dec. 13, by Miss Laura Rose of the O. A. C., Guelph. There was an immense attendance of ladies drawn from many different parts of Ontario, and the sentiments of the speaker were frequently applauded. Miss Rose, who is a very pleasing speaker, deprecated the entrance of women into the spheres of work better suited for men. A woman's success in the financial world might mean the sacrifice of her womanly nature, and cause failure more pathetic and far more to be regretted than financial failure.

"Let us safeguard well the difference in our nature which makes men seem our superior, and which, if neutralized, would only mar us and probably blot out the very best part of our nature," said Miss Rose. "The winning of a diploma often means physical wreck. She has won her laurels dearly, but for her rounded figure she has got muscular flabbiness, and for her rosy, merry face, she has got sharp-featured irritability. I think it would be well to leave this delving into deeper science to men, and let us be content to read of their wonderful discoveries. Some women are constantly uncomfortable because all the time trying to know more and more, so that they have not time to enjoy life.

"The education of our girls has been towards taking them from the home. During their school days they are always, when at home, poring over books and they take no interest in home life and home work. What can we do to keep our girls in the kitchen or turn them again to the kitchen; My greatest hope in the Macdonald Institute is that it may turn girls back again to the home life, and that they may there find their greatest pleasure in administering to the comforts of the inmates of their own homes. 'Nothing lovelier can be found in woman than to study household good.' At the institute they study it under such lovely conditions. There they, as they bend over the washboard, take delight in seeing the soil come out of the clothes, and when they go to the kitchen cooking becomes a joy. They will find such a dignity in performing the simple duties of housework that they would not change their sphere for any other in the world."

Miss Rose spoke of the necessities for congenial tastes between husband and wife, and advised women not by any means to limit their education to the kitchen. She, however, complained of the neglect of home by many married women who attend too many social and church meetings. Many of those works she believed should be done by maiden ladies. "There are lots of them," she remarked. The women of our country were largely responsible for the standard of home life. "A woman who is loving and true and devoted, a wife devoted and intelligent, need have no regrets if academic honors, high social position or political privileges have been denied her. She is filling the womanly sphere. The eyes of the world and of the God above rest kindly upon her, and her reward is great.

"Stay, stay at home, dear heart, and rest;
Home-keeping hearts are happiest.
For they that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble and full of care.
To stay at home is best."

AN ILLUSION DISPELLED.

The Oneidas Indians' Gift to the King Sent Back.

Sentimental persons will be touched by an incident that is reported from St. Thomas. The squaws of the Oneida Indians got an idea a couple of years ago and began to put it into effect. They set to work making two quilts, the finest they could design, the best their eager fingers could put together. They worked on these two quilts for a whole year, for they were to be devoted to a grand purpose—they were to be a gift from the Oneidas to the great King of England. When at last the work was done the precious quilts were laid before the chief of the Oneidas, Chief Ninham, who undertook to send them with a suitable message to King Edward.

This was done. Then weeks and months slipped away, and no word came from the great King, who had been so loyally served by his people the Oneidas. They waited expectantly to hear of the pleasure they had caused His Majesty and of his admiration for the skill and industry of which the carefully made quilts were the evidence.

A few days ago the chief of the Oneidas was thrilled by the receipt of the long-looked-for letter. He opened it. It was from His Majesty's private secretary. It formally stated that owing to the rules laid down with regard to offerings from individuals the King could not accept the quilts sent, and they were being returned. They came. They are back where they started from, to remind those who made them of a year's lost labor, and, more than that, of the Oneidas' lost illusion.

A rule is a rule and a secretary is a secretary, but in this case he would have been a wise secretary who had laid this special case under the notice of King Edward himself for his own decision, says The Toronto Star. The tact for which His Majesty is noted would probably have been exercised. Nor was this case one that came under the ordinary rules. The Indian tribes of Canada are allies of the King, not subjects. Call this a fiction if you will, but it is one that has had circumspect recognition from the first in all relations between the throne and our aboriginal people. The Oneidas are allied to the throne by treaty. More than that, in this city the people have come from far and near to veiw the vast collections of presents made to Queen Victoria and King Edward by princes and potentates of India. Why should the gift of the chief of the Oneidas be unable to get past the palisade of secretaries?

The boundary line between Canada and the United States is 3,000 miles long — 1,600 by land, 1,400 through water.

HER LADYSHIP'S DIAMONDS

By G. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1905, by P. C. Eastment

Her ladyship's extravagance was a subject of general remark, but it was true that his lordship did not stint her in money matters, and so what she threw away was nobody's business after all. It was so for the first five years of their married life, and then his lordship began to feel the pinch. He delayed saying anything to her of the matter as long as possible, but there came a day when he had to tell her that retrenchment must be the watchword for several years to come He had figured up her bills and found she had spent more money in a given time than any other woman in the kingdom. In a way he was proud of it, but in another way he had to give her a word of caution. She could still be extravagant and reduce her expenses one-half.

His lordship found out something too late. Give a wife rein for the first five years, and she will take the bit in her teeth for the next five. Talk of economy should come before instead of after. In addition to gratifying her own many whims and caprices her ladyship had a brother in the navy and another in the army, both officers, of course, and both living more or less off her bounty. Only the day before his lordship had asked for a private interview to talk retrenchment she had sent the naval officer a liberal check to straighten up his debts of honor and been informed by letter that the other one must have a much larger amount or throw up his commission in disgrace.

His lordship's news, therefore, came like a douche of cold water. If there was any sort of scene it was kept from the servants and therefore from the public, and things seemed to go on as before. They didn't, however. Her ladyship had her diamonds duplicated in paste and raised a large sum on the real gems to help others and herself. This was done quietly and secretly and was only part of a plan she had in her mind.

After the close of the London season his lordship retired to his country castle and was soon followed by a score of invited guests. The astute English robber is always on the watch for these house gatherings. Every woman guest is certain to bring at least a good part of her jewels to wear at dinner, and there are always chances for a smart thief to get in his work. As an offset the host employs a detective to mix in with the servants or even with the guests for the time being and keep watch over things.

It was so in this case. Scotland Yard had loaned him Inspector McDonald, and there never had been a robbery in a country house he was protecting.

The inspector, under another name, mingled with the guests and made himself at home, but he was given to passing much of his time wandering over the estate and musing in the shade of its forests. One of his musing fits was one day interrupted in a rather singular manner.

He was lying on the moss under a spreading beech when the sound of footfalls disturbed him, and he rolled over on his side, to discover her ladyship making her furtive way through the woods. At a dozen paces from him she stopped and with a stick dug a hole in the ground at the foot of a tree and concealed something. When she had run away the inspector scooped out the dirt until he came to an oiled silk bag containing her ladyship's diamonds. They were all there to her last ring, and the inspector knew enough about precious stones to know that these were paste.

This happened at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. What her ladyship would do without her diamonds at dinner time the inspector could not determine. Her secret burial of them meant to him simply one thing—she was going to be "robbed" of them. She would have to put up a claim of loss by daylight, and there would be a sensation. Either that or she must be "indisposed" at dinner time and not appear among her guests during the evening.

Her ladyship proceeded at once to business. An hour before dinner, and after all the guests, including the inspector, had been indulging in games on the lawn, she went to her room to discover that her diamonds were missing. There was a sensation at once. No one had seen any stranger lurking about, and the robbery must have been perpetrated by some of the servants. Including maids and valets, these numbered over sixty, and each one was obliged to come forward and be investigated. His lordship insisted on the most rigorous examination, and this led to protestations and hard feelings. Within twenty-four hours the house party was broken up and scattered, and Inspector McDonald had to admit that he had no clew. The only thing his lordship could do was to offer a reward, and he made it $25,000.

The inspector did not go with the others. He remained behind to look for clews. He held many interviews with his lordship and her ladyship together, and he had to admire the density of the one and the cunning of the other. It was more than cunning. Her ladyship had more nerve and cheek than the detective ever before had found in a woman. She was a most convincing liar, and if he hadn't had the paste diamonds in his pocket he would have been inclined to believe that the scene in the woods was a day dream. She could furnish no information as to how her diamonds had disappeared.

She cleared her own maid of suspicion, but would not vouch for the honesty of the others. It was through her advice and insistence that his lordship advertised "No questions asked." The stolen plunder could thus be returned by any one of her choosing. The $25,000 would get the originals out of pawn and save her brother. The inspector held but one interview with her ladyship alone. At that interview, after she had retold her story and looked him as straight in the eye as a woman could, he said:

"I can't believe that the plunder was carried far. I shouldn't wonder if it was buried in the woods."

"That may be," she innocently replied.

"They didn't happen to be your paste diamonds, while the real gems are in a vault in town?"

"Would his lordship advertise such a reward for paste diamonds? Have you ever heard that I have resorted to paste?"

"I did not mean it in that sense. The reason I spoke of the woods was because I was out there that afternoon."

"Well?"

"I thought I saw a woman prowling around."

"Then you have been derelict as a detective. Why didn't you speak of the matter before?"

"The more I think of it the more I believe that this woman buried something at the foot of a tree."

"Then let me call his lordship, and we will go at once."

When it was too late he saw that she wouldn't take a bluff, and he was obliged to accompany the pair to the woods. He walked straight to the tree and showed them the cavity. He looked straight into the eyes of the woman, but she did not falter in the gaze. He saw by her attitude that she was even ready to hear him say that she was the woman he saw and to drag from his pocket the bag of diamonds in corroboration. He dared not put her to the test.

When his lordship criticised his action in not overhauling the unknown woman, the detective could only swallow his chagrin and beg to withdraw from the case. Two hours later he was packed and ready to go. As he was descending the stairs he encountered her ladyship ascending. She gazed straight into his eyes and held out her hand. There was no bribe in her fingers—she knew the inspector to be above that. He took the bag of diamonds from his pocket and passed it over without a word and then, raising his hat to her, he kept on his way out of doors. Two weeks later a London paper said:

"We are glad to hear that her ladyship's diamonds have been restored to her. It is hinted that the person claiming the reward had the manners of the gentleman, though in disguise."

"One of her brothers, maybe," said Inspector McDonald to himself, as he turned to the case in his book and wrote "Closed" at the bottom.

His Religion.

Not long ago a certain clergyman from the west was called to a church in Jersey City. Soon after his arrival the divine's wife made the usual visits to the members of the parish. One of these, a plumber's wife, was asked by the good lady whether the family were regular churchgoers, whereupon the wife of the plumber replied that, while she and her children were attendants at divine service quite regularly, her husband was not.

"Dear me!" said the minister's wife. "That's too bad! Does your husband never go to church?"

"Well, I wouldn't say that he never went," was the reply. "Occasionally Will goes to the Unitarian, now and then to the Methodist, and I have known him to attend the Catholic church."

A look of perplexity came to the face of the visitor. "Perhaps your husband is an agnostic," suggested she.

"Not at all," hastily answered the other; "he's a plumber. When there is nothing for him to do at one church there is very likely something for him at one of the others."—Harper's Weekly.

Where the Sea Disappears.

A girl was recently overtaken and drowned by the incoming tide on the west coast of France. A transplanted Breton said of this fatality:

"Can you, who see your own tides crawl in at the rate of ten feet or so an hour, imagine tides racing like wild white horses up the flat sands at the rate of half a mile a minute? The extraordinary flatness of our Breton coasts gives us these phenomenal tides. The sea does not rise and fall. It appears and disappears. You have a vast and flat plain of sand. At a set hour the sea rushes in, white, wild, submerging this vast plain. At a set hour an unseen hand sucks back the waters—back thirty, forty, fifty miles—and nothing is visible but the plain of pale sand again. Woe unto such as walk on this desolate plain when the tide begins to rise, for they must drown! Nothing can save them."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Experienced Traveler.

"Look here," demanded the irate hotel proprietor, "what did you say to that last guest?"

"Why," replied the waiter, "he didn't pass over a tip, so I said, 'I think you have forgotten something, sir.'"

"That's just it. After you said that he returned to the table and took three oranges and six pears."—Philadelphia Ledger.

THE WALKING FEVER.

One Phase of "Yellow Jack" That is Particularly Dangerous.

"In the south they have lately had yellow fever," said a lady who is an exile from Mobile because of the sickness, "but one of the sources of the disease is of a peculiar character. It is distributed by persons who have what is called the 'walking fever.' They go about their business or affairs while the fever is latent in them, but still of a malignant and contagious character. A victim in whom the disease is established, and who is put to bed, by reason of coming in contact with but few persons rarely becomes a focal point of its spread, but the victim who still moves about distributes the malignant taint to many. The curious thing about these sufferers is that they keep on going about till they simply fall down and quickly die. They have a headache and stiff joints, but their temperature is little above normal, and they attribute their sickness to other than the serious causes which give rise to it.

"In a previous invasion of yellow fever in the south, I remained until too late to leave my home. The quarantine was imposed, and its terms were executed with cruel fidelity. A gentleman living in my street, a merchant, gave his whole attention and time to health work. Our street is on high ground and is kept in the best possible sanitary condition. The gentleman came home daily and one evening fell fainting in the street. That night he died. Not a house in the row, some thirty of them, was spared by the dread visitant. We were able to trace from him the progress of the malady that twice decimated the residents of the street within twelve days.

"A woman friend of mine in New Orleans had the walking fever during the current outbreak of the disease. She communicated it to her family, and now all of them, eight in number, are dead."—New York Herald.

The Practicability of Airships.

The mists of the future still hide the airship that will be used as a conveyance, making regular trips, carrying people to and fro above the earth on business and pleasure, but the coming of the practical ship is inevitable. I will not venture to say how soon it will arrive, but I think that many who are now alive will move over the housetops in airships, when most houses will have entrances on their roofs. I have no faith in the idea that flying machines may be devised for single individuals or that the correct principle may be found by studying and copying the flight of birds. When such plans are suggested I am reminded of the ideas and efforts of inventors who a century ago tried to make locomotives with four legs to operate like horses. The thought of these mechanical experts was that, since the horse moved more rapidly across the land than almost anything else with which they were familiar, it followed that any mechanism that was to attain a greater speed would have to be constructed and operated in a similar way.—Success.

Heat and Cold.

An army surgeon who was stationed for some time in the Philippines has contributed to the New York Medical Record some of his conclusions from observation of epidemics of typhoid fever in those islands. One of the most surprising of his statements is that the greatest mortality as a result of the disease occurs during the first quarter of the year because the power of resistance of the natives is at the lowest ebb "at the close of the cold season." If we are surprised at the suggestion that there is a cold season in the Philippines our astonishment is increased by the further remark that "to an American it seems absurd that people should suffer and even perish from cold in a temperature seldom under 70 degrees, but such is the case." Cold and heat are relative terms, as the American may learn also in London, where the newspapers are printed with "scare heads" and long articles on the intolerable heat when the thermometer gets up to 80.

Blushing Made Dangerous.

Even in the backwoods district the use of belladonna to increase the brilliancy of the eyes is dying out, but the new "blush producer" from London bids fair to have a more serious effect than the herb product. The "blush producer" consists of nitrate of amyl "pearl," a capsule containing a minute portion of the drug. This is crushed in the handkerchief and inhaled, with the result that the acceleration of the heart action suffuses the face with a rosy blush. The danger lies in the fact that nitrate of amyl is a powerful heart stimulant, which has long been used in capsule form by patients suffering from cardiac affections. It is a yellow colored fluid, with a marked odor of bananas, and even in the slight doses required to send a flush to the cheek it will work hurt to the most vital organ of the body.

Lucas Case Was Laid Over For a Week.

CHIEF NEWTON TOLD OF SEEING WHAT LOOKED LIKE FLOUR MARKS ON JOHN LUCAS' COAT—WALTER LUCAS HAS BEEN BAILED OUT.

The case against John and Walter Lucas, charged with stealing grain, etc., from bonded G.T.R. cars, was resumed at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The court room was again filled.

A BAGGAGEMAN'S TESTIMONY.

Mr. Morris Moorman testified that he was baggageman at the G.T.R. station. Heard of the cars being broken into, but did not see them. Saw corn along the road on his way home. This was in the direction of the Lucas house. Between 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon of March 21st witness was at John Lucas' house. John was home at the time and Officer Hayes was there. The officer took witness into the kitchen and he saw bags containing flour and grain there. Upstairs he saw four large sacks of flour. John Lucas told witness he could prove where the grain came from. He said he had bought the oats from one man and the corn from another, but did not say where he had procured the flour. Witness then said to Lucas, "This oats and corn did not come from the G.T.R. yard?" and Lucas said no. That day witness took some of the grain and flour away and next day took away the four bags of flour which were upstairs. On Monday, March 26th, witness saw some loose corn lying in the river. There was probably 200 pounds. Mr. M. Donovan informed witness of the corn in the river.

Cross-examined—Witness went out to John Lucas' place in consequence of a message from Officer Hayes, who was at the place. Four bags of flour were marked alike and two others were different. Witness got six bags of corn, six bags of flour and 13 bags of oats. Walter Lucas at one time lived in a house at the east end of the G.T.R. yard. It adjoined the railway property.

Re-examined—Nothing was said to witness as to where John Lucas was the night the cars were broken into.

A NEIGHBOR TESTIFIES.

Mrs. Lambert testified that she lived near Mr. John Lucas.' On the morning she heard of the grain being stolen she heard the noise of a wagon near their place. She called her husband and he looked to see what time it was. It was 3 o'clock in the morning. Did not get up; neither did her husband. Could not tell which way the wagon was going. Saw John Lucas that morning about 7 o'clock. He was in his own yard and some man was with him. Could not tell who the man was. Saw Walter Lucas at John Lucas' place the afternoon before the grain was taken at night. Walter had a team of horses there. Smiley Lucas was also there. She did not hear any noise about Lucas' place that night.

Cross-examined — Had seen John Lucas buy grain from persons travelling along on the road.

Re-examined—Never saw John Lucas buy grain on the road between the hours of 11 o'clock at night and 3 o'clock in the morning.

OTHER WITNESSES.

Ambrose Clement swore that he resided at Canifton. He remembered the car of corn which was shipped into Corbyville. He saw the bottom of the car was bored, and a wooden plug was in the hole. To the best of his knowledge, the hole was about two inches in diameter.

Alexander Jose testified that he worked at Corbyville. He helped to unload a car of corn. Saw a plug in the bottom of the car. The hole was about two inches. The plug was made of cedar. Witness marked the number of the car on the plug.

Chief Newton testified that he remembered the arrest of John Lucas. He was sober. The shoulder and back of his coat was white. It had the appearance of being flour. Witness saw a plug and gave it to Detective Harnett. It was initialed.

The County Attorney stated that as far as John Lucas' case was concerned the evidence was all in, but he might possibly have some further evidence submitted in reference to Walter Lucas' case.

Mr. Carnew stated that he was not in a position to proceed with the defence in the case. He thought that the court should, in the case of Walter Lucas, allow bail until the case is proceeded with. This, Mr. Carnew considered, was not asking too much. His client was able to give bail.

The Magistrate thought that it was not unreasonable to accept bail in Walter's case, if the Crown was willing.

The County Attorney was of the opinion that if bail was accepted two sureties would have to be secured.

Magistrate Flint—"I will fix bail at $300 in Walter's own recognizances, and two sureties of $100 each.

The case was then enlarged for a week.

Shortly after the court closed bail was secured for Walter Lucas. The sureties were Messrs. Shorey and Callery, of Canifton.

Grand Welcome for Returning Prelate.

ARCHBISHOP GAUTHIER RECEIVED WITH ACCLAIM AND PRESENTED WITH A PURSE OF $3400.

Kingston, April 11. — His Grace, Archbishop Gauthier, arrived in Kingston on Tuesday afternoon, on the train from the east. The Grand Trunk railway company very kindly placed a special car at his grace's disposal. No distinguished citizen ever got a warmer or more enthusiastic reception on entering the Limestone City, than that accorded Archbishop Gauthier on his arrival home after his official visit to Rome. The people turned out en masse irrespective of creed or class, to extend to him a warm and generous welcome back to Kingston.

Previous to the arrival of the train, the Catholic societies were extended from the G. T. R. station, along Ontario street, and up Brock street to King street. The 14th Regimental Band, the R.C.H.A band, and the Deseronto band, were arranged at intervals in the line, and discoursed fine music.

When the train reached the station, and his grace stepped to the platform, he was met by members of the clergy of the diocese, and the reception committee, and escorted to his carriage. Mayor Mowat with Aldermen Craig, Elliott, Angrove, Hoag and Kent, drove up and the Mayor extended to the Archbishop an official welcome back to his cathedral city. The procession then started to conduct the Archbishop to St Mary's cathedral. It moved off in this order:

Standard bearer with Canadian flag

Catholic Societies, composed of the Knights of Columbus, A.O.H., C.O.F., C.M.B.A., and Y.I.C.B.U.

Gentlemen of St. Mary's congregation. Carriage with the Archbishop and Vicar-General Masterson, and Rev. Father Kehoe.

Carriages with Mayor Mowat and the aldermen.

The reception committee in carriages.

Clergy of the diocese in carriages.

The Catholic societies never before turned out in such force or with such grandeur. They presented a fine scene with their gaily dressed marshals on prancing steeds. Daniel Eves was grand marshal; Thomas J. James, marshal of the A. O. H.; C. Millan, marshal of the C. M. B. A.; Patrick Fannon, marshal of the Y.I.C.B.U., and Michael Goodman, marshal of the C. O. F. Four mounted men formed a guard of honor around the Archbishop's carriage.

When the head of the procession reached the front of the palace, it halted and formed into two lines, through which his grace's carriage passed, headed by the 14th band. The Archbishop followed by the priests, then entered the palace where they robed, the band playing "Home, Sweet Home," as his grace alighted from his carriage.

In the interval, the societies formed two lines from the palace door to the cathedral entrance. A grand procession then took place from the palace in the following order;

Cross bearer and acolytes.

Sanctuary boys.

Clergy.

The Archbishop, accompanied by Vicar-General Masterson, Dean O'Connor and Dean Murray.

When his grace entered the church, the separate school children, who occupied a prominent position on either side of the cathedral, under the direction and supervision of their teachers, sang the "Vivat Pastor Bonus." The cathedral was crowded to the doors.

When the Archbishop took his seat in the sanctuary, surrounded by the clergy of the diocese, the reception committee approached him, and Dr. Rayn read to him an address, during the reading of which His Grace was presented with a purse containing $3400.

In reply the Archbishop expressed his heartfelt thanks for the good wishes contained in the address, and announced that, after making his report to the holy father, whom he had the privilege of meeting on several occasions, he had spoken of his congregation. To him the holy father said: "Tell them for me that I love them, that I impart to them my special blessing."

In acknowledging the magnificent money gift, his grace said that he was not until recently aware of the sacrifices the people of the congregation had made during the past few years. It was more than edifying to see their spirit of faith in the contributions made to the church, but he did not expect such an offering as that made to him now. He wanted to tell them that their magnificent money gift was not for him. It would go towards the various funds of the diocese.

His Grace then imparted the Papal benediction; after which the choir sang the "Te Deum."

The man was brought up before Magistrate Flint this morning and a charge of attempted suicide was preferred against him. As he expressed a desire to leave the city and return to his home in Quebec he, was allowed to go. 15TH OFFICERS HELD A MEETING.

AFFAIRS OF THE REGIMENT IN VERY SATISFACTORY CONDITION.

An adjourned meeting of the officers of the Fifteenth Regiment was held last evening at the quarters on Church street. Reports from various committees were read and adopted. These showed that everything connected with the Regiment was in a satisfactory condition.

The question of securing a place for indoor drilling was discussed, and it was decided to utilize the old Ontario Hall, on Bridge street.

The matter of engaging a band for regimental purposes for the season was considered, but not decided. The matter has been referred to a special committee.

Death of a Tweed Business Man.

Tweed, April 11.—(Special.) — After an exceedingly brief illness of pneumonia, Henry Duncan McKelvie, died yesterday evening at his home on Front street, aged 56 years.

Deceased formerly resided in Campbellford and at Norwood, moving to Tweed some fifteen months ago and entering into partnership with Mr. George McCallum in the marble works. His wife died some years ago, one daughter who resided with her father and another married and living in Winnipeg being the sole survivors.

The remains were taken to Campbellford by morning train for interment, after a brief service had been conducted at the house by Rev. Jas. Bennie, pastor of St. Andrew's church

One Thousand Ladies Enjoyed the Music And Refreshments.

Fully one thousand ladies visited Mr. Ed. F. Dickens' cosy refreshment parlors on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, thoroughly enjoying the cocoa and cake, accompanied by delightful music furnished by Mr. W. B. Riggs on the celebrated Autopiano. Mr. Dickens' parlors have been handsomely done over, and three very powerful new lights, direct from New York, have been put in. In the cosy tea room—fitted with delightfully easy seats—electric fans will be much appreciated during the coming summer, while, in the store, two large water motor fans will keep the air cool and flies in the background. The floral decorations were in excellent taste, and evoked a chorus of praise from the ladies who attended the opening. The weather was a little damp, but the opening was a great success. It is evident that, during the coming season, Mr. Dickens' handsome refreshment parlors will be—like the viands he furnishes—par excellence.

MUSIC AND THE DRAMA.

MAY A. BELL MARKS.

Marks Bros.' company at the Carman opera house last night had a packed house. The play was "For His Sake," a four-act drama by Jos. Fraser, author of "The Little Minister," owned by R. W. Marks. May A. Bell Marks, as Esther Lynn, sustained the good impression made here, her acting being characterized by remarkable intensity and artistic methods. The vaudeville was first-class, the wardrobe and scenery the best. May A. Bell Marks wore a Rhine stone gown in the fourth act, a Worth creation. A new acrobatic feature is announced for to-night.

"THE HOLY CITY."

A great Biblical production, "The Holy City," is booked for the Carman Opera House on the 30th inst. This is said to be one of the greatest religious productions of modern times.

Former Resident Is Dead at Milwaukee.

Miss Bella Manning, a former resident of this city, died yesterday at Milwaukee, from lung trouble. Deceased was born here, but some six years ago went to Milwaukee, where she had since resided. Last summer Miss Manning spent two months here. She was a member of the Roman Catholic church. The only surviving member of the family is a brother, John Manning, who lives in Syracuse.

Two Months For Abusing a Horse.

Chief of Police Gunyou, of Deseronto, was in the city to-day, having brought to the County jail a man named Walter Keller, who will serve two months behind the bars. He was convicted at Deseronto yesterday of abusing a horse belonging to Mr. T. Gault, of that town, and for this offence received the above sentence.

The City Taxes.

Belleville, April 12, 1906.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer,

Dear Sir, — Since the publication of my letter of January 13th, 1906, asking ratepayers to pay up their taxes, water and gas rates, licenses, etc., promptly, I have been pleased to note that many citizens having interest in the prosperity of the city they live in have complied with the request. There are a number, however, who have delayed the payment of their taxes, etc., for 1904 and 1905 who apparently have not that interest in civic affairs that they should have, or who have deliberately allowed these matters to remain settled. Now, civic affairs cannot be conducted on the proper basis or in a profitable manner to the community in general unless all persons unite in giving their town the support to which it is entitled, and I ask the citizens of Belleville who have not paid their indebtedness to the city for 1904 and 1905 to do so at once. Instructions have been issued to the Tax Collector to have ALL ARREARS CLEANED UP BY THE END OF APRIL, and I hope the citizens will assist him in this matter and without the necessity of issuing warrants.

There is no reason whatever why these amounts should not have been in the City Treasury before this.

I thank you, Sir, for the use of your columns, in placing this matter before the public.

Yours sincerely,

L. W. MARSH,

Chairman Finance Committee.

MARCH FOR POWER WENT 1,500 STRONG

Municipal Representatives of Ontario Invade Toronto.

PREMIER'S PROMISE TO THE PROVINCE

Hon. J. P. Whitney To the Monster Deputation Promises Prompt But Cautious Action Towards Providing Electrical Power Based on Cost Production—Careful Consideration of Expropriation Necessary—Will Consider Power Question When Educational Issues Are Settled.

Toronto, April 12.—Fifteen hundred delegates, a crowd that filled Queen street for three blocks, marched on the City Hall and Parliament Buliding yesterday morning.

"Cheap Power" was their watchword. Five special trains brought them to the Union Station. The trains were decorated with streamers and bunting, and each delegate wore a badge indicating what town he represented.

Mr. G. H. Clark, chairman of the Fire, Light and Water Department of Orillia, who was a member of the power deputation, yesterday morning, in a letter to the mayor said: "Orillia has solved this problem for itself, and demonstrated the fact that they can sell power at $16 per horse-power, 24 hours' service, and make a profit."

Where They Were From.

Beside Mayor Coatsworth and prominent controllers and aldermen of the City of Toronto, cities and townships were represented by the following gentlemen and others from the various bodies and places appended:

Guelph, Mayor Sleeman; Woodstock, Mayor Butler; Stratford, Mayor W. J. Ferguson; Berlin, Mayor Bricker; Galt, Mayor A. Weidenhamer; Eglinton, Mayor Fisher; Sarnia, Mayor Barr; Newmarket, Mayor Roadhouse; Dunnville, Mr. Haynes; King, Reeve Legge; Oshawa, Mayor Fowke; St. Thomas, Mayor Lawrence; Acton, Reeve Swalkhamma; Glen Morris, S. C. Kitchen; Guelph Township, Reeve Wright; Ayr, O. T. Falls; Grimsby, Reeve Nelles; Oakville, Mayor Keily; Islington, Reeve Shaver; Southampton, Mayor Belcher; Drumbo, Chas. A. Munn; South Dumfries, Reeve Kitchen; Aurora, Mayor Daville; King Township, Councillor Norman; Oxford County, M. T. Buchanan; Millbrook, Councillor Needhan; Preston, Mayor Clare; Pickering, Reeve Todd; St. Mary's, Mayor Meenie; Seaforth, Councillor Gregg; Ingersoll, Dr. Coleridge; West Oxford, Frank Folden; Waterloo County, Warden Cherry; Waterloo Township, Reeve Reist; Toronto Junction, Mayor Smith; Streetsville, C. H. Falconer; Tillsonburg, Mayor Hogarth; Kingston, Ald. Rigney; Hespeler, Ald. Jardine; Fergus, Reeve Moffat; Toronto Board of Trade, R. C. Steele, president; Manufacturers' Association, P. H. Burton; Beamsville, Reeve Davis; Thedford, Councillor Woodhall; Durham Township, Reeve Scott; Dufferin County, Reeve Ewing; Willmott Township, Reeve Zeller; Acton Board of Trade, Secretary Goodeve; Vaughan Township, Reeve Boyle; Petrolea, J. A. Jackson; Forest, James Prout; Mount Forest Senator McMullen; District Trades and Labor Council, R. Hungerford; Builders' Exchange, Geo. Duthie; Retail Merchants' Association, E. M. Trowern; Strathroy, Mayor Fillinsbee.

The Delegates' Resolution.

Prior to going to the Parliament buildings, the delegates assembled at the City Hall, where the following resolution of Mayor Judd of London and Mayor Ferguson, Stratford, was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, whereas cheap and widely-distributed electric power will be of great benefit to the Province of Ontario, and the manufacturer, artisan and farmer will each benefit for such cheap power;

"And whereas electric power from coal will always be expensive, and the province is blessed with many water-powers from which electric power can be and is being obtained, the development of which have, to the present, been made chiefly by private companies;

"And whereas private companies will and do sell power at as high a rate as possible, with prices based on coal as a source of power;

"Resolved: that the municipalities now present, and represented in the City Hall, Toronto, having an urban and rural population of over 1,000,000, respectfully urge upon the Governor-in-Council of the Province of Ontario the necessity of safeguarding the people's interests by originating as a Government measure, legislation enabling the Governor-in-Council to appoint a permanent provincial commission, with power to take, where considered by it advisable, the following action:

"The construction, purchase or expropriation of works for the generation, transmission and distribution of electric power, heat or light.

"To arrange with any existing development company or companies for the acquisition or purchase by or from such company or companies of power at a reasonable price so as to be transmitted and sold by the Government to municipalities or others.

"Also to vest in it the powers necessary to enable it to regulate prices at which electricity shall be sold to all and every consumer, whether municipal, corporate or private."

Feature For Posterity.

After the proceedings in the Council chamber were concluded the deputation assembled on the front steps of the City Hall, and had their photographs taken, after which they formed in procession, four abreast, and took their departure for the Parliament buildings at 11.40 a. m. The procession, which was headed by the Mayor and City Council and mayors and reeves of outside places, reached for three blocks along Queen street.

The Toronto Board of Trade, Manufacturers' Association, Builders' Exchange, Retail Merchants' Association, and Federated Council of Building Trades sent delegations to join with the Mayor and City Council as the Toronto deputation.

At the Parliament Buildings.

Preparations had been made for the reception of the big deputation on the steps of the main entrance of the Legislative Chamber. Tables had been placed on the landing and the deputation spread itself over the steps, along the corridors and over the railings of the floors above. In one solid jam were aldermen, reeves, mayors, members of Parliament, Senators and other representatives of the people. Hon. Adam Beck extended an invitation to the deputation to go into the place where they make Ontario's laws, where the Premier and the Cabinet would hear them. There was a rush for the door and a jam at once occurred at the entrance.

The Cabinet In Force.

Amongst the members of the Cabinet present, besides the Premier, were Hon. J. J. Foy, Hon. Col. Matheson, Hon. Dr. Pyne, Hon. Dr. Reaume, Hon. Col. Hendrie, Hon. Mr. Hanna, Hon. Mr. Monteith, Hon. Mr Cochrane and Hon. Dr. Willoughby. Hon. Adam Beck stood by the side of the Premier all the time.

The Deputation's Demands.

Mayor Coatsworth briefly introduced the deputation, which he said was representative of nearly all the municipalities of Ontario within a radius of 150 miles of Niagara Falls. They desired that the Government should take hold and develop and transmit the power of Niagara Falls, so that the municipalities could run their own power at an average rate of $20 per horse-power. Mayor Coatsforth read the resolution of endorsation passed by the United Municipalities and added that immediate action was desired.

Mayor Coatsworth was followed by a small army of speakers, all of whom gave unswerving support to the municipal power commission's report. There was not one dissentient voice. Among these were Mayor Judd of London, Senator McMullen of Mount Forest, Mayor Sleeman of Guelph, Mayor Barr of Sarnia, Dr. Coleridge of Ingersoll, Mayor Thompson of Galt, Mayor Fowke of Oshawa, County Councillor Buchanan of Oxford, Fire and Light Chairman Thompson of Orillia, President of Guelph Board of Trade G. B. Ryan, Mayor Belcher of Southampton, Reeve Wright of Guelph Township, Mayor Wayne of Dunnville, Mayor Butler of Woodstock, Mayor Ferguson of Stratford, James Simpson for Toronto labor organizations, President Woodstock Board of Trade John White, Mayor Lawrence of St. Thomas and Mayor Gunton of Simcoe.

Premier Whitney's Reply.

Received on rising with loud cheering, Premier Whitney began his speech by remarking that the prevailing sentiment he had noticed at this great gathering was that cheap power was very dear to their hearts. This prevailing sentiment represented, as he knew full well, a large proportion of that very desirable people, the people of the Province of Ontario. His colleagues and himself joined in thanking them very heartily for coming there in such large numbers, which, of itself, meant a tribute. They also thanked them because the Government of Ontario was composed of individuals, who, in their individual capacity, as well as in their collective capacity, were always in a receptive mood when the wants and interests of the people were concerned. They believed that the Government under our constitutional system was a sort of conduit pipe by which the desires and wishes of the people went forth and became known to the public, and were crystalized into methods of action. Hence they believed that it was the definite duty of the Government of the day, from the highest, and perhaps from the lower, motives, to be always on the look-out for manifestation of public opinion. In doing that they would best serve the interests of the country, actuated not only by the belief that it was their duty to do so, but also by the lower motive that the great majority of the people were right.

Difficulties to Overcome.

"Those reasons," Mr. Whitney proceeded, "make it delightful for my colleagues and myself to welcome you, gentlemen, here to-day. The subject you have in such high regard is surrounded with difficulties, but even they may be overcome. Somebody has said with a lot of concentrated wisdom that difficulties exist for the purpose of being surmounted.

"You may rely upon it that the Government will not be frightened by any difficulties which may seem to cross the path which, in their deficient wisdom, they may be obliged to follow.

"It would not be wise for me to take up your time in dilating on the details, going to show the immense importance of this wonderful question to the coming generations. It is to our Government to see that they do not lag behind the footsteps of the idea which the circumstances have changed at the present day.

"Whenever the Government shall feel that it is not within their power to deal properly with a question like this, it will be the duty of that Government to acknowledge quickly the impossibility which they find surrounding its power of carrying out the people's wishes, and to let other good and strong men take their places.

"His Sin Finds Him Out."

"We have heard biblical references to-day, and I may use one, which, if not distinctly biblical, has a distinct relationship to lots of things, even in biblical matters. It has often been expressed of individuals, and of groups of people, that in some instances their sin has found them out.

"Now, sir, my sin has found me out, and I am proud and glad, both as an individual, and as one occupying the position I do, that I am enabled to stand before an audience like this, not in humiliation, but with satisfaction and pride, with the knowledge that my sin has found me out. A distinguished member of the Legislature a few years ago put on the journals a resolution (which was voted down) a measure proposing to deal in a wise way with this magnificent question, regard it how you will, and I well recall the part which that hon. gentleman, and few with him, took in their earnest desire to anticipate and serve the interests of the people of Ontario. In regard to this great power question, I find here that in the Legislature I used these words, and recollect that that was before the days of deputations on this question:

"'Our position is that the Government should take up this question, consult experts upon it, decide whether or not the better plan would be for the Government to establish a plant at Niagara Falls and furnish electrical power to all the municipalities within 150 miles at cost, or whether the best plan would be to appoint commissioners and provide for a union of municipalities, but, whether one way or the other, it ought to be done, and in my opinion the Government which fails to take this matter up as a Government question, and deal with it from a Government standpoint, will be criminally negligent, and will be so considered and adjudicated upon by the people of Ontario. I have no hesitation in saying that the Government of this province should do what Mr. Miscampbell says—the Government should either produce the power itself or control the producers of it, so that the municipalities would receive it at cost or a very slight advance over cost.'

Humble Yet Satisfied.

"It is with proper humility and satisfaction, not often given to public men, that I find that the great majority of the people of this province are rallying round this very idea, expressed in practically the same words introduced several years before by myself.

"If what I have read here was wisdom when it was uttered, it is wisdom to-day. The circumstances and the various developments have changed, but I see very little, indeed nothing, to lead me to alter what I said, although there may be something which I desire to add. Naturally difficulties will be found in the way. We do not know what complications may arise between Great Britain and the United States, and the Dominion and the States, concerning the Falls. But the Government of Ontario will be day and night upon the watch in order to see that the interests of the people of this province are not sacrificed in reference to this question. There is a large section of the Province of Ontario outside the immediate influence of Niagara Falls, and we cannot forget these other sections. This question must not be dealt with from a geographical point of view."

Hydro Commission Report.

Mr. Whitney went on to announce that the report of the hydro commission would be laid upon the table that afternoon, and that would enable them to take up that portion of that subject as soon as they had the opportunity. It was hoped that the report dealing with the eastern district would shortly be to hand. What they would have to consider would be how, in the wisest, most reasonable and least expensive manner they could procure power for the people of this province. It would be their duty to compare methods, selecting that one which may seem to have the best application towards the realization of the object they had in view.

"We will have to consider," said the Premier, "whether it will be our duty to invest from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000 in expropriation, and that cannot and ought not to be done without careful investigation of the probable results. This is the manner in which this question must be approached, and this is the manner in which all the gentlemen listening to me desire that this question shall be approached. Having shown that despite the years that have gone on the position is to-day exactly as it was, I repeat that we have seen no reason to recede from that position.

Day of White Coal Coming.

"We are ready to believe that as soon as we get through with our educational legislation, we should consider by what methods this great power question can be settled, so that the people of Ontario can receive those rights to which they are entitled by the situation, and which will do away with the expenditure of from seventeen to twenty-five millions of dollars for coal from the United States, and which will also enable the workingmen to breath God's fresh air, free from the smoke nuisance. It is certainly the duty of the Government to step warily, so that the interests of the province may not be forfeited or injured in any way, and so that no mistakes may be made. Let our friends go away saturated with the idea that the Government of Ontario claims no patent. They are simply ordinary mortal men whom the people, in consequence of their own wishes, have given for a certain time power to act. We look to the generous forbearance of the people of the province."

Prolonged applause ensued at the close of the Premier's speech, and with Mayor Coatsworth's thanks to Mr. Whitney for receiving the deputation, the proceedings ended.

COSTS OF CONTINGENTS.

Aggregated $1,175,000—Collection of United States Silver.

Ottawa, April 12.—The afternoon in the House was devoted to private bills and the House adjourned at 4 o'clock.

In answer to Mr. Worthington, the Minister of Militia stated that the entire cost for the first and second Canadian contingents to South Africa had been paid by the Dominion Government, and that it aggregated $1,175,000.

Mr. Blain was informed that American silver had been collected by the banks for the Government to the extent of $93,768.

To wash chamois leather make a lather of soap and warm water and in this squeeze the leather till the dirt is removed. The Magnetic Needle.

The needle points to the north pole wherever the compass may be. North of the line on which the compass needle balances perfectly—the line is called the magnetic equator—the needle dips to the north. South of that line the southern end of the needle dips, but the ends of the needle are not reversed.

Bronze.

Bronze, such as used for tea urns, etc., may be cleaned by washing first with soap and water, then, after drying thoroughly, apply furniture cream and polish with a soft duster. This method is not recommended for works of art, but for bronze articles of household use it answers perfectly, making them look bright and new.

POSTAL EMPLOYES STRIKE.

Vienna and Paris In Throes of Mail Delivery Disturbances

Vienna, April 14.—Seven hundred drivers of mail carts struck yesterday. As the postal authorities had not received any intimation of their intention, they were caught unawares, but after a temporary dislocation of the business, they managed to secure sufficient substitutes to take out the carts. The drivers want more pay. The letter-carriers will possibly join in the strike to-day.

PRESIDENT CASTRO RETIRES.

Venezuela's Ruler Wants to Have His Health Restored.

Caracas, April 12, via Willemstadt, April 14.—General Castro Thursday transferred the presidency of Venezuela to Vice-President Gomez. In an address which he made on that occasion, General Castro said that his retirement was due to ill health, but he did not say whether it was temporary or permanent. It is generally understood, however, that his retirement will last about three months.

As a result of General Castro's retirement, the Venezuela Cabinet has resigned.

Miss Passay—So she's twenty-five today. I guess it would surprise her if I should tell her I was the same age. Miss Peppery—Oh, no; she knows that, of course. Miss Passay—That I am twenty-five? Miss Peppery—No; that you were.

A sound discretion is not so much indicated by never making a mistake as by never repeating it.—Bovee.

Naples Is Gay Again.

Joy Comes With Good News From Scientist Mattuci.

Plucky Observatory Official Reports That Volcanic Calm Will Reign In the Course of a Very Few Days—With Naples Incredulous of Recent Tales of Terror, Awful Evidences Continue Elsewhere.

Naples, April 14.—No better evidence of the improved condition of affairs in the section affected by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius can be presented than the following telegram from Director Mattucci, sent last evening from the observatory on the mount:

"Last night and to-day the activity of Vesuvius and the agitation at the surface of the volcano sensibly diminished. Electric discharges ceased today, and the discharge was less abundant. From the presumed formation of the crater and other indications, and if the news coming to me is true of the cessation of lava at Boscotrecase, I predict with reserve that in two or three days volcanic calm will reign."

Brought Joy to People.

The publication of this assuring despatch has brought joy to the people, and last night's Good Friday services at the churches, which were attended by large congregations, took the form of fervent thanksgiving for danger past.

Conditions at Naples were so much better yesterday that the people were almost incredulous of the tales of terror told by those who had escaped from the towns, villages and country farther within the zone of devastation. The weather was fine, and the wind had shifted so that the clouds of ashes from the volcano, instead of enveloping Naples, were carried in the direction of Caserta. The apprehension of the populace gave place to a smiling confidence in which there was no reflection of the terror, which had prevailed for the past week.

Recovering the Dead.

But in other quarters there is no escaping from the awful evidences of the volcano's fury. At Boscotrecase, the exhumation of the dead is being carried on by soldiers, who, owing to the advanced state of decomposition of the corpses, are unable to work more than an hour at a time. The work is one of great cost of money, as well as of danger and arduousness to those engaged in it. Many of the bodies are merely shapeless unrecognizable masses of flesh and bones, while others are but little disfigured. As quickly as possible they are buried in quicklime to lessen as far as may be the danger of epidemic. None but those engaged in the work of recovering the corpses are permitted in the vicinity.

Mulock's Muddling.

Sir William Mulock, the late Postmaster-General, has been held up as the best Postmaster - General Canada ever had. He started out by publishing a supplement to the regular Postmaster-General's statement, in which he set forth the great loss the Government had sustained by the extension of mail transportation contracts, and showed in each case how much the country had lost in the past and how much it would save in the future by his presence of mind in cancelling the contracts. Nor has it been forgotten that in this connection Sir William Mulock printed a large number of private and confidential letters which he had discovered in the office of the department.

In the light of this publication it is interesting to examine the last report of the Postmaster-General. Perhaps Sir William Mulock's own friends would be surprised to find how many of the contracts which he then brought to a sudden termination have been replaced since that time by others at a higher rate than those which he condemned. A few illustrations might be given to show the modern tendency in mail-carrying contracts.

Barrie and Midhurst. — Sir William Mulock canceled the contract which had been let at $160, because there had been at the time the contract was made a tender at $130. He stated that the service had been let at $120, making a saving of $40, or $160 for the term. At present the contract price for this service is $180.

Crossland and Phelpson. — In the Mulock report it is alleged that the late Government had given out this contract at $275 when there was an offer at the rate of $218, making a loss of $108 for the contract term. This service is now performed for $300 a year.

Gananoque and Seeley Bay. — The old contract for this service was $145, and the special report makes out that there was a loss of $21 a year or $84 for the term, compared with the price for which the service could have been obtained. At present the service involves three trips a week in the place of two and the rate is $230, which is considerably larger in proportion than the price which cost Sir William Mulock so much distress.

It is not necessary to give further instances, but every one who has the time and inclination can discover case after case in the report, showing similar results.

The public can judge from this how the country is being humbugged. It is the same in all other departments of the Government. No wonder that the expenditure of the Dominion is going up yearly by millions, and that the people are crying out.

Unfortunately the new P. M. G. is degrees worse than Sir William. He owns that he does not know the details of his work. How can he when he is attending to his private personal work as a corporation solicitor?

SONG OF THE EASTER BELLS.

(By Clinton Scollard.)

All of the voices of earth
Cry in melodious mirth,
Lyrical river and rill,
Musical valley and hill,
Lilting and lifting on high
Up to the arch of the sky,—
Out of the gloom
Shall come bloom!
Out of the night
Shall come light!

Bells from the jubilant towers
Ring through the blue Easter hours;
Down the white dawning there floats
Rapture of radiant notes;
Through the red evening there steals
Passion of echoing peals,—
Out of the gloom
Shall come bloom!
Out of the night
Shall come light!

The opinion seems to be pretty general in this city that the Legislature will take the same action in regard to Belleville's private bill as they did in regard to similar measures put forward by other places —namely, pass the bill with the proviso that, before spending any money, the city must submit a bylaw to the ratepayers. And that is precisely what should be done. In the language of the street, the ratepayers have to "dig up" the stuff"; why should they be deprived of a voice in the matter, especially as the statute specifically gives them one?

Some bicycle manufacturers who met in Buffalo recently are reported as wondering why cycling has fallen off in this country, while it is as popular as ever in Europe. The principal reason, says the Buffalo Express, is that we are not an athletic nation, but merely a sporting one. We don't love outdoor life for itself, but pursue it in connection with the fad of the moment, which has to change from time to time in order to maintain the popular interest. But the day of the bicycle will come again. It is too good a thing to be shelved permanently.

The difference.—The Montreal Gazette says: "Among the amendments to the Ontario license law is one providing that prosecutions cannot be upset on technicalities. The Whitney Government is evidently making an attempt to give the people of Ontario a workable license law. The Liberal plan was to frame a law the phraseology of which would please the temperance element, while at the same time its application would protect the liquor seller." How true.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson, one of the most pronounced of English Free Traders, is thus satirized. It will be appreciated when it is known that Sir Wilfrid opposes the free entry of Canadian cattle into England:

"We are all for free trade,

And for it all steadfastly battle,
But beyond all deception, we must have exception
When it comes to Canadian cattle."

In the Eye division of Suffolk, England, the Liberal candidate was elected by a majority of only 197, as compared with a Liberal majority in the last contested election of 1,517. The reason for the falling off in the Liberal majority of 1,320, was due to the popularity of the young lady to whom the Conservative candidate was engaged, who entered the field and canvassed for him. The next time she deserves to win.

Some few days ago the Mail and Empire, referring to a reported sale of the Central Ontario Railway, said it was, in vulgar parlance, known as a jerk water line. The Trenton Courier did not like the expression, and thus defends the C. O.:

"It is all very well for the Mail and Empire to sneer at the C. O. Ry., but it may be pointed out that our railway is away and ahead of the many "jerk-water lines" that have helped build up Toronto as a great city. We opine that Toronto would like much to have one end of the C. O. Ry. to-day. The Central Ontario is a splendid road, is running through and serving a rich and important part of the province, and will soon form a link in a great trans-continental line."

EASTER CONCERT AT ALBERT COLLEGE.

The Easter concert at Albert College, given by pupils of the vocal and elocution departments, was a marked success. The night was fine and a large audience was present. The student body seemed very small, a great many having gone on their holidays. The two opening numbers, vocal solos by Miss Shipman and Mr. Harry Gordon, received great applause and the following number, a reading by Miss Margaret Saunders, was beautifully rendered. Two vocal solos by Mr. Erwin Gordon and Miss Munns followed, and these in turn by a series of statue poses, by Misses Saunders and Vermilyea. These were beautiful in the extreme and presented to the audience vivid pictures of the scenes chosen. Miss Thompson and Mr. Wrightmyer, in their two solos, charmed their hearers, and an instrumental number which followed was very pleasing. Mr. "Jack" Hayes sang in his usual able manner and a reading by Miss Tuite was so well received that an encore was demanded. The closing number, a solo by Mr. Jas. Dyer, made a fitting ending to a programme of exceptional merit.

MAY A. BELL MARKS.

"The Midnight Marriage" was put on at the Carman Opera House to a capacity audience last night. May A. Bell Marks was very clever in the leading role. The support was up to the usual standard and the vaudeville and pictures up to the minute. To-night "The Duke's Daughter."

"SWEET CLOVER."

The most important dramatic offering at the Carman in the near future will be the beautiful production of "Sweet Clover," a comedy-drama by Pauline Phelps and Marion Short, which was one of the greatest financial and artistic successes of last season, and is said to be a model play, inasmuch as it consists of four acts of most dramatic material, relieved by abundant humor. Its story is told without the commission of a crime, yet is as thrilling at times as anything Sardou has given the stage, and merits from twenty to thirty certain calls at each performance. "Sweet Clover" will be at the Carman on Wednesday, April 18.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women
Make Healthy Women.

Upon being taken into the stomach, the various ingredients are absorbed by the blood, and then find their way to every organ and tissue.

Some reach the uterine system. These allay inflammation, stop all drains on the system and make women regular.

Some strengthen the stomach. They help digestion and increase the appetite.

Others act on the bowels. They cure constipation.

Other ingredients stimulate the liver and kidneys in carrying off impurities from the system.

Others reach the nerves. These tone up the nervous system and supply vital energy, thereby curing the nervousness, irritability, and melancholy, to which so many women are subject.

The full effect of all the medicaments in the tablets is to arouse the entire female system to renewed life and vigor.

Improvement is noticed the first week.

CRAIGMOUNT AND ITS CORUNDUM.

CORRESPONDENT GIVES A GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF A HUSTLING NORTHERN VILLAGE AND ITS CHIEF INDUSTRY.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

On the southern slope of a beetling crag, some 700 feet high, composed of red and grey granite, is situated the mining town of Craigmount. Craigmount has 350 operatives, with an annual pay roll of $150,000. Its plant cost a quarter of a million, and its yearly output of corundum exceeds another quarter of a million dollars. This Craigmount does not lie in far-off Arizona, but near the northeast corner of our County of Hastings. A brief sketch, even if imperfect, may therefore be of interest to your readers. The commander of this army of industry is Mr. Haultain, a gentleman of untiring energy and of great executive ability. He is a practical miner, and is more often found striding in his red-top boots over the rocks and through the slush of the works than daintily seated in his office. Among his able lieutenants is Mr. Kelly, who superintends the mining and personally selects the ore. This requires knowledge and good judgment. A scientific assayist on the premises tests specimens from each part of the works, and also analyses the tailings, as the refuse from the mill is termed, to ascertain how thoroughly the corundum is extracted. Hydrofluoric acid dissolves out of the specimens everything except the corundum, and no ore is mined unless it contains 12 per cent. of this abrasive. The ore is brought from the mine to the crushers in lumps the size of a pail. The first crusher breaks the granite rock as easily as you would a piece of cheese, into lumps the size of apples. Carriers convey it to the second and third crushers, and it comes out from the size of small shot to that of dust. Water is the next agent employed. A lake has been tapped and great pumps are at work conveying a small river to the top of a large building 200 feet high. Dozens upon dozens of large tables, each larger than the biggest barn door, are so tilted that they slant slightly sideways, and also endways to the right. The tables are being constantly shaken by machinery operated by one of the engines, a 250 horse-power. The crushed ore and a steam of water are ceaselessly trickling down each of these tables. The ore is composed of iron, corundum, feldspar and hornblende, and the water forms them into separate streaks upon the tables, according to their respective gravities. The iron, being the heaviest, travels along in a black streak diagonally to the right end of each table. The corundum, the next heaviest, forms a grey streak just below the iron, and also passes over the right ends of the tables, along with the iron, into troughs. The pink feldspar and the black scales of hornblende, being lighter than either the iron or corundum, flow straight down the side of the tables and are thrown away. There is now a mixture of iron and corundum to separate. This is done by passing the mixture along a broad belt downwards around a wide iron wheel, which is heavily charged with electricity, thus causing it to become a powerful magnet. The corundum not being attracted by this magnetized wheel, falls off the web as it passes around the wheel and is caught in a waiting trough; but the iron being attracted, travels along on the web as far as it is in contact with the wheel, thus being carried beyond the corundum. The iron thus separated is being stored for further treatment and utilization. The pure corundum is next crushed and ground between numerous series of twin chilled steel rollers. It is then run through numerous screens and is finally sieved through fine silk webbing. The finished corundum is packed, according to its grades, which vary from two grades finer than flour to grains the size of bird shot. Wherever steel, iron, brass, stone or hard woods are required to be ground or polished, corundum is used. Its use is thus world-wide, and the name of the Canada Corundum Company, with "Made in Canada" stamped on each package, is known throughout Europe and America as being unexcelled for quality.

SPOTLESS SERVICE.

Service over the Lake Shore Railway may well be called spotless service. Throughout this entire system there is a noteworthy lack of dust and dirt. Sparkling linen and white-clad waiters greet the traveller in the dining cars, and this "spick and span" appearance extends throughout the train. One steps down at a journey's end over the Lake Shore as clean as when he boarded the train. Cleanliness is but one feature that has made The Lake Shore the most popular road in America. Others are its luxurious coaches, absolute safety, highest speed and punctuality. Tell the agent to have your ticket read "Via Buffalo and The Lake Shore Railway," and write for information concerning rates and routes to J. W. Daly, Chief A.G.P.A., Buffalo, N.Y.; A. J. Smith, G.P.A., Cleveland, Ohio, or W. J. Lynch, Pass'gr Traffic Mgr., Chicago, Ill.

THE PEOPLE ALL

In Chorus Cried, Give Us Newbro's Herpicide.

This word of late has been in everyone's mouth, and many are wondering what the word signifies, though no one has yet been found, who will deny that NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE does the work. Well, for the information of thousands of people who like to know all about a good thing, we would say that HERPICIDE means, a destroyer or killer of "Herpes." Now "Herpes" is the family name of a disease caused by various vegetable parasites. A similar microbe causes dandruff, itching scalp, and falling hair; this is the microbe that NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE promptly destroys; after which the hair grows. Sold by leading druggists. Send 10c in stamps for sample to The Herpicide Co., Detroit, Mich. J. S. McKeown, special agent.

CZAR PAUL'S WIG

An Officer Tweaked It and Won a Bet and Promotion.

Paul, the eccentric czar of Russia assassinated in 1801, was very particular as to his dress and considered trifling matters as of supreme importance. This peculiarity was once taken advantage of by an officer of the guards, Major Vaksel, to win a bet. The major, the wildest joker in the army, wagered several hundred rubles that he would tweak the tail of the emperor's wig on parade.

The very next day the emperor happened to be present at an early parade and, as destiny ruled it, took a position for a moment immediately in front of the daring major. Breathless with excitement and terror, Vaksel's companions beheld that rash officer's right hand steal slowly from his side, rise to the level of the czar's neck and give the wig's hanging tail a most decided tweak.

In an instant the emperor's face, pale with fury, was turned upon Vaksel's countenance, which, however, only reflected an expression of childlike innocence, mingled with the most deferential astonishment.

"Who dared to do that?" asked the enraged czar, his eyes giving flashing evidence that his most dangerous mood was upon him.

"I did, your majesty," said Vaksel, who, however his heart may have fluttered, managed to preserve outwardly an unruffled calm, together with an expression of innocent surprise. "It was crooked, your majesty," he added, in a confidential undertone. "I straightened it for fear the younger officers should see."

Paul's countenance cleared at once. He stared fixedly, however, at Vaksel's innocent looking face for some seconds. Vaksel admitted afterward that this was the trying moment, and he had said to himself, "If I waver I'm lost!" Then the czar spoke, and spoke so that all might hear.

"I thank you, colonel," he said.

If ever a step in rank was gained by the purest effrontery it was so acquired on this occasion, and Vaksel left the field, not only promoted to a coveted position in the guards, but richer by many hundred rubles as the result of his wager.

THE SACRED LOTUS.

There Are Pretty Legends of Song and Story About Its Fruit.

Concerning the rich fruit of the lotus, which grew luxuriantly in the Nile, many charming legends have been told. It was believed that it was so delightful that those who ate of it would never leave the spot where it grew, but for it would abandon home and friends to spend their lives in a dream of serene delight. Homer, in the "Odyssey," mentions the lotus eaters who lived on the northern coast of Africa and recounts their attempts to detain the followers of Ulysses by giving them the fruits of the lotus to eat, so that they should never wish to leave the spot where it grew.

The same poetical idea is known to the Arabs, who call it the "fruit of destiny," which is to be eaten in paradise, and it is on this foundation that Tennyson built his charming poem of the "Lotus Eaters." This mythical lotus has been identified by several botanists with that indigenous to Tunis, which is a thorny shrub, with berries of the size of an olive.

Mungo Park found a species of lotus in Central America bearing berries of a delicious taste, which, on being dried and pounded, made very wholesome and pleasant bread. The lotus fruit found in Tunis has a stimulating, almost intoxicating effect, and it is therefore probable that this plant furnished the foundation of the ancient legends.

"The Adventurers," one of the most fascinating serial stories ever published in The Intelligencer, will begin shortly. Watch for it.

The sacred lotus of the Egyptians was a fine aquatic plant, dedicated to Osiris and Isis and regarded in Egyptian delineations as signifying the creation of the world. Distinct from this lotus was that known as the blue lotus of the Nile, also a sacred plant. Both these species of lotus occur frequently as religious symbols and decorations in the temples.

The Name of the Vatican.

The Mons Vaticanus is sometimes said to have received its name from vaticinium, an oracle or prophecy, for tradition says that Numa chose the Vatican hill as a sacred place from which to declare to the people the messages he received from the gods. It is not, however, one of the seven hills on which ancient Rome was built, but forms a part of the ridge beginning with the Janiculus and ending with Monte Mario, all of which was outside the ancient limits of the city. In our day the name is applied only to the immense pontifical palace adjacent to and connected with the basilica of St. Peter's.
